In a previous report on radioactive waste, we decided that we should be extremely chary of the long-established principle of disposing of pollutants by "disperse and dilute". Given the way in which today's motion appears on the Order Paper, such dispersal is a matter for discussion. We found that the Irish sea has suffered quite a lot from discharges from Sellafield. Although British Nuclear Fuels plc has said today that the quantities of ruthenium and plutonium discharged are minute, they are nevertheless toxic metals, which do not disperse and dilute. Those metals tend to conglomerate and can find their way back to the human environment via the food chain. Similar difficulties are presented by the disposal of heavy metals, which are part of the sludge disposed of at sea.

At present, the short sewage pipes out to sea are leading to unacceptable pollution of our beaches. Even if those pipes were extended, however, and carried the sludge and raw sewage further out to sea, problems would remain. One cannot accept that the disperse and dilute method, which has been historically acceptable, is now so readily acceptable, given the growing knowledge of the consequences of putting certain matters into even the vast volumes of the ocean.

I wonder whether my right hon. Friend is satisfied that sea water kills viruses? There has been evidence that the polio virus can survive for some time in the sea. Therefore, there is a risk in sending out untreated sewage, even through long pipes, into the sea. We should consider this matter carefully and decide whether all sewage should be pre-treated before any discharge takes place.

I have detained the House longer than I had intended, but I have given way several times to allow other speeches to be made during the course of my own.

Progress has been made. The Government have responded positively to the main thrust of our report. We are gratified that, perhaps, the work that we undertook for several months has had some impact upon discussions of several serious matters that are causing growing public concern.

10.15 am

Mr. Peter Hardy (Wentworth): I shall endeavour to be relatively concise; I do not wish to take up as much time as the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi). I am, however, in no way critical of the length of the hon. Gentleman's speech. He gave way on numerous occasions and it is right that, as Chairman of the Select Committee on the Environment, he should make a substantial contribution. I shall make a shorter speech, but I hope that it will not lack pungency.

Ministers must enjoy the long recess. The press are not unduly critical of the Government, the House is not sitting, and, therefore, sometimes quite preposterous claims can be made. During the summer recess, many Labour Members and many people concerned about the environment were amazed and bewildered by the apparent greening of the Conservative party. I found it almost hilarious. When the Prime Minister announced her attachment to and affection for the hedgerows I was reminded that the Government have repeatedly blocked my own and other attempts to protect a skeleton of important hedgerows. I am delighted that the Prime Minister is now convinced that the hedgerow deserves our affectionate regard. I trust that when a Hedgerow Bill is presented in the next Session the Government will not block it yet again.

I have also been reminded of the rather dishonest approach that some Ministers have adopted to the environment. We sought to close a loophole in the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. The Government blocked my Bill to close that loophole, but promised to introduce legislation. They did not. My hon. Friend the Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) was fortunate enough to be drawn in the ballot and his Bill contained six relatively modest proposals. The Government took out four of them, virtually cauterised the fifth and left only the part closing the section 28 loophole. I remember the Standing Committee on that Bill when the Government Whips allowed varous individual Conservative Back Benchers to abstain once in turn to demonstrate to conservationists that they had a residual conscience.

The House of Lords then reintroduced four of the original proposals to the Bill. The Government reluctantly accepted that my hon. Friend's Bill could go through. The day after that, the Department of the Environment issued a press statement proclaiming its virtues, and said that it was a Government Bill. Even though the Department was corrected then, similar claims have been made since. I walked out of one function in London when a Minister of the Crown claimed that my hon. Friend's Bill was a Government measure. I do not believe that he was deliberately lying; I believe that he did not know the truth. It is rather sad that a lot of people present applauded when they knew that was not an accurate statement.

In recent weeks, Government statements have been full of inaccuracies. I was grateful that the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green allowed me to intervene to suggest that water authorities may be reluctant to prosecute because such prosecution could involve waste of public money and could be utterly counter-productive, given that the fines inflicted are a fleabite in comparison to the profits that can be made from pollution. That problem has been with us for years, but the Government have done nothing about it.

I wish to refer to the campaign that some of us, led by the Yorkshire Post and its then reporter, Geoffrey Lean, waged in South Yorkshire in the early 1970s. You may remember that campaign, Mr. Deputy Speaker. It began in the early 1970s because the rivers of South Yorkshire were obscene, disgusting and foul sewers. As a result of the attention that we drew to the matter, the water authority pledged to me that the rivers of South Yorkshire would be brought up to class 2 recreational standard by the middle of the 1980s.

I raised the matter again last year. This time I was assured that the rivers of South Yorkshire would be brought to class 2 recreational standard by the year 2000. It seemed to me last year that we were as far from approaching decency for our rivers as we were in 1971, when I was told that the rivers would have approached decency by the mid-1980s—that is, two or three years ago.

The hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green talked about the backlog of costs. As a result of the Government's approach to conservation, I have developed a rather suspicious mind. I believe, for example, that there is at least a possibility that the Government are allowing arrears of need to mount up, so that the water industry can be sold off more cheaply than it ought to be. My cynicism is compounded by the fact that the French, almost as a matter of national strategy, are queuing up to buy private water undertakings and are clearly preparing to launch themselves into the privatisation market, just as the Japanese are to be allowed to buy an excessive stake in the British steel industry under plans that are about to proceed.

Rivers in south Yorkshire remain grim. My hon. Friend the Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) drew my attention to a broadcast—like many hon. Members, I have little opportunity to watch television—about some people who took a boat down the River Don. It also looked at the Rother and the Dearne and found that Aldworke sewage works was often exceeding the level of effluent that was supposed to be discharged. I understand that that problem will be resolved, but over the past three years I have drawn Yorkshire Water's attention to the pollution of Roundwood brook, which feeds into the river nearby, on at least 14 occasions, yet there has not been a single prosecution.

Will the Secretary of State confirm that, on almost 1,000 occasions last year water authorities were given consent to make significant and serious discharges into their own rivers? Perhaps it is because they themselves are polluters that they are hesitant about prosecuting others who pollute.

[Mr. Peter Hardy]

One case in Yorkshire last year caused me enormous concern. The operators of an opencast site were allowed to dig a little channel so that effluent from the site could be discharged straight into the river. The discharge was many times higher above toxicity levels than it ought to have been, but the fine for that highly profitable exercise was £200.

Another firm that enormously exceeded toxicity levels when it deposited chlorine into a south Yorkshire river was fined £300, despite the fact that the poisoning of that river was 50 times over permitted levels. There are examples of south Yorkshire rivers having received poison at 76 times the level for which constant was given, yet no prosecutions followed.

Before 1971, there was far less concern about the poisoning of rural rivers. We were accustomed, as part of the Victorian heritage to which the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green referred, to the sewer quality of rivers in industrial areas. By the early 1970s, some of us had become restive about that. However, since then we have seen an enormous increase in agricultural pollution, to which the hon. Gentleman referred.

A matter that I raised some time ago is that in the Yorkshire Water area—I do not believe that Yorkshire is any worse in this respect than other authorities—the number of incidents of agricultural poisoning of rivers increased by several hundred last year. However, the number of relevant prosecutions fell from 18 to 12. Perhaps the water authorities are reluctant to prosecute because they are frustrated by the low fines that are inflicted. It is unsatisfactory that, although hundreds of offences are committeed, the number of prosecutions has declined dramatically.

What does the Secretary of State think about that, given his frequently uttered and much vaunted policy that the polluter should pay?. The polluter is certainly not paying—the polluter is making profit. Meanwhile, there is anger and frustration about the neglect of need, just as there is astonishment at the Government's commitment to greening.

I know that efforts have been made. In south Yorkshire's streams and rivers, there are now sticklebacks and minnows where, a few years ago, there was no life at all, but the stretches that contain a minimum of life are a small proportion of the total. As you will recall, Mr. Deputy Speaker, last year a salmon was found in the area of Doncaster metropolitan authority. I believe that it was approaching the constituency that you represent. That salmon received considerable attention. I must point out that there may be manic-depressive fish, just as there are manic-depressive humans, because it is not yet possible for the river Don, the river Rother or the river Dearne to sustain salmon, trout or grayling. It may be many years before those rivers can accommodate them, but the sooner they contain any fish at all, the more delighted I shall be.

My area faces enormous economic need as a result of rapid economic change. We shall not secure the economic advance we need unless our environment is improved. It will not be improved—despite all the protestations of greening that Ministers have uttered in the past few weeks—unless resources are provided to allow the environment to improve, so giving us the chance of economic health. The environment and the economy are linked. If we have a sordid, ugly and poisoned environment, economic health is inevitably affected. I do not believe that either the economic or the environmental health of our islands is adequately served.

My other reason for speaking in the debate is that I am chairman of the Council of Europe Environment Committee. There has been a growing interest in these matters in Europe. The hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green referred to the Sandoz plant. The Council of Europe appointed me as Rapporteur on the incident. The only welcome aspect of the incident was that it led to a growing awareness of the scale of horror that can follow such poisonous discharges. Europe was awoken to reality when, a week after the Sandoz discharge into the Rhine by the city of Basel, the Dutch had to stop taking drinking water out of the Rhine.

Europe is fortunate because, now that it is alert to the realities, if poison enters one country because of a discharge into a river by a neighbouring country, there is increased national awareness and a greater emphasis on the need for action. We have seen the effect of pollution of the River Rhine on the Nethelands and the effect of the Sandoz discharge on the entire enormous length of that river. That led to a call in the report that I presented for adequate commitment by each member state to international conventions.

Will the Government make it clear that the United Kingdom will fully subscribe to international conventions on the health of water courses——

Mr. Allan Roberts: For the first time ever.

Mr. Hardy: As the Government have become green, they must be consistent; if they are not willing to be consistent, I hope that, in the next long recess, Ministers will not spend their time proclaiming that they are greening.

The Council of Europe Environment Committee decided to undertake a sea-by-sea study of European seas. We have just completed our work on the North sea and are waiting for the Council of Ministers to express an opinion on it. An Irish colleague asked that the second sea that we should consider should be the Irish sea. I am waiting for that colleague to attend the next meeting of the committee so that we can consider the approach to be adopted. In the light of the comments made by the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green, I am a little worried about the embarrassment that will face Britain as a result of any detailed work on that part of our oceans.

I do not make these points to criticise the Government in the European context but because there is an obvious awareness that, if the Government are green, it is because they have perceived that there is now greater and continuing public interest in this subject. If that is true, it deserves a cautious welcome. We are entitled to a mature and proper response to questions such as these from a green Government.

The first sentence of Walter Scott's famous book "Ivanhoe" referred to

"that pleasant district of merry England which is watered by the river Don".

When that was written, that area was a pleasant part of merry England. It was green and fertile and the rivers were full of salmon, grayling and trout. Until that part of merry England is made green and pleasant again, there will be no excuse for complacency on Benches which may be green in colour but which are occupied by people who are only green by pretence.

10.33 am

Mr. Cranley Onslow (Woking): Perhaps I may be permitted to comment on the more manic-depressive elements in the speech by the hon. Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy). If the hon. Gentleman goes back to the works of Izaac Walton he will find that much of his fishing was done in the river Wandle; the hon. Gentleman would have a job finding that river if he looked for it today. He is not being entirely fair to himself, the House or past Governments by concentrating his attack on how green or otherwise this Government are. There have been some pretty ungreen Governments in the past, and some of them were Socialist.

In his capacity as a Council of Europe Rapporteur, the hon. Member for Wentworth did not attempt to deny the proposition of my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi), that the record of European countries in river and water pollution is a great deal worse than that of this country. The Rhine is a standing disgrace, and I sometimes wish the hon. Member for Bootle (Mr. Roberts) would go and jump in it——

Mr. Allan Roberts: Will the right hon. Gentleman give way? That is personal abuse.

Mr. Onslow: I shall not give way. I was only expressing a personal wish; if the hon. Gentleman will not gratify it, I can only regret it. I shall not refer to him any more, as I do not suppose the House would like me to.

I welcome the opportunity to debate this subject. Whereas the hon. Member for Wentworth was pessimistic, I am optimistic. Today's debate, and those which will doubtless follow on the water privatisation legislation in the new Session, mark a real turning point in the fight against river pollution. Minds are being concentrated, and that is no bad thing. The matter has now been studied with considerable care and the Bill will give us an opportunity to make up for years of under-funding during which, as a result, the chance to improve river quality has not been grasped as fully as it should have been. Public limited companies will not want to take on the liability that polluted rivers will present them with.

The machinery for pollution control is being greatly improved. The creation of the National Rivers Authority and its forerunner the National Rivers Advisory Council is extremely important. Lord Crickhowell's comments have given a great deal of encouragement to those of us who take an interest in these matters, especially his assurance that the plcs will not be given a privileged position with the NRA as abstractors or dischargers. That represents a considerable advance on the way in which the water authorities have been allowed to carry on, and is a major change for the good.

It is important, as my right hon. Friend knows, that the public should be reassured about the process upon which we have embarked. So should those who take a special interest in these matters, including the National Anglers Council, which represents all fishery bodies, some of which I belong to, and the Anglers Co-operative Association, on whose council I have sat for a number of years. For 40 years, the association has led the fight against the pollution of our rivers. If the hon. Member for Wentworth had been able to establish that damage had been done to fisheries in his constituency, the association might have been able to bring prosecutions in the courts for him in the same way as it has done in many other parts of the country for a long time. The ACA has a splendid record, to which Opposition Members have significantly contributed. I had the pleasure of persuading the husband of the hon. Member for Newcastle-under-Lyme (Mrs. Golding) to join the association council of which the noble Lord Mason of Barnsley is now chairman. There is no politics in the fight for anglers' rights; it does not and should not divide the House.

The ACA and NAC were concerned about an article that appeared in The Independent on 7 October, which was taken by some as suggesting that water quality and discharge control standards would be replaced in order to make privatisation easier. The NAC issued a press statement about that in which it affirmed its opposition to any proposals that effluent standards be relaxed to make the plcs more attractive on flotation.

I took this up with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I am glad to be able to read out a letter that he sent me a couple of days ago, which I hope deals with the subject comprehensively and satisfactorily:

> "As you know, some 20 per cent. of sewage treatment works at present breach conditions attached to their consents for the discharge of effluent into rivers and estuaries. As we told the Environment Committee earlier this year we consider it essential that this standard of performance should be improved. To bring these works up to the proper standard it is therefore planned to spend over £700 million in the next 4 years. This is one of a number of measures which we propose to take, either in the Water Bill itself or in conjunction with it, to ensure that water privatisation and the establishment of the National Rivers Authority lead to a clear and enduring improvement in the condition of the water environment."

Later in his letter, my right hon. Friend said:

> "As to the consequential arrangements, I emphasise two points. First, we do not intend to relax consents on a general or long-term basis: any variations will be temporary, will take account of the need to protect the receiving water, and will be limited to the period required to carry through the necessary improvement programmes. Second, and contrary to other press reports, we do not propose to restrict prosecution rights in respect of these or other effluent discharges. I know that the Anglers' Co-operative Association attaches importance to their right to mount prosecutions where fisheries are being damaged by pollution and we believe that right should continue."

I hope that the House will be encouraged by that clear statement of the position, and that in future the press will get it right.

I shall now deal with the importance of maintaining standards and of using the courts, if need be, to enforce them and to penalise those who are guilty of pollution. I shall illustrate what I mean by quoting from a case that was recently brought to the notice of the ACA by the City of London Piscatorial Society. The matter that it deals with is also of great concern to the local residents association which has sent me some briefing about it. It is about a case not in my constituency but in the constituency of Wokingham, with which my own is sometimes confused.

I can best summarise the matter by quoting from a letter sent by my hon. Friend the Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood) to the chairman of the Thames water authority, of which, my hon. Friend kindly sent me a copy. The letter deals with what is probably one of the worst cases in the Thames area, but there is more than one instance of sewage treatment works in the Thames area not meeting the proper standards. My hon. Friend's letter deals with the case in Wargrave and says:

"I have been shown photographs indicating that discharges into the River Loddon contain an unacceptable amount of solid matter. I believe that one part of the recent regatta involved children and had to be cancelled because of the dirtiness of the discharges and I see from figures of readings taken over recent years that there has been a general tendency for the amount of suspended solids and ammoniacal nitrogen in the discharges to rise. Looking at the evidence it would seem that you must be in difficulties meeting the necessary legal consents, even on the laxer standards now set to control effluent discharges."

In his letter, my hon. Friend also points to the noise and smell nuisance created by sludge lorries going through the village and asks that action be taken to deal with all those matters. I am glad to say that my hon. Friend has now been able to send me a copy of the response he has had from Mr. Roy Watts, the chairman of the authority, and it seems clear from it that the Thames water authority is at last taking action to deal with these matters. I hope that it will be effective action.

I do not know whether the residents association and the ACA will still feel entitled to press their case on behalf of those concerned against the Thames water authority in the courts. If that happens it will not be the first time that we have taken such action. Not long ago we brought eight prosecutions against the Thames Water authority for breach of its own discharge consents. The authority pleaded guilty on all counts and was fined £1,000 on each. The same thing happened in the case of the Anglian Water authority where further prosecutions resulted in a similar finding.

It is not really satisfactory to take a water authority to court, have it plead guilty and see it fined. We need action to deal with the situation. I am not advocating massive litigation to deal with the problem; what I want is a mass of money. That would satisfy the need and the justified requests of everyone who wants to see water quality improved.

Mr. Simon Hughes (Southwark and Bermondsey) rose——

Mr. Onslow: Perhaps the hon. Gentleman will forgive me if I do not give way; I am trying not to take too long.

We are told that money will be forthcoming. If, in the meantime, there is a temporary moratorium on law suits or if it is a possible defence in court to say that action is in hand to deal with the matter, these points can be pressed under the water privatisation Bill. However, we shall want to set clear and concise conditions, which will need to be met and be seen to be met. There can be no question of stretching deadlines or moving completion dates. If anything, we want to see things done even sooner. I am sure that much of the debate on the Bill will focus on that point.

The problem in Wargrave arises from a massive housing development. An enormous housing estate was built on the former airfield at Woodley just outside Reading, and quite clearly the capacity of the sewage treatment works was inadequate from the start. The water authority had to try to deal with sewage for which it simply did not have the plant. That may be typical of the situation on other massive housing developments, and I ask my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to address himself to the possibility that a condition of a successful planning application should be that adequate sewage capacity will be available before the houses are occupied. He should say that, unless that can be shown, it may be necessary to refuse the planning application. It is entirely unreasonable, in this as in other contexts, to build houses without the infrastructure that the people who live in them have every right to expect.

Sir Hugh Rossi: Under section 52, local planning authorities have power to reach agreement with developers under which a contribution could be made, or new sewerage works provided—if the development is extensive enough—in return for planning permission.

Mr. Onslow: I am grateful to my hon. Friend and hope that the power he mentioned will be more widely used by the plcs than it appears to have been by the water authorities. Such powers will have to be used if the plcs wish to protect themselves from prosecution by the National Rivers Authority, the pollution inspectorate and the interested parties who may bring civil actions. Here again there is an opportunity to tighten up the regulations and to bring the situation back under control. I hope that my right hon. Friend will be able to tell us something about that.

In introducing his report, my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green told the House that his Committee's deliberations were cut short by the 1987 election. I know that that is correct, because among the witnesses who were disappointed were the NAC and the ACA who had formed up to come in and give oral evidence that would have enabled the Committee to cover a little more ground.

I listened to what hon. Members said about the pollution caused by agriculture. It is unforgivable that farming should cause so much pollution. The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food should take further steps to make farmers understand what serious pollution they can create. It is difficult to understand why there are not more prosecutions, and even more difficult to understand why the penalties in some cases seem so small. No doubt all those mysteries are clear to the Minister.

One factor about river pollution seems to have been missed by the Committee—the vital importance of river flow, the amount of water that flows naturally down a water course. That has a significant effect upon the extent to which pollution is diluted by clear water. If we discharge effluent into low water, it is bound to cause more pollution than if we discharge it into high water. The proportion of clean and dirty water is critical in that context. We need further study of the effects of such abstraction, particularly when it is used for irrigation. We need further study of the impact of land drainage works, which bring into cultivation land which is often surplus to requirements nowadays. That has had the effect of turning rivers into gutters down which storm water runs and which are left more or less as a trickle when the rain has stopped.

There is scope for further attention to be paid to the effects of forestry. Forestry often incorporates extensive drainage and carries the risks of acidification with which we are familiar. The opportunities offered by the change in agricultural practice for replanting low ground, instead of concentrating plantations on high ground and around the headwaters of rivers, is an important factor and I hope that that will be considered in the future.

Finally, the extent to which fish farms are a primary cause of river pollution cannot continue to be ignored. I know at least one water authority which is likely to find itself prosecuted if it does not enforce much stricter standards on a large fish farm that has been operating for some years on a river in its area. Everyone who fishes below that fish farm believes that it has been polluting the river significantly. However, I do not want to say which water authority it is because it is important to keep them all on their toes and I hope that this debate will have served that purpose.

Mrs. Llin Golding (Newcastle-under-Lyme): As the right hon. Member for Woking (Mr. Onslow) will know, I am the match secretary for the Lords and Commons Fly Fishing Club and, as such, I will make no apologies to the House for confining my remarks to the interests of fishermen and fisherwomen. I also wish to confine my remarks to the views of the Anglers Co-operative Association, which has done so much work voicing concern about the state of our rivers and estuaries. There will be some dissenting voices from those views, but I am given to understand that they are the views of the majority of members.

First, let me put on record the appreciation for the work of the Anglers Co-operative Association and especially for the work of Allen Edwards, its dedicated secretary. This year, as some hon. Members will know, the ACA celebrates its 40th birthday. It was founded to fight those people who pollute our rivers and destroy our fish. As statutory law was ineffective, the ACA resorted to the common law to secure compensation for those whose fisheries had been destroyed because of the greed or wilful neglect of others. Its record in the courts has been superb. It has won hundreds of cases and lost only one and has gone on to take out successful statutory prosecutions in magistrates courts against water authority polluters.

For 40 years, the ACA has campaigned for cleaner rivers, not only on behalf of the 3 million to 4 million anglers and their clubs, but on behalf of the environment as a whole. It is no secret that, for most of that time, the ACA has felt very lonely indeed. Many organisations have expressed concern about the environment, but none have fought so tenaciously in the courts to bring about improvements. That is why it was so pleased about the decision of the Select Committee on the Environment to conduct an inquiry into the pollution of our rivers and estuaries. It was even more pleased to find that the Select Committee was reinforcing so strongly the ACA's message and giving it far wider publicity and strength than it had been able to achieve itself.

The Select Committee shared the ACA's concern that there has been a deterioration in our rivers over the past three years. It concluded that the Department of the Environment should draw up a national strategy to maintain and improve water quality with a clear timetable for its execution. The ACA agrees with the Select Committee's recognition that water authorities could not be excused for the pollution that they cause. It is certain that improvement in sewage work effluent is necessary, as I am sure many hon. Members will agree today.

One great problem facing the ACA has been that the bodies with the power to act against pollution—the water authorities—have themselves been the greatest polluters. The Select Committee was right to insist that there should be stricter controls. It is a disgrace that the public bodies reponsible for the control of pollution have been the greatest polluters, running totally inefficient sewage disposal plants. In 1987, 867, or 20·5 per cent., of the 4,226 works with numerical consents breached their discharge consent conditions. That is an absolute disgrace. Apparently, they have also turned a blind eye to pollution by agriculture and industry, and I am told that the prosecutions of farmers and fish farmers have been negligible. Overall, in 1985-86, only 254 prosecutions followed 19,892 incidents of pollution. That, too, is disgraceful.

The Anglers Co-operative Association was delighted to see that the Select Committee had concluded that the water authorities should seek to enforce the law and prosecute more frequently, and that magistrates reconsidered the fines and costs awarded. In turn, it was recommended that a Department of the Environment inspectorate should have the duty to prosecute those water authorities that pollute water courses.

The ACA welcomes the comments of the Select Committee on the question of agricultural and industrial pollution. The Government have gone some way to accepting the Committee's report. They agree that there should be a national water quality programme. They have conceded that the performance of water authorities requires urgent improvement and that the present position is unacceptable. They are looking to the water authorities to remedy that within three years. They also intend that the new rivers authority should be responsible for the control of water pollution.

On the face of it, the ACA should be well satisfied with what has been achieved, but, as the right hon. Member for Woking will know, it is a little edgy about it. It fears that, as it was let down badly by Governments failing to implement the Control of Pollution Act 1974 and is inclined to believe that that could happen yet again. It took 11 years for Governments to implement those provisions providing for public registers and the right to allow prosecutions on that basis.

Mr. Simon Hughes: Will the hon. Lady confirm that some parts of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 have still not been implemented? The fact that 14 years have passed without the implementation of those provisions, which I intend to mention in my speech, shows that Governments have not been resolute in practice, although the possibility of doing a great deal of good has existed for so long.

Mrs. Golding: I take the hon. Gentleman's point. The environment is a concern, not only for the Government, but for us all. It is not a political football.

Mr. Spearing: Would my hon. Friend care to modify what she has just said? Surely the proposals for the privatisation of water disposal, as distinct from supply, which the Government will anounce in the Queen's Speech in a few weeks' time, show that they consider the environment to be such a political football. They are not green at all.

Mrs. Golding: I am sure that the House hopes that the Government have learnt a lesson as a result of long delays.

[Mrs. Golding]

I am certain that the Government will listen to the views that are expressed during this debate by Members on both sides of the House in their concern for the environment.

The association is pleased that the public registers will continue. It believes, however, that it would be far better if the registers were kept in a uniform manner. I hope that the Secretary of State will consider that and respond to the issue when he replies. The association's worries centre mainly on the ability and willingness to prosecute in cases of breach of consent conditions. It has been disturbed by the existence of the so-called 95 per cent. rule, which means that water authorities are immune from prosecution if they behave themselves for 95 per cent. of the time in a period of 12 months. The association tells me that this rule is nonsense and that substantial damage can be caused by such tolerance. It would like the Minister to say today that the new water companies will be allowed no such loophole.

The association is concerned also about the arrangements that will apply to the new companies. Rumours are circulating that those buying will be guaranteed immunity from prosecution. Will the Minister scotch these rumours once and for all by telling us categorically that no open-ended immunity can or will be granted? The Minister must address himself to the prevalent fear that the Government will allow lower standards of consent for discharge from sewerage plants to assist privatisation. The association would like to know what the Government intend in this area. Will they allow a drop in standards to help the sell-off?

The association is adamant that none of our rivers should be allowed to suffer from privatisation. It believes that to protect both our rivers and estuaries we need a rigorous regime of prosecution where pollution occurs, as well as of high standards. The association would want the National Rivers Authority to prosecute whenever there was no excuse for pollution. It has discovered that water authorities dislike the publicity that attends a prosecution, and therefore avoid bringing them. The association believes that the Government's attitude to prosecution is too weak and wishy-washy. It is no good if polluters know that they can get away with being told off if they apologise or promise to do better. For the polluter, it is so much cheaper to be told off than to take active steps to avoid any embarrassing and possibly expensive prosecution.

The association wants the National Rivers Authority to be active in bringing prosecutions. At the same time, it wants it to maintain its right to initiate private prosecutions, as it is now doing. It will not be quite as serious then if the NRA turns out to be as half-hearted in prosecuting polluters as the Department of the Environment and the water authorities have been.

The association is determined that we change the present position, in which, apparently, the Government have acquiesced, whereby, far from the polluter paying, it often, regretfully, pays to pollute.

11.4 am

Mr. John Ward (Poole): As I represent a constituency overlooking Poole harbour, it would be surprising if I were not to intervene in the debate.

Poole has the second largest natural harbour in the world. The constituency sits on the edge of the largest onshore oilfield in the United Kingdom. The harbour is surrounded by conservation areas bird sanctuaries, sites of special scientific interest and the like. The beaches in the area are well up to EEC standards. Perhaps more importantly, there is a thriving fishing industry in the harbour. The constituency is on the migratory route for salmon and trout. It is a designated area under the EEC shelfish directive, and besides the usual lobster, crab, oysters and mussels, which are well-known exports, we keep to ourselves the greatest delicacy of all, Poole cockles. These are four times the size of the cockles in the other insignificant areas of the shell fishing industry. I am told that they have much to do with the long life of some of my constituents.

There is much to preserve and even the smallest concentration of toxic substances could ruin a successful area. The Poole harbour commisioners and Wessex Water, which have prime responsibility, do an excellent job in preserving the quality of the water. However, I still see the need for vigilance in the years to come.

I have referred to the largest onshore oilfield in the United Kingdom. To date, BP has been a model of how oil companies should behave in a sensitive area of their activities. Its recently retired development manager, Mr. Michael O'Sullivan, has done a marvellous job throughout the time that he has been in the area. He has co-operated with ecologists, environmentalists and the local authority. He has done much to make BP the acceptable face of the oil industry. Drilling is now taking place near the EEC-standard beaches to which I have referred. There will be the need for even greater care and I hope that the company and, perhaps more importantly, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food—I am glad to see my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary in his place—will ensure that no risks are taken while inshore drilling is taking place.

Poole has an expanding commercial port as well as a large leisure industry which offers almost every type of water sport. The harbour commissioners tell me that the 10,000 yachts that are seen in the harbour every summer represent almost as great a concern to them, because of the occasional irresponsible discharge, as do the commercial operators. An education programme is needed to make leisure sailors aware that their activities can be as significant as those of the large boats.

I am pleased to hear that, after privatisation, the National Rivers Authority will reinforce controls over pollution. I hope that the penalties available to the courts will be an efective deterent to the polluter. We in Poole must be worried by the increase of one third in the number of serious pollution incidents due to agricultural activities from 1986 to 1987. As far as I can trace, there was no serious incident in the area of Poole harbour.

The Water Authorities Association has told me—we have been reminded of this by hon. Members who have already spoken—that silage liquor is 200 times more toxic than untreated sewage. Given the impossibility of continuous checks at every silage pit, I ask again whether the penalties for this class of pollution are high enough. A much greater availability of fines would be an incentive to the courts.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (Mr. Richard Ryder): I agree with my hon. Friend that pollution due to agricultural activities is far too high. The maximum penalty available to the courts for that sort of pollution is £2,000, but the average fine that is meted out by the courts in the south-west of England is £140. I take the opportunity through my hon. Friend of reminding the Magistrates Association of the maximum fine that is available to its members. It is important that they take hold of this fact.

Mr. Ward: I am grateful to my hon. Friend. I was about to make the point that the best incentive would be the availability of higher fines to the courts. There is a maximum fine of £2,000, but the maximum seems not to be applied. If our rivers are polluted as a result of carelessness or gross stupidity, those responsible should face a minimum fine of £2,000. Perhaps the polluter who continues to act irresponsibly after one warning should be forced out of business. His activities will affect many people and we have no protection other than the courts.

I agree with my hon. Friend the Minister that, although we cannot affect the courts' decisions, we can continue drawing their attention to the derisory fines being imposed. The blunt economic fact is that at the moment, it pays the polluter—if he can get away with a small fine of the kind my hon. Friend mentioned.

In recent years, we paid farmers to produce food that we could not use. That has changed and we are starting to pay them not to produce food that we are unable to use. Logic suggests that we could devise a system whereby farms will be used less intensively, with less incentive to apply excessive amounts of chemical fertilisers. In some areas, the higher level of nitrates already in the soil will take years to clear. I am attracted to the Water Authorities Association's plan to designate water protection zones where agricultural activity will be restricted.

Just as excessive land nutrients can upset the ecological balance, so can fish farms, as was mentioned by my right hon. Friend the Member for Woking (Mr. Onslow). If there is an inquiry, it should embrace not only inland fish farms but those on our coastal waters, because intensive fish farming, popular and necessary though it may be, should be checked to ensure that it does not have long-term harmful effects.

I welcome all that has been done by the Government to increase investment in sewage treatment. That unglamorous and neglected area of pollution control must be tackled, and if we are to achieve the water quality standards that are increasingly being expected we cannot ignore the fact that we, the consumers, must make available sufficient funds to bring all treatment works up to standard.

I confess to continuing concern about and dislike for the discharging of sewage and sludge at sea. I know that that is now dumped further out to sea, and that such discharges are now a smaller proportion of the whole. However, I hope that we shall continue to find ways of avoiding all such discharges. I am not reassured by the use of underwater cameras and so on. I strongly suspect that one of the problems we are laying down for the future is the presence of metal pollutants in sewage, to which reference has already been made.

Mr. Spearing: The hon. Member has touched on an important aspect. As the Secretary of State for the Environment is present, I may point out that the Government's response to the report that we are debating made no satisfactory undertaking in respect of metals in dumped sludge. Will the Government tell the House why they have not taken any steps in that direction?

Mr. Ward: On the contrary, the Government have moved some way towards accepting the importance of that aspect. It is no use this country moving forward alone. The source of some of the worst discharges are countries on the continent. Nevertheless, I agree with the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) that it is a subject of immense importance. More important still, we should give even more consideration to industrial discharges generally around our coasts.

Despite my concerns, I was glad to hear of the Government's proposals to control the most dangerous substances. The red list will have a proper scientific basis rather than a basis of guess work, rumour or sensationalism. Nevertheless, we should always err on the side of caution and the environment. The principle that the polluter pays must always apply. As I said earlier, slaps on the wrist for persistent offenders are no use. Substantial financial punishment is the only deterrent that polluters will understand.

I do not wish to end on a complacent note, but I believe that we are moving in the right direction. Thanks to the Government's economic success, more cash is available to remedy the neglect of the past. We must keep up the pressure not only at home but on our European partners, some of whose contributions to North sea pollution remains a disgrace. I hope that by co-operating with other EC nations, and by encouraging the efforts of the 21-nation Council of Europe, we shall build on recent successes. I am much encouraged by what was said earlier by the hon. Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy) about the Council of Europe's environmental activities. All that is part of the great environmental challenge that the Prime Minister has clearly accepted, and it is one in which I am sure she will prove to be the driving force in years to come.

11.15 am

Ms. Joan Walley (Stoke-on-Trent, North): I shall be brief because I know that many other right hon. and hon. Members wish to speak.

Never before has public opinion been so concerned about environmental pollution, particularly in our rivers and in the North sea. We must place on record not only the Select Committee's important work in identifying the problems but that being done by organisations such as Greenpeace, Friends of the Earth and the Consumers' Association.

About 13 months have elapsed since the Government's response to the Select Committee's report. If the Government really were committed to the protection of all things green, we might have expected a much speedier response, of the kind that was given after the survey undertaken by Greenpeace, when its research vessel went round the coasts of this country.

One of the fundamental points in the Select Committee's third report comes in paragraph 12:

"Importantly, there was no suggestion that water quality in our rivers or estuaries poses a serious risk to public health."

We must acknowledge that it is not just a matter of contracting gastro enteritis or some other illness from bathing in poluted sea water, of eating contaminated shrimps fished in some parts of the country, or contaminated eels from one of our freshwater rivers. I believe that the Select Committee was wrong to single out rivers. It should be recognised that the pollution that reaches our rivers from agricultural practices, from industry, and from human sewage and sludge has a consequential effect on the whole environment. It is a problem not just for our country but for all countries bordering the North sea.

I acknowledge that we secured further Government concessions from the North sea conference a year ago. However, I do not believe that the Government made half enough concessions. We now confront the urgent problem that 5 per cent. of our rivers are not as clean and as clear as they should be. It would be bad enough if we had a problem with existing environmental pollution, but matters will be made worse by the Government's privatisation of the water industry, which shifts the whole focus on to the political arguments. We cannot say that privatisation is not a political issue; there is nothing more political than our environment. That is why the Opposition place so much importance on these issues.

Under the Government's proposals, it will still be incumbent on local councils to guarantee the wholesomeness of their water supplies. I should like the Secretary of State for the Environment to concentrate on explaining how he intends that the whole area of integrated water control and monitoring will be brought to account.

The Secretary of State does not seem to be giving local authorities the wherewithal to provide for clean, healthy water supplies or for the control and monitoring of what is going on. I fear that the privatisation Bill poses a real danger that environmental priorities will become secondary to profit and issues connected with the economy. Everything will be subservient to clause 5 of the draft legislation which is soon to come before the House.

We have heard a good deal today about the Prime Minister's concern for "green" issues, but during the summer when we were presented with the spectacle of seals dying all around our coastline the Government did not respond by calling for a reconvening of the North sea conference.

Mr. Chapman: On the day of our return after the recess I put down an early-day motion on the protection of seals, which had all-party support. Within a fortnight the Government announced that they would activate, under section 3 of the Conservation of Seals Act 1970, an order forbidding the culling and killing of all common and grey seals for the next two years. Is that not a good example of speedy and effective reaction by the Government to parliamentary pressure?

Ms. Walley: That is indeed a good example of constructive action that can be taken. But it is clear that, because of pollution in the North sea, immune systems are breaking down, and we must see what we can do to prevent that from happening in the first place. We should also be concerned about otters dying in our rivers, which has been highlighted by the Nature Conservancy Council.

Mr. Allan Roberts: Is my hon. Friend aware that the Government do not believe that pollution is causing the death of the seals? The Secretary of State has said as much. Some scientists think that the virus may be caused by pollution. The Government are supposed to be in favour of the precautionary approach, but they say that the problem is that there is not enough food for the seals. Where has the food gone? Has it not disappeared because of pollution?

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Order. Will hon. Members who catch my eye reserve their comments for their speeches rather than adding to them with interventions?

Ms. Walley: Nothing is more important than providing funds for the necessary research, and that is what the Government must do.

We should be putting prevention at the heart of our policies. In my region, if the Severn-Trent water authority put water meters in every one of the 2·75 million households in the area, it would incur a total cost of £430 million—about half the authority's entire capital works programme for the next five years on mains, sewers, leakage and environmental work on, for instance, river quality. I want the money to be put into research or effective measures to stop us from polluting so many of our rivers.

Mr. Norman Miscampbell (Blackpool, North): I start my brief speech by apologising to those who will follow me. I shall not be able to stay for the whole debate because of engagements in the north of England this afternoon.

Mr. Allan Roberts: Swimming on Blackpool beach?

Mr. Miscampbell: Maybe a little swimming on Blackpool beach, yes.

We are debating a matter arising from the proceedings of a committee on which I was privileged to serve for many years, and I am hearing again the overtones that I heard last Friday. Again we are considering not only the best that we can do for our country and its environment but how we can take the public with us, for public awareness is pre-eminent in this context. Nowhere is that clearer than in the disposal of sewage, notably in my constituency—and the neighbouring constituencies of hon. Members who are present today—where the bathing beaches of the largest holiday resort in the country, and almost certainly the largest in western Europe, have been condemned as not being up to EEC standards. We are obviously keen to amend that position.

The problem faced by us on the Fylde coast encapsulates almost uniquely the problem of how to dispose of waste properly. The North-West water authority's proposal to clear up the beaches running from Fleetwood down to south Blackpool have my cautious approval. It raises some problems, but we must face up to them and not simply say that the only solution is an onshore solution. I once served on a local authority that had to make up its mind whether to adopt an onshore solution or a long outfall. The political position can be summed up—the Secretary of State has already referred to this—by saying that there was a clear majority for an onshore solution, and an overwhelming majority for its being nowhere near the houses of members of the authority.

None the less, the scheme for the north Fylde coast is a vast improvement on the present position. It is proposed to put out a three-mile outfall, which is necessary in any event, and the Government are beginning to consider whether the ordinary raw sewage that goes out should be treated. If toxic waste and heavy metals are removed, long outfalls containing ordinary domestic waste are a perfectly acceptable solution which is not condemned by any EEC country. It has been done in this country, and we know that it will prove satisfactory. We know that a mixture of sun, wind and movement in sea water is an effective way of grading sewage.

There are two problems. First, we must ask ourselves whether at the end of this century or the beginning of the next the EEC will allow us to discharge sewage into the sea. That is a long-term political problem. Our unique advantage is our turbulent seas, which in many instances, are most suitable for the discharge of sewage. The other problem is what will happen about heavy metals, and I am glad that the Government seem to be showing concern about that.

I welcome the scheme proposed by the North-West water authority. I hope that if political pressure makes it necessary more screening and actual treatment can be done without vast extra cost. I also hope that we shall pay attention to the problem of extracting heavy metals, for which an onshore solution may ultimately be necessary. Much could be achieved by preventing heavy metals from getting into the sewerage system in the first place.

No matter what the solution, the Fylde coast from minimum to maximum discharge due to storm water going through the sewerage system can change between one and 40 times in volume. No seweregе works in the world could possibly cope with the really heavy storm outflows. We must have a system at the end if we must put it out. That is why it is not a choice between long sewers going out to sea and onshore treatment. We may need to have both, but the long outflow is necessary in any event and I welcome it in the north-west.

11.30 am

The Secretary of State for the Environment (Mr. Nicholas Ridley): It may be for the convenience of the House if I intervene now. Our rivers, estuaries and seas are an absolutely vital part of our national heritage. Not only do we depend on them for sustaining life, but they are a vital source of relaxation and enjoyment for countless fishermen, boaters, ramblers, painters and poets. They are part of our cultural heritage, as is our beautiful countryside.

Our forebears allowed appalling damage to our rivers and estuaries. Thank goodness that in my lifetime so much of that damage has been repaired, as I intend to show. Nevertheless, I readily concede that there is much more to do. Today's debate allows us to discuss the important issues raised in the excellent report of the Select Committee on the Environment. I congratulate my right hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi) and his colleagues on the Committee on a worthwhile document. Not only have we studied it, but we have acted on it—in some cases before he even wrote the report. We must get this into perspective.

The debate enables me to do three things. First, I shall set out the major programmes under way for improving sewage treatment and disposal, which are already bringing major improvements to our rivers and coastal waters. Secondly, I stress that our water privatisation proposals, which I expect shortly to introduce to the House, will do a great deal to strengthen pollution control, particularly through the establishment of the National Rivers Authority, to safeguard and improve our inland and coastal waters. The Bill will be the most major piece of environmental legislation that the House has ever had to consider. I say that to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms. Walley)—who I know has had to leave us—because she expressed concern.

Thirdly, I will tell the House of the progress that we are making on implementing the ministerial declaration of the second conference on the protection of the North sea, of which I was chairman last November. It was not that the Government made concessions at that conference. It was that they led the pack to get all nations surrounding the North sea to take the necessary action, with great success on that occasion.

Mr. Allan Roberts: Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Ridley: No, I will not give way yet.

Mr. Roberts: On the North sea.

Mr. Ridley: I am coming to the North sea. First, I am describing the menu for the hon. Gentleman. When he reaches a particular course, I will give way to him, but not a great deal.

Before spelling out these policies, perhaps I can put the subject matter of the debate into perspective. To judge by some of the comments, even today, one could think that conditions were bad and getting worse. The pessimists glory in looking each day for new evidence to confirm their worst fears, so let us look at the facts.

First, the Select Committee's report says of the overall quality of our rivers and estuaries:

"It is important to stress that river and estuary quality in this counry is generally very high."

That is true. In the last survey, in 1985, over 90 per cent. of our total length of rivers in England and Wales was classified as being of good or fair quality. That means that the waters were suitable for drinking water abstraction, supported at least good coarse fisheries, and had some amenity value. I understand that the position in Scotland is even better.

It seems fashionable to denigrate ourselves as "the dirty man of Europe", but the facts do not support this. Only two countries in the European Community, the Netherlands and possibly Ireland, have higher proportions of good or fair quality rivers than the United Kingdom. Rather than "dirty man", I prefer to talk of dirty rivers: and there is no question but that it is the Rhine which is the dirty river of Europe.

Mr. Roberts: I accept that the Rhine is dirtier than the Thames, but does the Secretary of State accept that the Mersey is dirtier than both?

Mr. Ridley: I knew that it was a mistake to give way. I am coming to the Mersey. The hon. Gentleman is the best example of political pollution that we have in the House. Even within the Labour party he must be top of the red list of dangerous substances.

We can also be proud of the major improvements in our estuaries. Our estuaries used to be a disgrace. But over the past 20 years or so they have been a major success story. Their clean-up has been achieved mainly through large-scale investment in new interceptor sewers and sewage treatment facilities. The record speaks for itself.

The Thames has been transformed into what we believe to be the cleanest metropolitan estuary in the world. Over

[Mr. Ridley]

100 species of fish have been recorded since the 1970s. Salmon once more go past this House. That is a far cry from the Environment Select Committee's comment that we used to hang up window blinds impregnated with chloride of lime in Committee Rooms to overcome the stench from the river in Victorian times.

Thanks to a major clean-up programme by Northumbrian Water, the Tyne has once again become one of our best salmon rivers. No salmon went through it for 30 years. In 1987, the catches recorded on the Tyne were the highest for 60 years. The Wear now has large runs of sea trout. Major improvements on the industrial Tees will once again enable the passage of migratory fish. The Humber is steadily being improved through programmes to clean-up the Trent and rivers in west and south Yorkshire. I shall come to the particular south Yorkshire questions in a minute. In total, some £600 million has been spent on better sewerage and sewage treatment for these estuaries. In Scotland, I understand that salmon are returning to the Clyde in increasing numbers.

The biggest remaining challenge is now the Mersey. In recognition of this, we established in 1985 the Mersey basin campaign to co-ordinate a £4 billion programme of investment over the next 25 years. The North-West water authority, local authorities, private industry, the European regional development fund and voluntary agencies will all be involved. The aim is to clean over 1,700 km of river in the Mersey basin by the year 2010 and to bring them up to at least class 2 quality. It is a longstanding and effective commitment to improving this, perhaps the worst polluted of our rivers. It is properly funded and protected so that the North-West water authority can go into the private sector with that programme secure.

Our very success has caused new threats to water quality. My right hon. Friend rightly drew attention to many of these problems and I propose to respond to several of the points that the Committee raised to eradicate the main pollution threats to the aquatic environment. First, I shall deal with substances which, because of the inherent characteristics, pose the biggest threat. These are the red list substances. This is a provisional list of substances ranging from heavy metals to pesticides which, on the basis of their toxicity, persistence in water, capacity for bioaccumulation and prevalence, justify particularly stringent controls.

My right hon. Friend asked for progress. We consulted widely on the red list during the summer and are now studying the responses. We shall make firm proposals for legislation and implementation. We intend to minimise the amount of these substances entering the rivers and estuaries from all sources, which include sewage contamination. In part, this will be done by applying technology-based emission standards to all significant industrial discharges of these substances. In future, we shall be looking to relevant industrial processes to use the best available technology, having regard to reasonable costs, as well as satisfying strict environmental quality standards for these substances in receiving water. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution will have an important role in developing this new approach with industry. It will tie in with the parallel proposals we have made for an integrated system of pollution control for major industrial processes, designed to minimise the overall impact of discharges to land, air and water.

Many of the substances on the red list do not come from industrial discharges. They come from the wider use of substances such as timber preservatives, pesticides and cleaning agents—so-called "diffuse sources of pollution." To minimise the amounts of these substances reaching our waters may require action to control their use, which in some cases might be an outright ban. In the last 18 months, in response to evidence, we have already banned the use of organo-tin anti-fouling paints on small boats and we have also announced that the remaining agricultural and timber treatment uses in this country of aldrin and dieldrin, two of the worst and most persistent pesticides, are to be phased out.

The declaration that followed last year's North sea conference called for substantial reductions by 1995 in dangerous substances reaching the North sea via rivers and estuaries. Our action to control red list substances will largely implement that undertaking. We hope that continental countries will do the same. All that dramatic action has been taking place during the last year or two. It is in no sense something new that I announce to the House today.

The main source of pollution, however, in most of our inland and coastal waters is pollution by sewage. I fear that the House must agree on one matter at least: that no way can be found of ending the problem at source. The problem will remain with us, so long as mankind survives. It is in that area where most of our efforts this century have been directed. As a result, we are ahead of many other European countries over sewage treatment, but three objectives in particular remain to be achieved.

First, we have to ensure that we continue to reduce unsatisfactory discharges from sewage treatment works, which still put river quality at risk in some areas. Secondly, we must devise satisfactory means of disposing of sewage from seaside resorts. Thirdly, we have to decide how best to dispose of the inert sewage sludge that is the inevitable consequence of sewage treatment processes.

The Environment Committee rightly pointed to the unacceptable state of affairs arising from the large number of sewage treatment works still breaching their legal limits. The Government fully accept that. The major reason for it, as my right hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green pointed out, was the massive cuts in water authority investment under the previous Administration.

Mr. Allan Roberts: Will the Secretary of State give way?

Mr. Ridley: In a minute.

That has led to a large number of works being overloaded and more prone to operational failure. Investment in sewage and sewage treatment was halved between 1974-75 and 1980-81, as my right hon. Friend's report clearly shows. The Labour party, with the help of the man from the IMF, was the dirty party of Europe. Fortunately, we are now remedying that problem.

The hon. Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy) was one of the sufferers. I acknowledge that there is much more still to be done to the rivers of south Yorkshire. The programme of spending by the Yorkshire water authority on those rivers is £24·8 million this year, £45·3 million next year, the year after that £48 million, and in the following year £70 million. That money is available and will be spent on necessary works by the hon. Gentleman's water authority, but I have to tell him that the reason for that taking so long to happen was due to the halving of water investment under the Administration that he supported.

Mr. Simon Hughes: Although the Secretary of State is right about the lack of investment since 1976 when the IMF had to be brought in, will he confirm that his predecessors in the Department have come to the House regularly to announce restrictions on borrowing, on external financial limits and the rest, which meant that until this year the reduction in investment continued—against the wishes of the water authorities, who protested about it? They would have made the investment if they had been allowed to do so by this Government as well as by the previous Government.

Mr. Ridley: I am surprised by the hon Gentleman's statement. I think he supported the Government who brought upon themselves the IMF crisis. That was the cause of the trouble. I admit that I have delayed water privatisation by insisting on having the National Rivers Authority in place. It means that the water authorities have not had access to the private capital market, as part of the private sector. Until they are in the private sector, they will never be allowed, by Governments of any colour, to borrow from the private sector. That has never been allowed, even by a Labour Government, for any nationalised industry.

Mr. Hardy: I acknowledge that Secretary of State's point, although I must point out to him that his Government had been in office far longer than the Labour Administration before this improvement took place. Many of us believe that one reason why this capital commitment has been entered into is that the Government know full well that that will be reflected in a much lower price for the water industry when it is sold. However, the Secretary of State has not yet addressed the point that although there may have been improvements in the urban rivers—improvements that could not have been delayed much longer—rivers such as the Tamar, home of Tarka the otter, are no longer able to sustain life and will not be able to do so until there has been a dramatic improvement in ways of dealing with agricultural pollution.

Mr. Ridley: I hope that the hon. Gentleman will allow me to continue with my speech. I am coming to agricultural pollution. There is no point in repeating it.

My hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Water and Planning announced to the House on Tuesday that total investment in the water industry will increase by 20 per cent. next year, following steady growth since 1980-81. On sewerage and sewage treatment and disposal alone, water authorities will spend £560 million next year, which is more than their total investment under the Labour party—an increase of more than one third, in constant prices, since 1980-81.

I am pleased to say that we are close to confirming with the water authorities an accelerated programme of capital improvement for sewage treatment works that will involve expenditure of about £1 billion over the next four years. That will bring almost all these works into full compliance with their legal limits by March 1992. I hope to make a more detailed announcement to the House shortly before Christmas. However, even now I can confidently predict that the extra investment that is to be approved will be good news for water quality. We shall look to the new National Rivers Authority to ensure that agreed programmes of improvement are properly implemented.

There are some 400 bathing waters within the scope of the EEC bathing waters directive. About 60 per cent. of them now meet the quality standards on sewage bacteria. We must bring the remainder up to these standards as quickly as possible. The water authorities have done a good job in drawing up improvement programmes. They are currently spending £70 million annually on schemes to improve beaches. We have recently asked them to assess whether these programmes could be accelerated so that all our bathing standards will be up to EEC standards by 1995.

I am afraid that 1995 is the very earliest that the improvements could be completed. Some of the very large schemes involve complex engineering, design and construction work, and some of those contracts can take up to seven years to complete because of the need to catch the tides and the weather. Most improvement schemes involve the re-sewering of seaside towns and the construction of long sea outfalls. These discharge three or more kilometres out at sea, where dilution and the effects of the sea and sunlight rapidly break down the effluent and kill off the bacteria. The use of long sea outfalls was strongly endorsed by the Royal Commission on environmental pollution, which concluded in its 10th report that with well-designed outfalls discharge of sewage to the sea is not only acceptable but, in many cases, environmentally preferable to alternative methods of disposal. That is the best international scientific advice about this matter. It is not possible to question it, as the hon. Member for Bootle (Mr. Roberts) has been doing sotto voce and from a seated position.

There are still those who, like the hon. Member for Bootle, argue that sewage discharges into the sea are wrong in principle, but the alternatives that they suggest, such as conventional inland treatment or disinfection, also have great drawbacks. Conventional treatment by itself does not remove all the bacteria—we still require the sea to finish the job. As far as we know, the sea will destroy all viruses that have been identified. There are concerns about the effects of disinfecting agents on marine life. Moreover, we simply cannot escape the fact that sewage has to be disposed of somewhere. For example, even if we were to rule out the use of long sea outfalls, and rely instead on conventional inland treatment works, we would then have increased amounts of sewage sludge to dispose of.

The House must appreciate that the end product of sewage treatment is sludge which has to be disposed of in some way, somewhere. About half of what we produce is currently spread onto land as a soil conditioner, one fifth is put into landfill sites, and one third is disposed of at sea. A small amount is incinerated.

Our policy on sewage sludge disposal is straightforward—to choose in each instance that means of disposal that is the best practicable environmental option in the area and in the circumstances of the case. In those cases where we send sewage sludge to sea—mainly from the large conurbations round some of the estuaries—we do so because we believe that it represents the best option. It may be that putting it on the land or burning it close to the big cities would prove, quite conclusively, to be much worse options than taking it out to sea. I heard the interesting and constructive speech by my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Blackpool, North (Mr. Miscampbell), but I must not comment on the situation he described, because the application for works on the Fylde coast could be coming to me soon.

I recognise people's sensitivities about the sea and the strong emotions that something so elemental can involve, but there is nothing scientifically or intrinsically wrong with sea disposal of sewage sludge, provided that it is done in the right way. People can be equally sensitive to disposing of it on land. The risks arise not from the sewage sludge per se, but from the amounts of contaminants, such as heavy metals that it contains. This was the worry expressed by my hon. Friend the Member for Poole (Mr. Ward). It is right that we should take action to minimise, even to eliminate, the levels of contaminants in sludges, through the sorts of measures that I have described for red list substances. That is what we are doing. Having done it, I am convinced that the best scientific evidence proves that it might be the right action to put the inert sludge out into the deep sea, where the currents stir it away.

Mrs. Golding: Will there be an independent report into the relationship between sludge dumping and fish disease.

Mr. Ridley: I do not know what the hon. Lady means by an independent report. A great many scientific investigations are made into these matters and when we receive advice from the best scientists in the country, the Government make it public and we can debate what action should be taken. The idea that there is some independent person who can provide better advice than that which the Government receive and publish is wrong.

I want to consider the North sea conference, which was referred to by the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North. We correctly recognised the distinction at the conference, which calls for action to reduce the contamination of sludges by persistent, toxic and bioaccumulable materials so that they pose no harm to the marine environment. My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is implementing that part of the declaration as part of his overall responsibilities for licensing sea disposal. His officials are involved in detailed discussions with the water industry on the implications. He also intends to publish the results of the monitoring studies at sea disposal sites. However, to those who are against sea disposal I ask: "What is your solution?" Agricultural land is often not readily available near major conurbations. We are short of landfill sites and I guess that the public would not accept large-scale incineration plants near urban areas.

We have heard a lot about the allegedly polluted state of the North sea. It has been described as a dying sea and even as a dead sea. The North sea is a national and international responsibility. Touching almost half of our coastline, it is bound to be of concern to us all. The most comprehensive and authoritative report on the state of the North sea was last year's quality status report—a consensus report produced by scientists from all North sea states.

That report drew attention to a number of issues of concern such as the build-up of pollutants in areas such as the Wadden sea and German bight and the accumulation of nutrients along the coastal belt of the Netherlands and Denmark. However, the report also showed that there was no evidence of damage away from those limited areas. Given the concentrations of population and industry around the North sea, I think that those results are broadly encouraging. Certainly they do not bear out claims that the North sea is dying, let alone dead. No doubt I shall next be accused of complacency by the hon. Member for Bootle, (Mr. Roberts). However, I believe that scientists know more about this than does the hon. Gentleman.

The exaggerated tales about the condition of the seas around these islands have led some to the assumption that that was the cause of the virus epidemic that has killed so many seals. However, no direct links have yet been established between the epidemic affecting the seals and pollution.

Sir Hugh Rossi: If it is a virus that is affecting the seals, how do viruses survive in the sea when he told us a few moments ago that he was satisfied that the sea destroyed viruses?

Mr. Ridley: I was talking about viruses that are a danger to human beings which come from the sewerage system. I am now talking about a virus that is quite common among a number of mammals. It might interest my hon. Friend to learn that seals in Lake Baikal in central Asia appear to have a very similar virus which has decimated the seal population in a very remote area away from any industrial pollution.

Mr. Allan Roberts: Will the right hon. Gentleman admit that every piece of scientific evidence shows that, whether or not pollution causes a virus, in relation to food that fish, seals or humans eat, pollution will lower the animal's resistance and cause the virus to get a hold?

Mr. Ridley: I am afraid that there is no evidence for that. I commend the excellent and fully researched, scientific article written by Dr. John Harwood, the director of the sea mammal research unit which appeared in the New Scientist recently about the lessons to be learned from the epidemic. He makes it absolutely clear that, although every sort of research is being done to try to determine any such possible connection, there is at present no conceivable evidence. That just shows the dangers of jumping to conclusions about things such as the seal virus, based on ignorance and prejudice—as the hon. Lady who raised that point has done—and why it would be better to discover the facts from scientific analyses and research.

Mrs. Golding: It was not my concern, but that of the Environment Committee in its report to the House of Commons. It was anxious to have an independent report on the relationship between sludge dumping and fish disease. The Committee had, in fact, studied all the evidence that had been submitted to it and was not satisfied.

Mr. Ridley: I was referring to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North who has now left. However, I believe that I have dealt with that point.

Our action to reduce red list substances reaching the North sea via our rivers and estuaries will contribute to improvement both directly and indirectly through the implications for contaminant levels in sewage sludge. Similar action is now needed by other North sea states, especially since about half of all river-borne contaminants reach the North sea from the Rhine-Meuse. Eighty per cent. comes from continental rivers. We are also working to fulfil our North sea conference commitments on sea dumping.

The hon. Member for Wentworth mentioned the Irish sea. The most recent reports we have on the state of the Irish sea—produced by the International Council for the Exploration of the Seas—also suggest that the general quality of its water are good, although there are localised historic problems in areas such as Liverpool bay. It is worth noting in this regard that over the past 10 years we have cut radioactive discharges from Sellafield by 90 per cent. and further reductions are planned. Man-made radioactivity in Britain accounts for only one part in 1,000 of the natural radioactivity on land and in the sea.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green and other hon. Members raised the question of agricultural pollution and especially nitrate. I assure the House, that the Government are fully aware of the increasing nitrate levels in some of the groundwater sources in parts of central and eastern England, and it is a serious problem. We are urgently seeking a way forward. But it is a complex matter and the solutions will vary from area to area. The mix of remedies to be applied—which include blending of contaminated water with purer water, water treatment, and protection of water sources—must depend on the precise local circumstances. That is why my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and I commissioned a range of desk studies to examine in detail the various options for limiting nitrate concentrations in drinking water in a dozen or so localities, each with different geology, rainfall and farming patterns. We hope to publish the results of those desk studies soon. I believe that that would be the time to take the matter further. I must tell my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green that much thought has been given to this by my right hon. Friend and me. As I am sure my hon. Friend will accept, the problems are much more complex but by the time we take the Water Bill through the Committee stage I hope that the Government will be able to give a fully worked out plan on how to deal with the problem.

Other matters about agricultural pollution were raised today and we made it clear that we are worried about the rising tide of farm pollution. Many hon. Members have dwelt with the question of court cases and fines. To impose a fine for a single act of pollution, such as a farmer making a discharge, is the right way in which to deal with that sort of problem. We intend to leave the prosecution powers against water undertakings which pollute consistently. In those circumstances, fines, as my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green said, are not the right answer. The right answer is to have a programme of investment to bring water quality up to standard. For a particular offence the maximum fine is £2,000, but in the south-west—one of the worst areas—average fines amount to no more than £140. In common with my hon. Friend I hope that the courts will take care to ensure that appropriate penalties are imposed when a conviction is proved.

We are taking a number of further measures to tackle the problem. We have announced our intention to introduce regulations governing the construction of new or extended silage and slurry facilities on farms as well as governing the construction of oil installations of all kinds. In this context, it is worth mentioning that grant-aid payments to farmers building new waste storage and treatment facilities will continue at high levels. We also intend that the new National Rivers Authority should have powers to serve enforcement notices on farms and other sites where existing storage installations pose significant pollution risks. Of course, the powers to prosecute will remain against water companies whether statutory ones or, after privatisation, privatised water companies. That is what we are doing and I believe that we have a good record, but we shall not stop there. Further steps are needed to improve rivers and estuaries, which I have described at length. We shall press on and take those necessary measures.

I believe that the establishment of the National Rivers Authority will be a strongly beneficial environmental measure when it accompanies privatisation. It is perhaps, the most important step forward in the protection of the water environment that any hon. Member can recall.

The authority will be a strong pollution control agency responsible to Parliament for protecting the environment by regulating all discharges to water. At the moment, there is a conflict of interest inherent in our arrangements. Water authorities regulate industrial and other discharges, but at the same time, they are responsible for pollution, through discharges from their treatment works. As the Committee said, they are both poachers and gamekeepers. The hon. Member for Newcastle-under-Lyme (Mrs. Golding) should note that I believe that that has been one of the major troubles hitherto. It is an inherent and absolutely fundamental defect of public ownership that once an industry is publicly owned it is protected from arm's-length regulation. That is because the Government know full well that if they allow such regulations to be imposed, the bill will come back to the Exchequer and they are reluctant to see that. The biggest justification for privatisation is on environmental grounds.

Mr. Allan Roberts rose——

Mr. Ridley: No. We cannot have pollution of this sort.

Bringing the water industry to the private sector has enabled us to establish the National Rivers Authority as the publicly accountable guardian of environmental quality, which I believe is vital.

Mr. Spearing rose——

Mr. Simon Hughes rose——

Mr. Ridley: In this report the Environment Select Committee called for an:

"independent regulatory body with clear objectives and timescales for improvement"

We shall offer just that to the House. The National Rivers Authority will also be conducting a new river quality survey in England and Wales in 1990 to provide us with an up-to-date assessment of the condition of our rivers and estuaries.

Mr. Spearing: What the Secretary of State has just said is vital to the whole country. Does he not recall that when the original water authorities were established, the Labour party's policy was that the National Water Council should have enough powers to survey and impose the very standards—with which I agree—that he is now claiming for the National Rivers Authority?

Instead, the Conservative party abolished the National Water Council and did not give it the powers that it should have had from the beginning. To obtain the standards that we all want, surely there is no need for privatisation. The right hon. Gentleman needs to establish a national water and rivers authority with teeth to enforce standards in the public sector.

Mr. Ridley: I do not know what good that would do when we had a Labour Government who cut and cut again because of their inefficiency and economic illiteracy, resulting in the need to halve investment in water. That is the evil from which all Opposition Members still suffer. It is no good coming to the House and complaining about the lack of investment in the water system when Labour presided over a policy of cutting and cutting again. The time scale on this matter is very long.

The chairman of the National Rivers Authority advisory committee, which is already in place—he is a most distinguished former Member of the House—has already said how he sees the authority operating in the difficult area of enforcement. It will be for the authority to develop its own policy, and to decide in what circumstances to bring prosecutions. Its immediate aims will be to establish good working relationships with all dischargers—whether industry or the water utilities. But I am equally sure that it will want to take firm action to ensure that legal limits on discharge consents are met and that unauthorised discharges stop. That new pollution control agency to protect the water environment will, I repeat, be the result of a major piece of environmental legislation.

Environmental improvements are often costly; the measures that I have outlined today will add to water bills. So we cannot afford to take decisions that have no clear scientific rationale. Through our proposals for integrated pollution control, we have recognised that the environment has to be treated as a whole; we have to be sure that our measures to protect our rivers and our seas do not produce worse environmental problems on land or in the atmosphere.

Mrs. Golding: Will the right to initiate private prosecutions remain after the establishment of the National Rivers Authority?

Mr. Ridley: Yes.

What I have said underlines the importance that both I personally and the Government attach to the immensely necessary task of repairing the damage of past centuries, which our ancestors, including our political ancestors, have done to the river system and the cleanliness of the seas. This programme started several years back—it has not come about since the long recess. I do not believe that it can be criticised, except that it is sad that we have so much to do in such a short time. However, I commend to the House the dramatic and dynamic way in which the Government are seeking to clear up the dereliction that we have inherited.

Mr. Allan Roberts (Bootle): I welcome a debate on the rivers, estuaries and seas around our shores. I should not for one moment accuse the Secretary of State for the Environment of being complacent, as I did his Under-Secretary, the hon. Member for Surrey, South-West (Mrs. Bottomley). He is not complacent; he knows exactly what he is doing. He knows what his free market policies mean. He is the buccaneering free marketeer of the Cabinet and he goes about his job with that in mind.

As a background to the debate, I look to three recent speeches. The first is the Prime Minister's speech to the Royal Society, where the blue was supposed to have turned green. The second is the Secretary of State's speech to the Conservative Bow Group on Tuesday 11 October, when, following the Prime Minister's speech, the Secretary of State sold out on the North sea declaration of Ministers. The third was the Prime Minister's speech to the Tory party conference, when she inspired the Secretary of State to announce two new environmental initiatives. The first was that he would make a series of speeches—which is perhaps why he, rather than the Under-Secretary, is speaking today—to be collected together in a pamphlet so that we can all read them.

The second major environmental initiative that resulted from the Government's conversion to the green cause was the announcement by the Secretary of State that everyone will have a nuclear power station in his or her back garden.

Today, we are discussing rivers, estuaries and sea pollution. Despite the Secretary of State's smoke—or acid rain—screen, no subject is better suited to exposing the Government's appalling record on the environment and the contradictions between the speeches made by the right hon. Gentleman and his colleagues about that record.

Let us examine the Government's record on rivers, about which we heard again today from the Secretary of State. The Prime Minister told the Tory party conference:

> "The Thames is now the cleanest metropolitan estuary in the world and £4 billion is now being spent on the Mersey. . . . We have led Europe in banning the dumping of harmful industrial waste in the North sea."

Those statements are hardly consistent with the facts.

The right hon. Member for Woking (Mr. Onslow) told me to go and jump in the Rhine. As I said earlier, I would rather do that than swim in the Mersey, but I would not like to jump in the Rhine or the Thames. The Thames is said to be clean, but many so-called grade 1 clean rivers are so classified on the basis of a test of dissolved oxygen, which is primarily a test of the absence or presence of sewage pollution. Seriously contaminated rivers are full of pesticides and chemicals but are still known as grade 1. Research shows high pesticide levels, PCBs and dieldrin in eels in more than 30 British rivers which are not taken into account in the Government's statistics. That includes the Thames, which is way over the safety limit for a so-called clean river.

Otters in Norfolk are dying from organochloride pollution in a so-called clean river. We are told that there are fish in the Thames. That is not surprising: they keep putting them in at one end so they can swim to the other. That is how the Thames water authority spends £60,000 a year. The hon. Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames) may laugh at that, but the river is being stocked with salmon because they cannot breed. They have to keep being replaced because their eggs are poisoned by chemical pollution. The Thames water authority is using oxygen bubbles to maintain artificial levels of oxygen when dissolved oxygen levels fall because of pollution.

This is the Government's record on rivers. Between 1980 and 1985, the condition of rivers in Britain deteriorated—the first such deterioration in 25 years.

Mr. Ridley: Nonsense.

Mr. Roberts: That is the evidence that the Department of the Environment gave the Select Committee, in those parts of the report that the Secretary of State was reluctant to quote. The quality of 903 km of rivers has deteriorated since the Tories came to power.

Reported pollution incidents in rivers have risen. In 1980-81 there were 12,500 pollution incidents; in 1986-87, there were 21,095; and up-to-date figures for 1987-88 are 23,253—almost a doubling since the beginning of the decade.

Of course, the Secretary of State does not want to hear the facts and statistics. Why has all this happened? It has been partly admitted that it is a result of the escalation of farm pollution—farm slurry and silage leakages. There has been a massive increase in silage production from animal manure. The Select Committee on the Environment went to Holland, which also suffers from this problem. The Common Market has not only a beef and butter mountain, but a manure mountain, which is causing terrible pollution. It is the result of intensive farming and of the Government's support for certain aspects of agricultural policy. There are rows between the Department of the Environment and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, but that would be true whichever Government were in power.

These incidents do not take account of breaches of consents by non-water authority discharges, but they do take account of an increase in industrial pollution, as well as farm pollution, so we cannot get away with saying that only agricultural pollution is causing the problems. The figures reveal otherwise.

The Government claim that they are in favour of the concept that the polluter must pay. That is a joke by the Government and the water authorities. In 1986-87 there were 215 prosecutions of polluters by water authorities. That is an enforcement rate of 1 per cent. The report from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Water Authorities Association in 1986 said that polluters would rather pay the fines than undertake the necessary work.

The problem is not just the level of fines. The Secretary of State said that the maximum fine in a magistrates court is £2,000. If the Government were serious, they could help the water authorities to take polluters to the Crown court where the maximum penalties are two years' imprisonment and an unlimited fine. There have been rare examples of Crown court prosecutions. In 1987 the North-West water authority took Express Dairies to court for polluting a river with ammonia and killing 20,000 fish. That resulted in a £25,000 fine. A few more such results perhaps in the 1 per cent. of cases that I mentioned, as well as more prosecutions in the magistrates courts, might be a deterrent.

The enforcement of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 is woefully inadequate. In 1986-87, a total of 4,121 km of our rivers were still class 3 and class 4. That means that those rivers are biologically dead, yet the Government say that they have a good record. That classification applies to 10 per cent. of our rivers. The Government might claim that that means that 90 per cent. of our rivers are clean, but they are not, because they contain dieldrin. In the river Avon herons are dying from pesticide pollution, yet the Avon is a class 1 river and is supposed to be clean.

As I have already tried to make clear, river classification works on the basis of dissolved oxygen and does not take account of chemical pollution. Matters are getting worse, and 31 rivers in Britain exceed the Department of Health guidelines on dieldrin, including the Ouse, the Severn and the Trent. In addition, the water authorities are breaching their sewage works consents. That is not because of cuts in capital expenditure by a Labour Government. This Government have been in power for nearly 10 years and have had plenty of time to restore any capital cuts in water authority expenditure. However, they have made further cuts. The Government preach cuts in public expenditure. One could accuse a Labour Government of not wanting to cut public expenditure, but this Government believe in cuts and put that belief into practice. In 1987 more than 20 per cent.——

Mr. Ridley: We have a new consensus. The Labour Government did not want to make cuts but had to, whereas the Tory Government want to make cuts but bring about increases.

Mr. Roberts: If the Government are increasing expenditure they are not keeping to their manifesto promises. They cannot have it both ways. The Government cannot claim to cut public expenditure and at the same time increase it. They claim that they cut public expenditure except where it matters, but that is not true, because it certainly matters in terms of river pollution and drinking water.

In 1987 more than 20 per cent. of sewage works in England and Wales were in breach of consents. We have had discharges from sewage works on top of the storm overflow that takes place after heavy rain. Raw sewage comes over the storm overflows and the sewers cannot cope with the water going into them.

In 1986-87, industry was responsible for 39 per cent. of river pollution incidents. It is not just a matter for the water authorities, because prior to 1985 the Government relaxed sewage works consents so that the breaches that were occurring would not be revealed. That is an example of the Government's hypocrisy. In a parliamentary answer just before the register of pollution incidents was made public and the coming into force of the Control of Pollution Act, the Secretary of State clearly outlined the position. He said that 1,800 out of 6,600 applications for relaxation of consents for pollution discharges by water authorities into rivers were granted. The consents were relaxed so that the breaches would not show up on the new register. The Secretary of State conspired with the water authorities to thwart the provisions of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 by relaxing those consents so that the pollution would not be revealed.

Industrial compliance with consent licences is regularly breached under this Government, but only irregularly prosecuted. The section 32 provisions of the 1974 Act are scarcely used for breaches of consent. Most of the prosecutions, few though they are, are made under the section 31 provisions, which relate to one-off incidents of pollution. My hon. Friend the Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy) referred to pollution incidents in Yorkshire. In 1987, there were 2,325 pollution incidents and 763 breaches of consent. Over 20 per cent. of Yorkshire Water sewage works are breaking consents under this Government. The number of prosecutions was only 31, of which 20 were section 31 prosecutions for one-off breaches. That is an enforcement rate of less than 1 per cent. Only 11 of those prosecutions were section 32 prosecutions, an enfocement rate of 1·4 per cent.

[Mr. Roberts]

Before the public register was introduced in 1985, as a consequence of the 1984 Act, North-West Water relaxed its consent conditions to industry with the Government's permission, so further control under the 1984 Act was counter-productive. If anything, it led to more pollution rather than less.

The river Mersey is the so-called feather in the Government's cap. It is one of the slowest and most polluted river basins in the country. The concept of dilution, in which the Government still appear to believe, whereby we solve our pollution problems by diluting the poisons in the seas and rivers, does not work very well because the river is so slow moving. In the north-west, over the past 10 years, 628 kms of river have deteriorated. Only 220 kms have improved, yet that is where the Government say they are concentrating their efforts.

In 1978, 16 per cent. of grade 3 and grade 4 rivers in the north-west were biologically dead. That figure has now increased to 21 per cent.—a 5 per cent. increase during the past 10 years. The north-west has the greatest length of seriously polluted rivers, canals and estuaries in England and Wales. In 1986-87, North-West Water reported 2,480 pollution incidents, yet there were only 22 prosecutions. That does not include the figures for breaches of consent. ICI broke its consent discharge levels in the Mersey 120 times between June 1987 and June 1988, but, although it received a warning letter, there were no prosecutions. It is very friendly towards the Government.

North-West Water's industrial strategy plan for August 1988—a so-called confidential document, although I have not stolen it—spells out the extent of the problem. The river Mersey is the most polluted river basin in western Europe, but the Government say that North-West Water and others will spend £4 billion on a Mersey clean-up campaign, the Government's flagship of pollution control. However, only £2·5 billion—the Secretary of State fails to mention this; perhaps his parliamentary private secretary will tell him—is being spent on the pollution and water clean-up in the Mersey. The rest is being spent on the development of riverside sites for industrial recreation, commerce and housing, but development is not cleaning up or pollution control.

The £2·5 billion clean-up scheme is a cosmetic sham, and the Government know it, for two reasons. First, they are taking out only the raw sewage and leaving behind the chemical pollution—the lead, cadmium, mercury and all the other heavy metals. The dangerous PCBs, pesticides, nitrites and nitrates are left behind to pass into the Irish sea.

Secondly, it is a sham because of what will happen to the sewage when it has been removed. A 50 km pipeline is being built, and it will pick up all the outflows of sewage in the Mersey. The sewage will be taken to Sandon dock in my constituency. It will be converted into sewage sludge and then dumped in the area whence it came, in the Irish sea in Liverpool bay. It will still be full of heavy metals and chemicals, but it will be put back into the water. It is unbelievable that that should happen.

The sewage vessels will dump the sewage in Liverpool bay, which, in the words of the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, is already a stressed environment. A few years ago the Mersey was being dredged to keep open the port of Liverpool. It was found that the mercury levels in the dredgings were extremely high and the port nearly lost its dredging licence. The levels of mercury in the fish were extremely high. It is licensed for 80,000 dry tonnes of sewage sludge a year, and it is clear that a vastly greater amount of sewage sludge will be created.

The Secretary of State has said—this was included in his speech to the Bow Group—that the Government do not think that there is a problem in dumping sewage sludge into the sea. In opposing the cautionary approach and attacking scientists and the declaration of the conference of North sea Ministers, which the Minister signed, he said:

" A third example is sewage sludge dumping in the sea. This material is inert. It consists of 95 per cent. water. We have been putting it into the sea for 100 years with no discernable ill effects. The alternative is putting it on the land, which may well be a worse alternative."

How can the Secretary of State say that we are short of landfill sites in which to put sewage sludge when plenty of sites can be found for imported toxic waste? I say that that importing should stop, but can we use landfill sites for sewage sludge? There is a problem because the sewage sludge is poisonous. It is polluted. It is full of the chemicals, PCBs and heavy metals that the Government claim do no harm when they are dumped into the North sea.

There are problems in Liverpool bay and at Garroch bay in Scotland, where sewage sludge is dumped. It seems that about 15 per cent. of the sludge remains there. The bay is smothered and the sludge is killing the sea and its environment. The Government have had to move to another dumping ground as a result. There are sewage sludge and dumping problems in the Thames estuary and these are causing great concern. As I have said, once the sewage has been collected and treated at Sandon dock, the port's licence provides that only 80,000 dry tonnes of sewage sludge can be dumped into the Irish sea. There has been a search for other dumping areas because that limit will be exceeded. Wales, the Isle of Man and Cumbria have all refused planning permission when applications have been made to dump off their shores. The vessels that are in service cannot dump very far out from the coast. North-West Water will have to consider other options. If the sludge were clean, it could be put on the land. That would be one of the best ways of treating the soil. It seems that the solution will be incineration, irrespective of whether the Secretary of State wants that. Never mind the not-in-my-backyard argument. The incinerator can be built in the Liverpool docks. It is clear that the proposed operation at Sandon dock would stink out the entire area.

The sludge is full of pollutants because of the discharge of chemicals into the sewers of north-west England. This pollution is the worst in the country. Sewage sludge in the north-west contains the highest volume of trade effluent in the country. However, in his Bow Group speech, the Secretary of State for the Environment, referring to criticism of sewage dumping in the North sea, made it clear that he was totally complacent about the problem—even though it is mentioned in the North sea declaration, which he signed, that the Government would do something to stop sewage sludge dumping.

The Prime Minister told the Tory party conference:

"We lead the world in stopping sea dumping of industrial waste into the North sea."

She must have got that from the Secretary of State, because nobody else believes it. Ours is the only North sea nation dumping sewage sludge into the sea; It is not a European problem but a British problem.

Consequently, 12 to 13 per cent. of people living in north-west England eat fish polluted by mercury in excess of the provisional tolerable intake determined by the Food and Agriculture Organisation and the World Health Organisation. ICI is one of the major dischargers of mercury. People are eating fish with mercury levels in excess of those that are good for health, and so are seals. Thus the whole fish and food chain is affected.

Unlike the Government, the Labour party and previous Labour Governments accepted scientific evidence and produced radical policies. We all used to believe—and the Government still do—that anything could be dumped into the sea or rivers and be safely dispersed. That is not true. Nuclear discharges from Sellafield remain in the sediment and accumulate. Subsequently, worms and other creatures digest the sediment, the fish eat the worms, and then we eat the fish. That is true of mercury, chemicals, heavy metals and sewage sludge dumped in the North sea.

Giving evidence to the Select Committee, the North-West water authority's chief scientist, Eric Harper, stated that the Control of Pollution Act 1974 has not resulted in any improvement in industrial pollution. Against the advice of the Select Committee and of the Nature Conservancy Council, the Government still refuse to implement section 46(1) and (3) of that Act to protect plant and animal life in rivers. That is a measure of how concerned the Government are about our rivers and river pollution.

There remains the myth, believed by the hon. and learned Member for Blackpool, North (Mr. Miscampbell) that anything can be dumped because the sea is so vast it can absorb almost anything. That is the hon. Gentleman's attitude to the dumping of waste, but there is terrific opposition to the Government's long outflow policy of sticking raw sewage sludge in the sea. Why bother turning sewage into sludge if there is nothing wrong with dumping it raw? Of course there is something wrong about dumping raw sewage; it is even worse than the sewage sludge.

There is a proposal, which is just one of many, for a three-mile pipe from Russell Point, Fleetwood, for dumping raw sewage, in addition to sewage sludge, straight into the Irish sea. I understand that the hon. Member for Wyre (Mr. Mans) has written to the Secretary of State asking for a public inquiry. His right hon. Friend is reported as answering that the hon. Member for Wyre must await the pollution inspectorate's report.

Mr. Keith Mans (Wyre): The hon. Member for Bootle (Mr. Roberts) is mistaken. I wrote to my right hon. Friend asking for an independent assessment by the pollution inspectorate, not for a public inquiry.

Mr. Roberts: I did not say "public inquiry", I said "inquiry". My evidence comes from the hon. Gentleman's local press, in which I am sure he is keen to be reported. Obviously he is concerned—and if he is not, his constituents are—or he would not have written to the Secretary of State.

Let us consider the North sea in more detail. The Prime Minister says that we lead the field. The sayings of our Conservative elders and betters need to be examined. Our present Government generally govern by disaster. They wait for the King's Cross fire and then consider what they might do; they wait for the Piper Alpha disaster and then decide that they might do something about safety on oil rigs; they wait for Karin B and then think a bit more seriously about their policy of allowing massive imports of toxic waste. In the same way, they wait for seals to die before pretending to be concerned about North sea pollution—and later deny that pollution has anything to do with the deaths, although the eating of polluted fish obviously weakens the resistance to any virus.

The Secretary of State does not like the truth. He must be one of the most ill-tempered, insulting Members of the present Parliament, but he cannot take it himself. [Interruption.] The hon. Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames) from a sedentary position, says, "Speak for yourself." I am speaking for myself and for the Labour party, and I have spent the first half of the debate being insulted by the Secretary of State and other hon. Members. I think that I have the right, without insulting other hon. Members, to make the position clear.

In his Bow Group speech on 11 October the Secretary of State attacked the cautionary approach, saying:

> "Another example is . . . 'some scientists think that it is possible that the virus affecting seals in the North sea is caused by pollution.' There is no evidence at present to support that assertion. The evidence, such as it is, is that the seals have a killer virus disease, that is typical of viruses that attack animals whose population begins to exceed the food supply necessary to sustain them".

I can assure the right hon. Gentleman that the seal population has not increased that much, so the food supply must have decreased. It can have done so only for one of two reasons, overfishing or pollution, both of which are the result of the Government policy.

Of course the Secretary of State does not want to accept the reality that pollution has anything to do with the problem because he might have to take action, not to avoid the North sea declaration of Ministers but to implement it. He has probably forgotten, but he said in his Bow Group speech:

> "This is a precautionary approach. But that is necessary much less often than is sometimes thought".

The idea is to act in advance of the problems caused by pollution on the basis that it may be the cause. But, says the Secretary of State, that is necessary much less often than is sometimes thought, and there is always the risk of taking the wrong action. Attacking the precautionary approach, the right hon. Gentleman says that the best approach will usually be to analyse the facts first and then take the appropriate science-based action. But he signed the declaration of North sea Ministers at a conference where he says that he took the lead, with the words:

> "Accepting that, in order to protect the North sea from possible damaging effects of the most dangerous substances, a precautionary approach is necessary which may require action to control inputs of substances even before a causal link has been established by absolutely clear scientific evidence".

What has changed since then? All that has changed is that the Prime Minister has made a speech in favour of the environment. Now the Secretary of State is repudiating the "precautionary approach" declaration that he signed.

Of course the right hon. Gentleman does not want to listen to what I am saying now. He is the most ignorant man in Parliament as well, and has turned up in place of his Under-Secretary. At least last week she had the courtesy to listen to what was being said by Opposition Members. [Interruption.] The hon. Member for Crawley must be thick, or he would not have been the Secretary of State's PPS.

[Mr. Roberts]

Perhaps the right hon. Gentleman did not read the declaration before he signed it. This is what he said to the Bow Group about the problems in the North sea:

"The North Sea is generally in good health although there are some black spots on the continental side."

He repeated that today. Page 38 of the North sea scientific and technical working group report, which is the background to the declaration that the Secretary of State signed, states that the highest levels of contaminants were consistently found in United Kingdom coastal waters of the North sea. What has that to do with black spots on the continental side?

The results of the 1985 baseline study on contamination in fish and shellfish in the north Atlantic, which was conducted by ISIS in co-operation with the Oslo and Paris commissions, were available in summary form in June 1987. They confirm the previous information on the distribution of contaminants in fish and shellfish in the area studies. Areas were identified as being more contaminated than others where concentrations in samples were found to be above the upper quartile. In the North sea such areas include for cadmium, the Firth of Forth; for copper, the Humber estuary and the central North sea; for lead, the southern bight of the North sea, the German Bight, and the north-east coast of England; for zinc the Firth of Forth and the north-east coast of England; for mercury the Oslo fjord and the Humber estuary; for arsenic—not exactly a nice substance for fish which we then eat—the Belgian and Netherland coasts, the German Bight, the central North sea and the Firth of Forth; and for organochlorine pesticides, the German Bight, Oslo fjord and Humber estuary. Yet, according to the Secretary of State, the North sea is generally back "in good health, although there are some black spots on the continental side". What hypocrisy. The facts show that the opposite is true.

Britain pollutes the North sea with massive river inputs: 2 million tonnes of colliery waste—we are one of the few countries which dumps such waste there—5 million tonnes of sewage sludge—we are the only North sea country that dumps it—and toxic liquid waste—all countries but Britain will comply with the directive on toxic waste and waste from the titanium industry by 1999. What have the Government done? What about the long pipe outfall? What is the Government's answer to titanium pollution in the Humber estuary? They give permission to extend the pipeline so that it goes into the North sea instead of the estuary. Toxic waste from sewerage systems flows through our rivers to the North sea, and there is pesticide and fertiliser pollution of the North sea.

There is a big row between the Department of the Environment and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on nitrates and nitrites. The Department of the Environment wants some nitrate-free areas declared, as recommended by the Select Committee, but there is a row.

Mr. Ridley: Total rubbish.

Mr. Roberts: If there is not some conflict between MAFF and the DoE, why have these measures not been implemented? Why can the Secretary of State not declare areas where nitrates and nitrites are outlawed? It is because of the farmers' lobby and MAFF. If that is not the case, it must be because the Government do not care about the environment and are reneging on their commitment in the declaration of the North sea conference. The Secretary of State should announce the areas. He has had 12 months since signing the North sea report. Why is he not announcing those areas?

Nitrates and nitrites get into the ground water, rivers, our drinking water and the North sea and other seas around Britain. Because they are fertilisers the photoplankton overgrow, flower and take oxygen out of the sea, killing fish and animals. That is another reason why seals find it difficult to exist in that hostile environment.

We dump massive amounts of industrial waste by ship every year and we incinerate 6,000 tonnes at sea. We shall continue to do so until 1994—long after other countries stop incineration at sea.

Mr. Ridley: Absolute rot.

Mr. Roberts: That is not rubbish. Again today the Secretary of State argued that we must have absolute scientific proof before we can take action, despite the precautionary approach that he put his name to. He argued that about emissions causing acid rain and refused to take action on that. Atmospheric inputs of sulphur and lead are the biggest source of pollution in the North sea. That pollution comes from power stations and industry in the United Kingdom, because the Government refuse to adopt a precautionary approach by joining the 30 per cent. club and doing anything about pollution. Britain is the only country that dumps fly ash from power stations into the North sea. We are the worst polluters of the North sea yet, to quote from the Secretary of State's speech to the Bow Group:

"Our commitment"—

notice the audacity of the Secretary of State, who represents this Government—

"goes far beyond just protecting British interests in our own environment but, more importantly, taking the lead in getting the other Governments in the world to accept their responsibilities."

That is rich, coming from this lot. They want to preach to the Scandinavians and to the rest of Europe about pollution of the environment.

A reasoned opinion was sent to the United Kingdom because the quality of water at Blackpool fell below EEC standards. On 10 June 1987 the European Commission began infringement proceedings under article 169 of the Treaty of Rome against the United Kingdom in 22 cases. It was decided to send a formal letter in 16 cases. These may, and some will, eventually lead to proceedings in the European Court of Justice, but the Secretary of State says that the United Kingdom Government intends to ensure that the other Governments of the world accept their responsibilities.

A reasoned opinion was sent to the United Kingdom because the quality of water at Formby and Southport falls well below EEC standards. A formal letter has been sent to the United Kingdom because of beach pollution in Cornwall and failure to designate Cornish beaches. Another formal letter has been sent to the United Kingdom regarding the absence of binding national legislation on drinking water. Excessive concentrations of nitrates and lead are measured only in three out of 12 months. There is a long list of cases where the Government have contravened EEC directives and legislation. They are way behind other countries. However, the Government say that they intend to ensure that all other Governments in the world accept their responsibilities.

I referred to the fact that the Government have announced two new environmental initiatives. First, there are the speeches of the Secretary of State for the Environment, which we can all read. They may help the paper recycling industry. He tells us that there is to be a nuclear power station in everybody's back garden—probably over the dead body of the Secretary of State for Energy who does not seem to agree with his right hon. Friend.

The other major environmental initiative, which is not new, is the Government's proposed privatisation of water. Compulsory metering trials are already taking place. The metering of water is a tax on bath time. It represents a tax on large families. [Interruption.] Conservative Members do not seem to realise that paying for water by meter will deter the elderly in particular from using water, in case they run up large bills. it will also deter large families from running up large bills. Conservative Members do not live in the real world, but that is the likely consequence of compulsory metering. It will be a tax on cleanliness and a tax on bath time.

Mr. Tim Devlin (Stockton, South): The average pensioner uses very little water in his home, whereas neighbours with children, several cars and other domestic appliances use a great deal of water. Therefore metering would be greatly to the advantage of most pensioners.

Mr. Roberts: Metering may save water but that does not mean that it will save money. The cost of installing pipes from reservoirs to houses is very high. Water is easy and cheap to supply, but it is expensive to distribute, unlike electricity which is expensive to produce but cheap to distribute. So if one uses twice as much water as someone else, it does not cost the water authority twice as much. It costs much the same, once the pipes have been laid and the taps put in. Therefore it would be wrong to charge people for water in the way that they are charged for electricity or gas, on the basis of how much they use. If people economise and stop using water to keep their bills low, it will not be long before, under this Government, there is a standing charge so that people can be got in the other way. We can be sure of that. There have been pilot schemes on metering in 11 areas and in only one area is there a Labour——

Mr. David Porter (Waveney): On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. Is the imposition of water metering, which is to be debated in the next Session of Parliament, a proper subject for today's debate?

Madam Deputy Speaker (Miss Betty Boothroyd): I must say I was looking at my notes. The answer is no, it is not the subject of today's debate.

Mr. Roberts: If it is not the subject of the debate now, it should not have been the subject of the debate when the Secretary of State was talking about proposals for water privatisation.

The Secretary of State spoke at great length about the National Rivers Authority. It is a company made by selling off water authorities—a move which will give the private sector a licence to print money, especially if we have compulsory metering as a result. What the Government have done, and they have heralded it as a great initiative, is to introduce a major proposal for nationalisation in order to facilitate a major proposal for privatisation. It is strange that Tory Back Benchers are accepting the National Rivers Authority, which is the equivalent of a water Property Services Agency, and a nationalised body and an organisation to control pollution and water undertakings—something that the Labour party has advocated for many years.

The Government have not acted for environmental reasons. I challenge the Secretary of State to deny that they could not have sold the water industry while the functions that are to be given to the National Rivers Authority were left with the water authorities. No capitalist or investor in his right mind would buy responsibility for cleaning up the Mersey or Blackpool beach, for flood and sea defences, or for navigation. All the environmentally necessary functions carried out by the water authorities and which do not make a profit have been hived off and nationalised so that the flotation of the water authorities—the right to print money and to meter—is an attractive proposition to the private sector.

Buying a water authority would not be an attractive proposition if the water authorities were too rigorously controlled by the National Rivers Authority. Having taken away the disincentive by setting up the authority, the Government will not reimpose it by giving the authority the powers and resources that it needs. In Committee, we shall be strengthening the National Rivers Authority to make sure that it does its job properly. That will mean that water privatisation is not as attractive a proposition as the Government imagine. The Government decided to set up the National Rivers Authority because they knew that they could not privatise water without taking that decision. It had nothing to do with their so-called concern for the environment.

Mr. Sydney Chapman (Chipping Barnet): Whenever I am fortunate enough to catch the eye of the occupant of the Chair to make a contribution in a debate about the environment, I like to, and am usually able to, say a few words of appreciation to the Opposition Member who has spoken before me, because I know that there are Back Benchers on both sides of the Chamber who are deeply interested in matters environmental. It gives me no comfort to say this, but I would be overstraining my goodwill and overstretching my imagination if I could find one word of approbation to utter about the contribution from the hon. Member for Bootle (Mr. Roberts).

It deeply saddens me to say this, because we were both members of the Select Committee on the Environment, which looked into this matter and prepared and delivered this report. During those discussions, there was all-party co-operation, and even the hon. Gentleman must realise that in our report we have made criticisms of Government and departmental policies, but we have also been balanced and recognised some of the great progress that has been made.

One of the most heartwarming things that we can all appreciate is that the public and politicians are taking a deeper interest and concern in our environment. When we are talking about the environment there can be no more important issue than pollution. Central to any Government's environment policies must be the containment, reduction and elimination of harmful pollutants. It was a privilege to be a member of the Select Committee on the Environment and I pay tribute to my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi) for bringing a combination of chairmanship skills and previous ministerial experience to the Committee. That Committee is fortunate to have him as Chairman.

There are three problems which must be faced when we discuss and determine policies to tackle pollution. First, it is essential to establish the indisputable facts and to get experts to agree on what is harmful. Even the experts disagree on that. While we should err on the side of caution and say that if the experts are undecided we should at least take precautionary measures, it may be easy for Opposition Members to say we should spend more money which might subsequently be wasted. That is not good enough. For example, disagreement has arisen over the discharge of sewage into the sea. Some experts claim that it is acceptable and environmentally preferable to discharge in that way.

Secondly, we have to agree what levels of pollution are acceptable. There again, experts disagree. For example, with regard to the European Community quality of drinking water directive, some experts claim that the level of 50 mg per litre standard for nitrate in drinking water is unnecessarily low. Subsequent research has shown that nitrates are not a possible cause of stomach cancer as was thought to be the case some years ago. I am not an expert, but I believe that politicians must consider those points.

The third problem is epitomised by the North sea. It is absolutely essential to get international agreement and co-ordination in plans to tackle pollution. Eight countries are particularly concerned about the quality of the North sea and they all have different perceptions. We must understand that the circulation of water in an anti-clockwise direction in a relatively shallow basin like the North sea means that we can export our pollution while pollution from continental countries largely remains in their part of the North sea. The British Government must understand why some continental countries are exercised by the problem. I was comforted by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's comments on that matter.

Since the Select Committee reported 18 months ago, events have moved on. There has been a general election, and last November there was the impetus of the second international conference on the protection of the North sea. We have also heard the Government's somewhat belated response to the Select Committee report and I share the view expressed by my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green about that. However, the conference and the Government's response are encouraging.

Of course, environmental groups outside the House claim that progress is too slow. Some people would say too little, too late. To say, "Well, they would wouldn't they?" would be a knee-jerk reaction. I want to pay tribute to some environmental groups which have helped us to give the environment a higher profile on the political stage. However, we must accept that some of the alarmist statements have proved to be unfounded at least so far as we can tell from the expert information available to us. For example, an international scientific and technical working group said that some of the criticisms were far too alarmist. However, there is a substantial difference in attitude between that of our country and that of the other continental countries, which are affected by the pollution in the North sea. We tend to advocate the environmental quality objective route in assessing the level of pollution but the other seven North sea states tend to go for the uniform emission standard. If we are to tackle those problems in a harmonious and effective way, we must try to reach a standard base from which we can monitor the various policies.

I believe that the Government policy and framework for international co-operation must be based upon three themes. First, we must ensure that there is adequate research and continuing monitoring of our rivers, estuaries and the seas around our isles. I welcome the announcement last Wednesday by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State, the Member for Surrey, South-West (Mrs. Bottomley) that there will be further funds for research into matters relating to the North sea. I shall make several points to back up my first theme. We need more research to find out whether there is a relationship between pollution and fish disease or, to be more precise, at what level that pollution becomes harmful. We need to discover more exactly the effect of sewage and sludge that is put into the sea, because experts disagree on the effects. We need to continue to promote research into the possibility of converting the sludge into fuel oil, animal feedstuffs or into products for the building industry, although I accept that incineration would still appear to be the best option for disposal. We need to discover whether there is an overall build-up effect of pollutants in our rivers, estuaries and seas. More research needs to be carried out into the deleterious effects of the build-up of the enormous increase in nutrients—nitrogen and phosphorous—in our rivers. We certainly need better monitoring of and more accurage statistics on oil pollution from ships and oil rigs.

The second theme that must form the framework of our policies is unambiguous management plans. I welcome the action already taken on the Thames, which has undergone a considerable clean up. No one is saying that the water flowing through the Thames is absolutely pure, but there has been a dramatic improvement in our home estuary. We must continue with that policy in every river and estuary, as well as in the North sea. The hon. Member for Bootle is being churlish in condemning or criticising what I believe are imaginative and committed plans to spend £4 billion in cleaning up the Mersey basin on a rolling programme, which must inevitably take a number of years. I hope that at least in 20 years' time we shall see the benefits of that programme.

Mr. Allan Roberts: They are not spending £4 billion in cleaning up the Mersey, they are spending £2·5 billion. The remaining amount is being spent on various sorts of property development or environmental improvements. They are not spending it on cleaning up the Mersey, but on taking out the sewage. I welcome that, but it is being turned into sewage sludge and then dumped back from whence it came. That is not solving the problem at all.

Mr. Chapman: The hon Gentleman's intervention beggars belief. OK, £2·5 billion is being allocated, but what was the commitment of the previous Labour Government, if he wants to trade party political insults across the Floor?

Mr. Roberts: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Chapman: No, I shall not give way again.

I will correct the hon. Gentleman, too, on his other point, because some of the £1·5 billion that will be used for cleaning up the land—the hon. Gentleman talks about property development—will also have a beneficial effect. If taking sewage out of the Mersey basin will not make a contribution to cleaning it up, I frankly do not know what will. I cannot agree with him on that matter.

Mr. Roberts rose——

Mr. Chapman: No, I will not give way again.

In short, we need co-ordinated and publicly understood plans to conserve our marine environment and to improve river quality. In the past, legislation has been far too piecemeal. It was generally unknown to the public, if not to the authorities, and it was ineffective.

It would be churlish not to welcome the Government's response to the Committee's report published in June. Frankly, of all the reports that I have read and of all the Committees on which I have sat, I believe that the Government's response to the Environment Committee's report was one of their most positive and least defensive.

There must be a programme to tackle the increasing pollution from farms and sewage works. It is unsatisfactory that, in 1987, 20 per cent. of sewage treatment works breached their discharge consent conditions and incidents of agricultural pollution increased by 13 per cent.

To continue their programme the Government must ensure adequate funds to deal with sewage treatment. They will need to impose greater statutory controls on agricultural pollution. They must have more adequate regulations to control industrial discharge and oil and chemical storage. They must also encourage the designation of water protection zones to control nitrate leaching from farmland. I also believe that details of discharges from sewers should be entered on public registers.

I congratulate the Government on taking immediate action to deal with the decimation of the common seal population as a result of a virus. My mind has boggled as I have tried to discover how the Government could be expected to activate section 3 of the Conservation of Seals Act 1970 before the virus took hold. We did not know about it until it happened. Research must continue to understand why that virus occurred.

I am grateful for the opportunity of making what I hope was a modest, but constructive contribution to this debate concerning a most critical aspect of our environment.

1.11 pm

Mr. Simon Hughes (Southwark and Bermondsey): I am grateful that we are having this debate and, before the hon. Gentleman for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi) escapes, may I say that I am grateful to him and his Committee for their work, which was well done. The report has ensured that the environment is now on the political agenda. I agree that it was sad that we did not have this debate more quickly after the report was published.

As a constructive suggestion for the Minister to consider, I believe that it would be extremely good if, as a matter of practice, we had an annual day or series of days, in Government time, to debate environmental issues. We have a series of days of debate after the Queen's Speech and after the Budget. I believe that it would be helpful if the Government gave an annual statement on the condition of the national and international environment. During such a debate, we could also discuss the appropriate Select Committee reports. That would ensure that time does not pass by with matters being neglected and put on the shelf.

If we had such a specific debate, certain matters could be interlinked. Last week we debated nuclear waste and today we are debating the sea, estuarial and river pollution. What we do about regulatory authorities and pollution control inspectorates relates not only to marine and river matters, but to the land. I hope that the Under-Secrtary will consider that as a positive suggestion —she has heard me say similar things before. In conjuction with the Leader of the House, the Department of the Environment could arrange our business in such a way for the coming year.

Whatever the Secretary of State or Ministers may say, the background to the debate is our reputation as the environmentally dirty man of Europe. I trust that all hon. Members agree with me that that is an unfortunate reputation and one which we should not have. That description is not used only by the Opposition parties as an attack on the Government. The outgoing European environment commissioner, who is British, criticised Britain for dragging its feet in comparison with the other 11 Community states.

I am not over concerned about going over the past 10, 20 or 30 years, but I am concerned that we make the best of the political opportunities that we have and try to deal with what is still defective in our system of improving and regulating the environment.

I want to alert the House to some matters that I believe to be the most important items on the agenda. The first point, which is general, is that when we pass legislation, we must not fail to implement it year after year. The Control of Pollution Act was passed in 1974 but, as the Select Committee stated—the point has been made often—some of its provisions came into force belatedly. For example, the provisions on the regulation of water and the water environment came into force in 1985. Some provisions are still not in force. I ask the Minister to ensure that the remaining provisions of that Act are implemented.

I was in Southampton a week or two ago, discussing the environment of Southampton water, which is affected substantially in two ways. First, there is the discharge into the water of sewage from the boating, sailing and trade activities on the water. Secondly, there is the proposed building of Fawley B power station. The provisions in the Control of Pollution Act that allow control over the discharge of sewage from private sailing vessels have not been implemented. The result is that all the vessels moored in the marina in Southampton water—which is now called Ocean Village—are allowed to continue to pollute the water regularly. Great use is made of Southampton water, but the beaches along it cannot be used because they are filthy as a result of domestic sewage discharges—although that has been stopped recently by Southern Water—and discharges from vessels. We must ensure that legislation that we intend to be implemented does not remain unenforced.

Since the second world war, Governments of both parties have not considered environmental issues to be matters that need to be given prominence. We may be moving into a new age, as is happening elsewhere in Europe, and I welcome the possibility that environmental matters may become prominent. However, there is anxiety when regulation is increasingly handed over to combinations of public and private agencies, rather than being left with the public sector. The thrust of the free market economic climate is that people who are out for profit will often seek to take short cuts to maximise profits. Enforcing environmental controls does not increase profit.

The Select Committee makes that clear in its conclusions and recommendations, of which I shall read one example, dealing with the control of polluters. Recommendation 11 states:

"It would give us cause for very real alarm if the present water pollution inspectorate (or a new unified and independent regulatory body) were not given adequate staffing, resources and the necessary powers to oversee the activities of a privatised water industry."

I shall read one more appropriate quotation on the same subject from a report given to the Department of the Environment in 1986 by Professor Littlechild. It says:

"the level of environmental standards prescribed will directly affect the prices charged and-or the proceeds of flotation."

The inevitable truth of privatisation is that as environmental standards become the responsibility of privatised companies, the cost of compliance becomes higher and it becomes more difficult to sell the product.

In our last debate on water pollution before we debate the water privatisation Bill I ask the Government not to go back and reduce the commitments that they want the privatised companies to make. I am opposed to privatising water—I make no bones about that—but I say to the Government that if they are determined to go ahead and to introduce legislation—and it is likely to succeed—we must ensure that the people running the water industry pay the cost of ensuring that it is run properly. It is not acceptable to allow them to make profits at the expense of our environment.

Examples of people making profit in the private sector and of the enforcement mechanisms not working are legion: the dumping of toxic waste at sea and the dumping of liquid industrial waste are prime instances. We dump 250,000 tonnes a year. We have discussed dumping on land in the past, too. Fly tipping is incredibly difficult to regulate; it is done by private companies that try to avoid enforcement. I have taken that up with the Department previously. On land and sea the private sector will often try to avoid control, and there is no point in merely appealing to it to be responsible. Often, it is not.

Like the hon. Member for Chipping Barnet (Mr. Chapman), I pay tribute to the help we receive from international and European standard setting. One of the inconsistencies in the Prime Minister's approach is that although she spoke about climatological matters she maintained that we cannot have more directives from Brussels, yet the bathing waters directive and the directive on the amount of nitrate in water have helped us pull our socks up and improve our standards. Without the European Community and its legislation we would not have such good targets.

The same applies to intergovernmental activity, although it is not quite the same. We were all challenged by the North sea conference—London was the second; there is to be a third—to do better. That is good. We must not set our face against the imposition of standards from abroad. Other nations often have far higher standards than ours.

I want to say two things about the forthcoming privatisation of the water industry. Although it is better than nothing, I have always been sceptical about whether the National Rivers Authority will be the appropriate way of regulating that industry. I have always thought it better to strengthen the existing pollution inspectorate. The division of responsibility between the two agencies may contain a danger. Pollution control would be better off in the hands of one regulatory agency with all the necessary resources. We need to ensure that these agencies have the necessary resources and that all the other pollution control agencies do, too. Their numbers, facilities and opportunities to do their job properly must not be cut. We need a better-funded group of officials in all these agencies—however they are established—so that the standards that we set in law are observed in practice. It is no good falling short of what we say we shall do.

Our agricultural pollution is a good example of the deficiency; many instances of it have been given in the debate. There is clear, indisputable evidence of it. Sadly, our farming industry—for industry it is—has been increasingly guilty of pollution, especially of water pollution. I am sure that the Minister has read the evidence and accepted the failures pointed out by the Select Committee. Last year, after that Committee reported, farmers were responsible for 60 per cent. more serious pollution incidents than in the previous year, when the then Minister of State at the Ministry of Agriculture, the right hon. Member for Suffolk, Coastal (Mr. Gummer) said that farmers would have to be brought to heel. Yet still there is not enough regulation, control, enforcement, inspection and monitoring. It is not good enough for farmers or industrialists to go on discharging liquid sludge, sewage or anything else directly or indirectly into our water. They must be held responsible for their actions.

There has been a tradition in Britain of expecting a good environment in certain parts of the country but going along with a less good environment in others. People in some parts of Britain have suffered bad environments, including marine ones, for too long. I refer to our industrial areas, some of the old traditional ports and some areas that are due to be developed.

I was brought up in south Wales and know the area well. When I was there a few weeks ago people complained to me that that was where the Karin B might have landed. The Minister is aware of that. There is still all sorts of unauthorised marine activity in the docks and harbours around Port Talbot. Much of that involves the discharging and loading of toxic material, some of which inevitably gets into the water of the harbours, ports and estuaries.

We must make sure that every area of Britain is entitled to the same good standards. That means enforcement by Customs and Excise and the provision of proper resources, and harbour commissioners must do their job properly. When I was in Teignmouth in Devon I saw a prospective development which would kill off mussel beds that are among the most productive on the south coast. It would also ruin some of the best fishing on the south coast. Commercial exploitation brings in its wake commercial degradation.

We must be careful not to spoil our marine environment by the current trend of exploiting every opportunity for a marina or a development site. We must guard against that, whether it is in Cardiff bay, the London docklands, a development corporation area elsewhere, or at smaller harbours and ports. Such developments often have harmful effects on the marine environment and on its productivity.

Thirdly, sea pollution is still horrendous. Although we may now be getting to grips with the problem in the North sea, the Irish sea is severely polluted. In the summer I restrained myself from making any comment about the link between the seal deaths and pollution. I did not put out a statement during the summer recess, because I was not satisfied that pollution was the cause of the deaths. However, it is clear that the more polluted the water the more endangered are the species in the water. People have a great sympathy for creatures that live in our marine environment and they have a need for the fish. We have a duty to push forward speedily to improve the standard of our seas.

Just after the seal epidemic, the London dumping convention met and the Danes proposed a ban on toxic waste incineration at sea. They wanted that ban within a year but, sad to say, Britain and the United States argued that the ban should not come into force until 1994. We must not always argue for the longest time. We should argue for the shortest, and if industry has to adapt, so be it. Just after the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for the Environment made their speeches in Brighton, we read that water pollution rules are to be relaxed for privatisation. I do not know whether that is still the policy of the Department, but it was reported less than a month ago,

"that the Department of Environment intends to tackle the problem by introducing 'temporary variation consents' for the sewage works which are at fault. This will mean giving the offending works a dispensation from current performance standards, removing any liability to prosecution.

The reprieve is expected to stand until the end of 1991.".

It is not acceptable in the interests of a short-term gain to prejudice our maritime environment in the medium and long term. I hope that the Minister can assure us that there will be no such relaxation in order to gain a better price for the sale of the water industry.

Although in general we have clean and good quality rivers—that is clear from the report—in the last few years river quality has declined. It has declined not phenomenally but noticeably and clearly, and that is obvious from analytical assessment. River quality standards are well monitored and the figures are well known. Sadly, we have seen a slipping back in river quality over the country as a whole. That must be reversed, as must the damage to our beaches, which is often a consequence, as the Secretary of State rightly admitted, of inadequate control of the discharge of sewage. As he also said, the problem will not go away and, like nuclear waste, it must be dealt with.

We must first ensure that we comply with the best international standards and do not always seek to delay their implementation or seek derogations as we have done in the past. We must be seen to be up front and arguing for the best standards for this country. Secondly, the Government must provide the financial resources for research, monitoring, inspection and enforcement. Without those, our comments here and any legislation that we pass will be as nothing.

Thirdly, as the hon. Member for Newcastle-under-Lyme (Mr. Golding) and other hon. Members have said, if people are given licences to carry on activities with the potential to pollute, we must ensure from the outset that they do not cause pollution. It is too late to pay when the damage is done.

I hope that this will be our last piecemeal debate about a belated Select Committee report. I hope, too, that the environment issue will be put in its proper central place in the business of the Government and the House. I hope that we can debate the state of the environment with the proper facts, up-to-date statistics and Government responses at our fingertips, and so do a better job for our environment in the future than, sad to say, the Government have done in the past.

Mr. Michael Lord (Suffolk, Central): As one who made the environment one of the main topics of his maiden speech, in 1983 I am delighted to see it so firmly on the political agenda now, and not a moment too soon. In 1983, I said that

"our generation, with with the industrial processes and waste products that we have created, has in its power, as never before, either to preserve and enhance our environment for future generations, or, possibly, to ruin it beyond repair." —[Official Report, 4 November 1983; Vol. 47, c. 1120.]

We are all aware of the environmental deterioration that has occurred, ever since 1983, on so many fronts, and the present intiatives are welcome.

The environment is a huge subject and even the title of today's debate is quite wide-ranging, but I want to confine my remarks to our beaches and seas. I must declare an interest. Like many other hon. Members, I have a deep and abiding love of the sea, established during childhood, and, as a family, we holiday in Anglesey. I spend a great deal of time in the Irish sea. I spend time swimming in it and sailing on it, and, as I sail a small dinghy and am not a small man, I frequently find myself in it yet again. The Secretary of State did not mention swimming. Swimming is important because no other activity brings one into quite such close contact with the sea. It is a recreation enjoyed by all, both young and old, and is one of our great national traditions.

My contact with the sea has made me acutely conscious of the condition of our beaches and seas. In an ideal world, man would not put any of his waste products into the sea, but we must accept that, at least for the foreseeable future, much of our sewage will have to be disposed of in that way. However, we do not have to accept beaches contaminated with sewage simply because of the old Victorian systems involving outfalls which are too short and treatment which is inadequate. The Secretary of State said that outfalls were two or three kilometres in length. That is fine, but I am talking about those outfalls which I know well and which are at most 200 to 300 ms in length. I can assure hon. Members that they do not do their job adequately.

I look forward to the day when imaginative measures can be brought forward so that we do not have to put our sewage out to sea. It is immensely expensive and causes many difficulties if we keep our sewage on shore but, if we put our minds to it, I hope that the day will come when we can avoid putting our sewage into the sea. This should be given the highest possible priority. I welcome the Government's initiatives and I urge them to press on with them as hard as they can.

Certain problems beset the North sea and I wish to consider the solutions that are being proposed. One of the principal problems is the contamination that is being caused by heavy metals—including mercury, cadmium, lead, chromium, zinc, copper, nickel and arsenic—that are deposited in the North sea from a variety of sources.

[Mr. Michael Lord]

Rivers are the most important single source, but the metals come also from the atmosphere, direct discharge, dumped dredgings, industrial dumping and sewage sludge. To reduce the quantities of these metals in the North sea, a number of important measures were agreed upon at last year's North sea conference. I shall dwell on these measures for a short while because I wish to express some doubts and concerns about precisely how they will work and possible side effects. It is not my purpose to be critical of them.

It is proposed that there should be a reduction of about 50 per cent. in the dangerous substances entering the North sea through rivers by 1995. How do we control the dangerous substances that enter rivers in the first place? Some can be identified at source in, for example, a factory, and others can be removed at sewage treatment plants. However, many of them find their way into our rivers via a variety of routes, including domestic and agricultural ones, that are impossible to control.

Is it our intention to remove 50 per cent. of each metal or 50 per cent. overall? Some metals are more dangerous than others, and that is a most important consideration. Our difficulties are compounded when we find that only one eighth of cadmium, an especially nasty metal, comes to the North sea from rivers. The vast majority of it comes from the atmosphere. If we reduce the quantity which arrives from rivers, we reduce the total by one sixteenth. I am not saying that it is unimportant to do what we plan to achieve. I am merely trying to get things in perspective.

We plan to end the dumping in the North sea of harmful industrial waste by the end of 1989. That is excellent news for the North sea, but how and where do we plan to dispose of that which is now being dumped in the sea? Similarly, it is planned to end the dumping of incinerated waste in the North sea by 1994. This is welcome news, but what alternative routes and measures will be used? It has already been stressed by many of those who have contributed to the debate that an overall plan is needed. It is no good merely transferring a problem from one area to another.

A ceiling is being set at 1987 levels for contaminants in sewage sludge. Why is it being set at 1987 levels? Surely they are too high. Are we not authorising unacceptably high levels?

I am conscious that the questions I am posing may not be met by simple answers, and I do not expect them to be answered today. Other hon. Members have asked important questions and these need properly to be addressed if we are eventually to solve the problem satisfactorily. We need to know precisely what substances are polluting and in what quantities from precisely which sources. We need to know which sources can be controlled and which cannot. It is important that we should know which sources or industrial processes are vital and which are not. Are people prepared to change their life styles and purchases, if need be, to reduce pollution? That question leads us on to bans, for example.

I have mentioned already my relationship with the Irish sea. I shall be lighthearted for a moment, although this is a serious topic. I swim daily when on holiday, and I have heard the Irish sea described as the most radioactive sea in the world. I wondered for a while whether I was going to add a new meaning to the expression "a healthy glow".

Much has been done at Sellafield but much more needs to be done. I welcome the suggestion that a detailed report should be prepared on the condition of the Irish sea overall that identifies further action that may need to be taken. Above all, it is necessary that there should be a new spirit of determination—a mental leap—among all concerned not to consider the problem in terms only of how much our rivers and seas can tolerate before we do them too much harm, but, on the other side of the coin, how we can make them as fresh and clear as they were years ago. That is surely something at which, in this day and age, an affluent society such as ours should be able to aim.

I hope that I have not sounded critical of the Government's initiatives because that was not my intention. I greatly applaud them, and I am delighted and relieved that we are now addressing these crucial topics so vigorously. There is much still to do, and many of us will closely follow with great interest the progress made.

1.40 pm

Mr. Peter Pike (Burnley): I am glad that we are having a debate on the Select Committee's report. As a member of that Committee, I have said on a number of occasions that the report should be debated. I pressed the Government for an indication of when they would make the response that the Committee's chairman said today was taking rather longer than was wished.

When I commented that the report was good, the Secretary of State for the Environment, in his normal way, commented that he would determine whether or not it was a good report. I was glad that when he spoke today, he went further and called it excellent. As for the Secretary of State's performance, I have often advised him to take up painting, believing that he is a better painter than he is a Secretary of State. As yet, he has not taken my advice.

The report deals with many important matters, but the Select Committee deliberately avoided becoming involved in the privatisation issue, which we shall anyway debate at length when the new Session begins later this month. Nevertheless, some of the problems confronting water authorities could have been tackled without going in that direction. I welcome the establishment of the National Rivers Authority and the separation of responsibilities that it will bring, and which would have been necessary even if the water industry had remained in the public sector —which, as one totally opposed to privatisation, I should have preferred. One can argue about the NRA's functions and whether it will have sufficient powers and be adequately staffed, but the principle is sound and it will improve the situation.

Finance is at the root of the problems facing the water industry. I believe that that could be tackled by the industry remaining in the public sector. Chart 1 on page 17 of the third report shows, using constant 1985-86 prices, an expenditure peak of about £850 million in 1975-76, and thereafter a fall. One expected the Secretary of State to pounce on that aspect and to question why expenditure had dropped. In examining the period between 1974 and 1979, one must look back a little further to the previous four years and to some of the financial problems that the then Labour Government inherited, which had been stoked up by the immediately preceding Conservative Government between 1970 and 1974.

However, it is no use just looking back. If we look forward to 1990-91, we see that the comparable figure will have reached about £600 million annually, so we shall still not be spending as much. Yet this week we heard the Chancellor speaking in glowing terms of the country's economic prosperity and well-being. Water authorities also have problems involving mains and sewer pipes, for instance, which require much more expenditure.

In the annual report for 1987-88, the chairman of the North-West water authority said:

"Contrary to some national and regional speculation, after a financial re-structure North-West Water PLC will have the scope and strength, progress record, resources and capability to ensure a successful future alongside the world's best water service businesses."

I have my doubts. I do not say that because I am a critic of the water authority; in many respects it does an excellent job, but it has not the freedom to borrow on the commercial market. It must deal with its finances on an annual basis, and it suffers from the Government's apparent difficulty in differentiating between capital expenditure and revenue expenditure, and their failure at times to accept that capital expenditure has revenue implications for future years. The report seems to have been largely an attempt to achieve publicity in preparation for privatisation. If it had examined some of the problems facing the water authority, it would have presented a very different picture. A report from the water authority about the sewage works, published by the chief scientist's department, shows the problems facing the authority and the large sums needed to put them right.

Agricultural pollution is a major problem in some parts of the country. The Chairman of the Committee put it mildly when he said that we were disappointed at the response from the Ministry of Agriculture to our questioning. We are still concerned. When I asked the Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food about nitrates and protection zones only the other week, he replied:

"We have not yet reached any conclusions and before we do we shall consult various bodies. We look forward to finalising those conclusions in the relatively near future."—[Official Report, 20 October 1988; Vol. 138, c. 992.]

That is only one aspect of the problem, and we should like more positive action. Silage and slurry, for instance, must be dealt with as rapidly as possible.

We all know why the North-West water authority has the biggest problems in the world and the Mersey basin is the most polluted river basin in Europe. The problem is historical; the industrial revolution happened in that area, and we have not done enough to deal with the problems over the years. The failure to deal with them is, of course, just as much the fault of the Labour party as that of the present Government, but the Government now have money coming in like mad, as the Chancellor was able to tell us earlier this week. If we wanted to tackle the position we could, but the Government have an obsession with cutting public expenditure rather than dealing with the massive problems in the North-West water authority area.

We all want the Mersey basin project to be completed, but it will be some years before the work is done. As my hon. Friend the Member for Bootle said, we visited the work at Sandon docks where there is no final stage of treatment. If the works were built at Manchester and the waste was to be disposed of at sea, there would be another stage of treatment. It is unacceptable in 1988 that there is no final stage. It may be provided—the position will be monitored—but, for financial reasons, it has not been provided. We must consider closely the whole question of dumping at sea.

The hon. Member for Chipping Barnet (Mr. Chapman) made interesting comments and positive proposals. He was always positive in his approach to problems during the Select Committee's inquiry. North-West Water has recently been taken to court by Derbyshire county council about pollution in the river Goyt. The right hon. Member for Woking (Mr. Onslow) said that we did not want to see authority after authority taken to the courts as a solution. But if the problems are not tackled that is how we must apply pressure. We want action taken to deal with the problem.

We shall oppose privatisation. We recognise that the majority of Conservative Members are heedless of the consequences, but if the legislation is forced through, it is vital that we write protection of quality and supply into it. I hope that hon. Members will at least unite on those important aspects. We can argue and we shall divide like mad on the question of private or public ownership, but surely every hon. Member will be anxious to do everything possible to ensure that we reduce pollution and provide the best possible quality of water.

The danger with privatisation is that the lower the standards, the higher the price that the Government can make from privatisation. When we consider these issues I hope that we shall all recognise that if water must be privatised it is crucial to ensure that the regulatory powers and all provisions dealing with these important matters are drawn as tightly as possible, so that by the end of this century we shall have removed the problems of pollution from which we have suffered for too long, certainly in our industrial regions, and we shall have the best possible quality of water supply.

Mr. Keith Mans (Wyre): I have a few remarks to make about the control and disposal of sewage and, more specifically, our intensive use of disposal at sea.

As my right hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi) said, we are becoming increasingly isolated in Europe in using the sea as a way of disposing of sewage. There may come a time when that form of disposal is no longer acceptable. That point bears heavily on schemes which are coming up soon for just such disposal and I have a particular interest in the subject.

The hon. Member for Bootle (Mr. Roberts) mentioned the scheme that North-West Water has come up with for cleaning up the Fylde beaches and disposing of the sewage there. It is welcome that the proposal has been made. Wyre borough council and other local councils in the area have applied pressure for many years and I am pleased that, after extensive consultation and much research, the water authority has made the proposal.

Unfortunately, the long sea outfall proposal is controversial for two reasons. There is doubt about whether sufficient treatment will be given to the sewage before it reaches the pipeline. It is also controversial because it is a sea disposal proposal, rather than a proposal to dispose of sewage inland. Moreover, it is one of the first major proposals to be made, following publication of the Select Committee's report.

It is important that the pollution inspectorate should carry out a fully independent inquiry into the proposal.

[Mr. Keith Mans]

The hon. Member for Bootle referred to public and independent inquiries. I use the word "independent" because I want the scheme to go ahead sooner rather than later, but I am a little apprehensive about the public inquiry procedure. It goes on for too long. If there were to be a public inquiry, the proposal, which is very important for the Fylde, might be delayed. I want an indepenent inquiry, but I also want the scheme to go ahead as soon as possible.

It is important that the inquiry should be seen to be independent. That will reassure my constituents and others who live elsewhere in the Fylde that North-West Water's proposals have been looked at by a separate body and that the words and evidence of North-West Water have not been taken just as they stand. My constituents want the evidence to be scrutinised.

The inquiry ought to address specific issues, including whether the sewage is being sufficiently treated before it goes into the pipeline. It must also analyse carefully North-West Water's tidal surveys, carried out when it first made the proposal. I know that it conducted extensive work on tidal surveys. There is a highly sophisticated computer model to prove it, but the survey evidence that North-West Water accumulated to construct that model needs to be closely considered.

The independent inquiry should also examine the effect of pollution on fish. Fishing is very important in the Irish sea. We must ensure that the pipeline does not result in a build-up of bacteria. I hope that the comments of my right hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green about the effect of viruses in the sea and the fact that not all of them may be killed off straight away will be taken into account.

The inquiry should take into account, too, the effect of heavy metals. My hon. and learned Friend the Member for Blackpool, North (Mr. Miscampbell) made the good point that it is important to find a way to prevent heavy metals getting into the sewerage system in the first place. Once they are there, it is difficult to get rid of them before they are deposited in the sea.

The inquiry ought also to consider alternatives to the sea pipeline scheme. Various inland alternatives have been suggested by North-West Water, but they suffer from various disadvantages, one of which is that sooner or later the effluent will have to be deposited in a river—for instance, the river Wyre. That may eventually prove to be a less desirable alternative than the sea outfall pipe. The proposal should be analysed by an independent body, as should any other scheme or combination of schemes that might be put forward.

The assessment should take place under the new guidelines for the assessment of long sea outfalls. I understand that the pollution inspectorate wrote this document recently. I urge my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to make it available in the Commons Library so that those who are involved in this scheme and others will know exactly under what guidelines long sea outfalls will be assessed.

Privatisaton will have an effect on the functions that I have mentioned. There will be much more public awareness of the fact that water authority schemes will be assessed independently after privatisation. It will not be a case of one public authority looking at another public authority's way of doing things. It will be a case of a properly regulated authority looking at something that a company in the private sector will do. and that will be a much more effective way of ensuring that what goes on in the private sector is correct and in the best interests of consumers generally.

Furthermore, privatisation will encourage our water authorities, companies or plcs—whatever they become—to market their proposals more effectively, to inform the public in their area of the various aspects of their policies in terms that the public can understand. It has been noticeable with recent privatisations how much more aware those recently privatised companies have become of the need to inform the general public of what they do. British Airways and the British Airports Authority are just two shining examples of how companies can work much better after privatisation.

Pipeline proposals of the sort I have mentioned are controversial. Therefore, it is important that even greater scrutiny of them is made when a decision is taken by a water authority to use that method to dispose of sewage. Any assessment must be made under the new guidelines that the pollution inspectorate has recently drawn up. The Select Committee's report makes it clear that the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Department of the Environment need to demonstrate, by public report, and through thorough investigation, the best practical environmental option for sewage sludge and sewage disposal before a scheme can go ahead. I sincerely hope that that will take place with the North-West water scheme and with any future schemes.

2.2 pm

Mr. David Hinchliffe (Wakefield): As a Yorkshirewoman, Madam Deputy Speaker, you will probably know the old rhyme,

"The girls of Castleford are so fair,
Because they wash in the Calder and rinse in the Aire."

That has not happened in recent times. Any young woman who did such a thing now would be bathing in class 4 toxic mixes of effluents, chemicals, bugs and other items that I would not like to mention.

I have lived within a few hundred yards of the river Calder for most of my life—in fact, it runs at the bottom of my garden. I am deeply concerned about the way that I was brought up, which was to regard the river as something to fear, and as a river that one should not bathe in, nor even go near. It was odd that it was described as a river, because it was a mix of filth going through the centre of Wakefield. That complacency, that acceptance of the state of rivers is becoming, fortunately, a thing of the past. It encourages me to talk to many young people in my area, who are deeply concerned about environmental issues and the pollution of rivers.

The hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi) and the Secretary of State both spoke about the crucial "poacher turned gamekeeper" point. This was brought home to me vividly when, as the chairman of the local economic committee on Wakefield council a couple of years ago, I visited a factory in the Castleford area. This company is a major polluter of the river Aire, and I asked its management about consents and they openly admitted that they breached consent on a regular and frequent basis, with the knowledge of the Yorkshire water authority. They told me that the Yorkshire water authority was a far worse polluter of that stretch of river.

I am concerned to highlight one or two points about Yorkshire Water that are of deep concern to the people in my area. The record of the water authority needs to be mentioned. In its area, the extent of the problem is serious, with 300 miles of class 3 river and 90 miles of class 4, including that running through my constituency.

The important point, which has underpinned much of today's debate, is that only five of the 25 major water treatment works run by Yorkshire water authority meet European Commission standards. The pollution problem stems largely from the Yorkshire water authority. I have more up-to-date figures than my hon. Friend the Member for Bootle (Mr. Roberts). They show that last year the Yorkshire water authority broke the pollution inspectorate's consents at sewage works 83 times. YWA waterworks broke consents nine times and there was a staggering total of 811 known breaches of consent in the Yorkshire water authority area last year. That is very worrying because the complacency underpinning the present arrangements can be seen from the figures that I have quoted and from those referred to by other hon. Members today.

I am concerned that nationally 1,000 sewage treatment works breached consents on more than 5 per cent. of the occasions on which samples were taken. A quarter of the main sewage works in England and Wales failed to meet the legal standards. Yet, according to a parliamentary answer that I received in May, there have been no prosecutions of water authorities by the Department of the Environment. My hon. Friend the Member for Bootle gave the latest figures, which were supplied to me in a written answer in July. That showed that only 35 convictions nationally were obtained for breaches of consent in 1986, which is the last year for which figures are available. Total fines for that year were a minimal £20,000. The £2,000 maximum was used only once.

My point is that the polluting companies are laughing all the way to the bank. They have the money and they are making the profits at the expense of our environment in areas like Yorkshire. The Secretary of State's response was very interesting in relation to the poacher-gamekeeper concept. Is it good enough for the Government to claim, in defence of the position, the kind of case presented by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment the hon. Member for Lewisham, East (Mr. Moynihan) in a written answer in July when he told me

"where major investment is involved, it takes time to bring works up to standard and, in the Government's view, there is little to be gained by prosecution"—[Official Report, 25 July 1988; Vol. 138, c. 56.]

If a baker sold poisonous food and made people ill, would we accept as an excuse the fact that he did not have the money to invest to bring his bakery up to proper standards? The Government's response is nonsense.

After years of financial constraints, water authorities are moving rapidly towards privatisation. I have taken a close look at Yorkshire water authority's record on pollution control. I was interested to note that YWA recorded almost a 40 per cent. increase in after-interest profits last year, making £81·5 million. Is not that surprising, when we consider the lack of investment in areas in which it should be investing? The reason why the Government place such emphasis on the returns is that they are making the authorities attractive to investors after privatisation. Is it nonsense for the Secretary of State to claim that the authorities are public bodies. We all know that in areas such as Yorkshire the authorities are run as private companies.

It has been common knowledge for some time that, behind the scenes, water authorities have been urging the Government to go easy on the pollution question to ensure a smooth passage into private hands. I believe that the pollution of our environment is too important an issue to be left to simple party politicking. I hope that we all accept that. If anyone believes that selling off water will do anything other than markedly worsen the pollution issue, they are living on cloud nine. That is like claiming that the privatisation of the pits will improve safety. We all know that that is nonsense. It is ironic that the principle of a National Rivers Authority was effectively imposed on the Government by the European Commission because of its deep concerns about the lack of provision for pollution issues within the Government's proposals. I firmly believe that we share our environment with many other species. The rivers and the streams are the veins and the life blood of the earth, and it is in our interests, and those of future generations, to look after our waterways. We poison them at our peril.

2.9 pm

Mr. David Porter (Waveney): Locally, we have a great affection for the North sea, a fear and a respect for it, but nationally we have a kind of love-hate relationship with it. We use it, exploit it and abuse it, but suddenly the loss of a trawler, the Piper Alpha disaster or the floods of 1953 remind us quickly and dramatically of its power and impact. There is at present a feeling among the public that the North sea is becoming a toxic time bomb, which at some time in the future will again remind us of its devastating power. That opinion may be given without scientific evidence, it might not square with the comments made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, and it is a sort of knee-jerk reaction, but it is felt by people throughout the country. Their confidence must be regained. I welcome the statement by my right hon. Friend, which I hope will go a long way towards achieving that. However, what was missing from his statement was a proposal to have a more combined departmental approach, because the North sea involves some 20 agencies and Departments of State, including MAFF, Energy, Environment, the DTI and Employment.

The use of the North sea encompasses so many facets of our lives. The public expects to be able to have confidence in the food chain. One would have to travel far to enjoy better value and a more nutritious meal than North sea cod and chips. Of course, with quotas as they are, one may have to go a long way to find British cod, but that is another argument. Housewives, fishermen and my constituents must not lose any confidence in that cycle of marine food or they will never come back.

The people who holiday, use our beaches and swim in our seas—as my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, Central (Mr. Lord) has mentioned—must not lose confidence. My hon. Friend the Minister responsible for tourism assured me in Parliamentary answers last week that there is no evidence of a loss of confidence. I hope that that is right, but the warning bell has been sounded. A diving group in Waveney has expressed concerns, as too have shore anglers and swimmers. I hope that my hon. Friends understand that confidence is the key—confidence in action based on facts. We have debated already today the danger of knee-jerk legislation without scientific evidence, such as the argument that seals died this year, whales will die next year and, therefore, we must legislate. As we cannot legislate against the viruses, we legislate against every person who uses the North sea. It is the same with any natural disaster. There are those who always want a man-made scapegoat for it.

We must also recognise that pollution comes in many different forms. The garbage washed on to our beaches is very often due to the historic practice of tipping overboard from ships all the filth that they cannot dispose of.

A significant part of my constituency's economy, besides fishing, revolves around the gas and oil industries —the bringing ashore of these vital resources—and the standby industries that serve them. The platforms that they require are part of the furniture of the North sea, but what happens when they are finished with and abandoned? Derelict rig legs will kill fish and people. They are a form of pollution. Industrial dredging destroys parts of the sea bed and changes other parts —another form of pollution. One cannot take out 15 to 18 million tons a year of sand and gravel from the sea bed and say that it has a zero impact. Our waters are crowded with shipping, the skies overhead are full of helicopters and NATO exercises are carried out.

I add my weight to the support for the Environment Ministers' conference held last year, but the next one is not until March 1990 in Holland. Surely, it should be earlier than that and it should not be at ministerial level, but at Prime Ministerial level—the highest possible level. We have learnt in the past few months—triggered by the seals dying in the summer, by the greenhouse effect, by the fear of rising tides and by the loss of rain forests in other parts of the world—that this is a global problem, and we are part of the global village. People are better informed now, many as armchair experts. The subject is no longer just a recreational activity. People take part in clearing bombs and litter from beaches and saving natterjack toads. It is now a major part of our political agenda. People need to be informed, as their survival instinct depends upon it. We do not need to reinvent the wheel. We know that there is a cost penalty attached to resolving the problems, which we all accept will be high. There are signs that we are ready to pay it and will have to pay it. There is already evidence that industry and business are being market-led in an environmental as well as an economic direction.

We do not have long. I accept that national lobbies, such as Greenpeace and Friends of the Earth have had a part to play, but local groups are also forming. Waveney district council is establishing a maritime pollution information forum of local authorities in Suffolk and Norfolk. That is a useful response to the worries that have been expressed about the marine incineration of toxic waste. It may be a politically motivated group, but it strikes a chord of public concern.

I welcome all the measures that the Government have made and the steps that have been taken to restore confidence. Commentators are calling the environment the issue of the nineties. We do not have long to get to grips with it, but I am sure that we would all agree that failure is not an option.

2.15 pm

Mr. Nigel Spearing (Newham, South): I am glad that the Secretary of State is present to hear the closing speeches, because I found his speech partly encouraging and partly extremely disappointing. The right hon. Gentleman and I have had our differences over the years and no doubt we find in each other elements of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde.

The right hon. Gentleman spoke about the need and justification for privatisation. He sold it on two grounds. The first was that it was only in this way that adequate cash could be made available, especially for the disposal of water and its purification. His second argument, which had some justification, was that the new National Rivers Authority will provide some control that apparently does not exist at present. In an intervention I sought to illustrate that control would be possible if it was approached in the right way. I shall explain how cash has been available in the past and, therefore, why it should be available in the future. I believe that the Secretary of State's philosophical and political justifications for the water privatisation Bill have been shot out of the water.

Of course, the Secretary of State displays some Dr. Jekyll traits. We are aware of his abilities and of his feeling for the aesthetics of life. I believe that his qualifications as a civil engineer have imposed an understanding of the need for the National Rivers Authority. That authority will be concerned not only with the water in the rivers, but the water in the aquifers and underground.

The right hon. Gentleman's constituency is near the headwaters of the Thames; my constituency is at the other end. The largest purification works in the country is based at Beckton, which is responsible for putting sludge into the North sea. From what I have heard I believe that that sludge is pretty good, but I would not say that it is beyond reproach.

Paragraph 2.19 of the Government's reply to the Committee's report states:

> "The Government remains of the view that sewage sludge disposal at sea does not significantly affect the marine environment."

I am not sure that that is correct. I should have thought that the Government would say, "need not necessarily affect". I am sorry that the Government appear to have published something that is scientifically unsustainable. Perhaps the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi) will want to comment on that.

In paragraph 2.20 the Government say:

> "The Government is in consultation with water authorities about the list of substances to be regulated in this way and the practical implementation of the ceiling on the amount of these contaminants reaching the North Sea in sludge".

That refers to the red list, which the Secretary of State rightly mentioned.

I know that the Secretary of State cannot reply now, but we need to know on what basis and on what criteria such substances will be allowed into the North sea—whether in sludge or in any other form. Will such substances be concentrated in the North sea? No doubt under EEC regulations that is allowed. When such substances are disposed of is the amount dictated by a figure that happens to suit the financial arrangements of sewage—sludge purification works? The Government have not made it clear. That is one inadequacy of their reply to the report.

I shall now speak about the river Thames because, as many hon. Members acknowledge, what has happened to the Thames in the past few years is an example nationally and internationally. I am not quite as complacent as that, but I must point out to Conservative Members and to the Secretary of State that the improvement of the Thames has been achieved largely by massive public expenditure—not private expenditure. Since 1906, the dominant water supply agency in the Thames has been the Metropolitan water board, which sustained, to an extent, Thames Conservancy, and the two ran the Thames well. London county council was responsible—sometimes belatedly because of the war—for capital expenditure on purification. We cannot achieve that ecological balance in the water cycle without public expenditure and research.

In 1948, under the Labour Government, the department of scientific and industrial research began a report entitled "Effects of Polluting Discharges in the Thames Estuary". It was published in 1963 after 15 years of work and it was 600 pages long. Without such work and reports, the improvement of the Thames would not have been possible. That improvement came from public money and investment in scientific research.

The Prime Minister is a disgrace to scientific research. She is supposed to be a scientist. Despite that, scientific research throughout the country is at sixes and sevens. The work that was carried out to improve the Thames would not be possible today. In the past few days, the Prime Minister has donned a green dress, but her heart is still blue—and it may be a darker colour than that. That is illustrated by the Government's proposals, which will be brought forth in the Queen's Speech, for the privatisation of water purification services.

I concede to the Secretary of State, because I cannot deny it, that there has been relatively non-harmful private enterprise activity in supplying water. There have been some good private water companies and some indifferent ones. Until now, they have operated within statutory controls and controls on the water cycle laid down by regional authorities. As my hon. Friend the Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy) said, that position will probably change because we do not know who will own water supply companies in future.

Mr. Hardy: The French.

Mr. Spearing: It may be the Germans, the Belgians or even the Australians, with some early morning raid on the stock exchange. What is to prevent that? The Government have not told us that there will be anything to stop that happening.

That is bad enough, but the same situation will apply in the disposal and purification of dirty water. When people talk about the public ownership of water, they think of taps and purified water, but in terms of public health, it is the disposal side that is important and it takes a great deal of public money, because it is difficult to carry out. We have talked today almost entirely about the purification side. Private enterprise will find it almost impossible to deal with that.

In 1860, when curtains were pulled in the Committee Rooms against the stench outside, the Victorians, for whom the Prime Minister has such respect, did not set up private sewage companies in Wandsworth, central London and the Isle of Dogs. The set up the Metropolitan Board of Works.

Outside this House there is a vast sewer that takes water from the west to the east of London. The idea of its being owned by an international company with shareholders around the world is almost incredible, but the Government are trying to allow that. The Prime Minister has not gone green on this vital environmental matter, and nor has the Secretary of State. If they had second thoughts and said that they would privatise only the water supply, keeping its disposal in public hands, that would be another matter, but they are not saying that. They are risking the environment and what private enterprise can sometimes do. They will make whoever runs these services charge the public enormous and occasionally arbitrary sums by means of water meters to pay for costs that should fall on us all through and by public ownership.

London dealt with the problem by public ownership in the past; I see no reason why the nation should not do it the same way in the future.

2.26 pm

Sir Hugh Rossi: With the leave of the House, Madam Deputy Speaker, I rise to speak again.

The less I say in the little time I have about the speech made by the hon. Member for Bootle (Mr. Roberts) the better. What I heard of his speech I found painful and I can only regret that he did not learn from his service on the Select Committee that environmental solutions are best found by an open-minded, non-partisan approach. Apart from his contribution, such an approach has distinguished the debate.

I congratulate my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and his Department on the action being taken. Whether it was stimulated by our report and the line of questioning that the Committee pursued or whether it would have happened in any case does not really matter. The important thing is that action is being taken.

Although I found my right hon. Friend's speech excellent in other respects, I must express disappointment about his attitude to discharges into the sea. He says there is no scientific evidence that dispersal and dilution in the vastnesses of the oceans encircling the globe are not the best options available. Certainly they are easy, cheap and have the merit of "out of sight, out of mind". But there are scientists who have serious misgivings about all this, and I urge my right hon. Friend to ask his advisers to study their writings a little more closely——

Mr. Ridley: I have.

Sir Hugh Rossi: I remind my right hon. Friend that it has taken five years and two Environment Select Committee reports to persuade the Government that the vastnesses of the atmosphere encircling the planet are not enought to absorb the emissions from the burning of fossil fuels indefinitely without damage to the environment. I suggest that my right hon. Friend reflects on whether the oceans are vast enough to absorb all the activities of the millions of people who inhabit the world. I urge him to study a little more carefully the alternative options to discharging and dumping at sea. They may not be so easy to implement. There will be problems with establishing land-based sites. Nevertheless, we must bear in mind the long-term effects of our actions on generations to come.

This has been a useful debate in which the contributions have shown that these matters are of grave concern in all parts of the House, and I hope that the Select Committee's contribution in working on the inquiry and producing the report will be of value to the public debate on these matters for many years to come.

It being half past Two o'clock, the motion for the Adjournment lapsed without Question put.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON TELEVISING OF PROCEEDINGS OF THE HOUSE

Ordered,

That the Orders made on 29th March relating to the Select Committee on Televising of Proceedings of the House be Standing Orders of the House until the end of the next Session of Parliament.—[Mr. Neubert.]

Knitwear, Hosiery and Clothing Industry

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Neubert.]

2.30 pm

Mr. Alan Meale (Mansfield): I have two main reasons for raising this debate. The first is the current state of the British knitwear, hosiery and clothing industries. These are interrelated and have all suffered severe decline in recent times. Those who work in the industry, manage, own or depend upon it believe that under the Government little seems to have been done to protect the industry.

Secondly, in recent weeks in my constituency in Nottinghamshire we have suffered the loss of a major knitwear manufacturing base, the Mansfield Knitwear Company, with the loss of at least 850 jobs. Many hon. Members will share my disappointment about that, yet the tragedy of this occurrence for the British knitwear industry is that this firm is the largest single knitwear manufacturer in the European Community. Why has this firm closed? Certainly it is not a major loss-maker. It had the most modern machinery, on a larger scale, of any such manufacturer in any of the member states of the EEC. By no stretch of the imagination was its work force overpaid or is its production level low. None of the blame for the closure can be laid at the door of the workers or the trade union that represents them. The industry in general has suffered primarily at the hands of the Government who, through their lack of commitment, have created a lack of confidence among employers, investors and markets.

Since 1980 these industries have suffered severe contraction. They have lost over 300,000 jobs, 52,000 of which were in the textile sector alone. As the Minister knows, these industries are not based in the prosperous south; rather they are found in the north and the midlands and are centred on what have become the declining areas that once housed the thriving industries of iron, coal and steel. The Minister is also aware that the industries employ mainly women—72 per cent. of the work force at the last count. He also knows that the industries are strategically and economically important because the textile and clothing industries represent approximately 16 per cent. of all manufacturing jobs in the United Kingdom. They have 10 per cent. of the 3 million workers employed in these industries in the member states of the EC.

In my county of Nottinghamshire the textile and clothing industries employ four times the number of people who work in the coal industry, despite the fact that since 1982 one in six jobs lost in the textile industry nationally have been lost in Nottinghamshire. Further, one in 12 of all jobs in these industries are in Nottinghamshire and Derbyshire. Two thirds of those jobs are in hosiery and knitwear and the rest are in clothing. That represents a sizeable chunk of manufacturing jobs, especially women's jobs. In all, it represents 15 per cent. of women's jobs, or 22 per cent. of all women's jobs in the counties' declining coal mining communities.

In Mansfield these industries represent 13 per cent. in total and 19 per cent. of all women's employment, and that is over 11,000 jobs. The decision to close Mansfield Knitwear was rightly described by Mr. David Lambert, the general president of the hosiery and knitwear union, as like amputating the torso of the industry at a stroke. Between 1981 and 1985 only 1,300 jobs in this sector have been created in Nottinghamshire.

Will the Minister give a lead to the industry to save it from complete destruction? Will he act to stop the disastrous flow of cheap imports into the United Kingdom? The latest trade figures show that in the first eight months of 1987 imports of jumpers were up by over 1·5 million. Will the Minister act to stop goods from such places as India, Indonesia, Hong Kong and Thailand being dumped on our shores at the cost of our industry? Will he act to help the industry recover from the general fashion switch away from knitted goods to enable it to have the confidence to return to viability? Will he act to combat employers who, while receiving Government grants for parts of their companies, shift other parts of their industries abroad, outside the EEC, to such places as Turkey, where labour costs are as low as £20 a week?

I say that because rumour abounds in the textile industry that Mansfield Knitwear was closed for exactly that reason. That can be seen from an article in the Financial Times of 23 September 1988 in which the newspaper's textile editor, Alice Rawsthorn, said about the Coats Viyella organisation, which owns Mansfield Knitwear:

> "The group is also considering shipping knitting machinery out to Turkey, where labour costs are lower. Similarly, it may use Turkey as a base to spin acrylic yarn for knitwear."

At the time, the journalist was writing an article about Mr. David Alliance, the director of the group, so her information would have come directly from him. Mr. David Alliance has already cost the Mansfield area dearly as, 18 months ago, he closed the Viyella factories in Mansfield and moved to Lancashire, with Government development assistance, despite the fact that it was a profitable company.

I hope that the Minister will ask the Government to review their decision of 30 September this year when they declined to give assisted area status to the Mansfield travel-to-work area. The loss of such a major industry as Mansfield Knitwear will have a severe effect on the community, particularly as Mansfield already has the worst unemployment levels in the midlands, with both male and female unemployment continuing to increase, despite two years' continuous decline in the rest of the country. The area now badly needs help to break out of its present position and can only achieve that with Government help.

I should be grateful if the Minister would consider the following approach in his deliberations: first, to issue a statement of confidence in the industry and to make public visits to the regions concerned; secondly, to call a summit soon of all those concerned in the industry to discuss a way forward; thirdly, for the Government to take immediate action to curb cheap imports of textiles and clothing, which are badly affecting home production; fourthly, to undertake an investigation into firms which are in receipt of Government grants and are moving some of their operations abroad; fifthly, to issue a statement to the effect that there will be a renewal of the multi-fibre arrangement before the implementation of the Single European Act in 1992 to safeguard home production; and, finally, that the Minister will liaise with his colleagues at the Department of Trade and Industry and, in the light of the recent closures, review assisted-area status for Mansfield and consider meeting a delegation in the area in the near future.

Mr. Max Madden (Bradford, West): May I, at the outset, declare my interest as a sponsored member of the Transport and General Workers Union whose textile trade group represents thousands of men and women working in the textile, clothing and knitwear industries.

May I also congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale), on securing this debate. It is another illustration of the vigorous way in which he has sought to defend his constituents since he was first elected to that constituency in 1987 and of the way in which he has sought to advance and protect the interests of those of his constituents working in the hosiery and knitwear industries.

This is the second debate that has taken place in the House this week on the textile, clothing and knitwear industries. The first debate, which took place on Monday, was initiated by my hon. Friend the Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon). The fact that we have had two debates in a week underlines the crisis that is facing the textile, clothing and knitwear industries. I urge the Minister to recognise that that crisis is of major proportions and that there are prospects of redundancies of the scale that we saw in 1980-81.

Thousands of men and women are facing redundancy in the coming weeks. There are thousands who may receive an unwelcome Christmas present in the form of a redundancy notice. If they escape redundancy until Christmas, it will be a threat early in the new year.

The crisis is such that we must see positive Government intervention. Professor Silberston is now being commissioned to make a further inquiry into this sector of the industry, and we hope that he will have learnt from the serious errors that he made in his initial report. He seemed to listen to everyone in the industry to whom he talked, but he did not learn from what he was told. We hope that his next report will include a major recommendation that there should be a continuation of the multi-fibre arrangement. That is the unified demand of all in the industries. We hope that the Government will support the extension of the MFA, whatever Professor Silberston may report.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Mansfield said, we want urgent and decisive Government action to stem unfair imports, which are still penetrating British markets to an unacceptable level. I should welcome an assurance from the Minister that rumours circulating that the Government intend to privatise the collection of production statistics are untrue. If we are to have accurate and reliable information on production and other trade statistics, it is vital that the information is collected by the Government rather than by individual companies, many of which are not in a position to collect statistics. If we lose reliable statistics, our ability to combat unfair trade from overseas will be further worsened.

As my hon. Friend said, we need to see much greater willingness by the Government to act against British investors who are increasingly investing in low-cost production overseas at the expense of British companies and British jobs. We should be able to devise a way of preventing grant going to such companies. Tax penalties could be introduced for British companies and investors that are exploiting the advantages that exist in overseas low-cost production centres.

We must urge British employers to safeguard employment, especially in areas such as Mansfield. We know that Mansfield is suffering from high-level unemployment. In areas such as my constituency in west Yorkshire, unemployment levels are way above regional and national levels. We need a comprehensive programme of assistance for these sectors of industry. We must take concerted action to improve the overall image of the industries. That would assist recruitment. Within the past month I have met employers and trade union representatives in Bradford to discuss ways in which we can improve the image of our industry. There is an inheritance of redundancy and a reputation of bad working conditions with low pay. This background deters many young people from considering job opportunities and careers within these sectors of industry.

There must be major improvements in pay and conditions. Substantial improvements made must also be in the number of training places that are available and in the quality of training that is provided. During a debate on Monday I called upon the Government to organise a major national conference to discuss a range of urgent action that could be taken. The Government should convene such a conference. All employers, unions, local authorities and other agencies with an interest in the industries should be invited to frame an agenda for action and for assistance for the industries.

We heard today, as on Monday, about the importance of those industries as major employers and exporters and their major contribution to future growth and prosperity. They are no longer expendable. The men and women who create the wealth in that range of industries are crying out for the Government to acknowledge their importance to our country's economy. Certainly they are calling for positive and decisive Government action in reducing unfair exports and in the other areas I have outlined.

I hope that today we shall not have to record the same complacency that is so often evident when Ministers address the problems of the textile, clothing and knitwear industries. I hope that, for a change, we shall hear from the Minister positive suggestions for urgent action, which is long overdue and vitally important.

2.45 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs (Mr. Francis Maude): I fully understand the reasons that have prompted this debate, because the knitwear industry is important in the constituencies of both the hon. Members for Mansfield (Mr. Meale) and for

[Mr. Francis Maude]

Bradford, West (Mr. Madden). It is also important in one part of my midlands constituency, so I am aware of the industry's difficulties and of its importance, too.

However, the message of gloom that comes out of the remarks made by both hon. Gentlemen is unnecessary and depressing. I do not intend sounding complacent, as the hon. Member for Bradford, West suggested I might, but the idea that the solution to all the problems lies with the Government is fallacious. If there is a problem with the industry's image, it is for the industry itself to address it. There are within it enough firms that are robust, innovative, enterprising, and investing for the future to address that problem, if it needs addressing, and to deal with it. I do not accept that it will be helpful if the Government intervene.

The hon. Member for Mansfield mentioned regional aid and suggested that my right hon. and hon. Friends in the Department should amend the assisted areas map to include Mansfield. The Nottinghamshire county council has asked for a meeting, and as such meetings take place frequently, I see no reason why one should not be arranged. I appreciate that Mansfield and neighbouring areas have unemployment problems, but the White Paper published earlier this year made it clear that the Government have no plans to change the assisted areas map in the lifetime of this Parliament. On a related issue, Nottinhamshire county council and Mansfield district council have been informed that Nottinghamshire and Derbyshire are among 22 counties and regions that appear to satisfy the eligibility criteria for European regional development fund assistance as industrial regions. We have cited the travel-to-work areas of Mansfield, Worksop and Chesterfield, as well as other parts of the counties, as the most seriously affected areas.

Mr. Meale: Does the Minister accept that the company that has just closed Mansfield Knitwear is the one that closed Viyella mills? It closed the Mansfield mills to move to an assisted development area. If we cannot be designated as an assisted area when we have the highest level of unemployment in the midlands, we shall continually face firms hopping from one side of the country to the other—and moving, in particular, away from Mansfield.

Mr. Maude: The hon. Gentleman has highlighted one of the problems of a regional policy of this kind. The west midlands which contains my constituency, suffered considerably in the early 1980s when it did not have assisted area status and a good deal of business left for other pastures. The hon. Gentleman is right to draw attention to the problem, but it is inherent in the system and cannot be dealt with simply by fiddling with the map to accommodate the changes.

There is certainly a possibility of ERDF assistance. We are still awaiting official Commission reaction to the proposal, but each individual council is free to contact the Commission to support its case, and I understand that Mansfield and Nottinghamshire are doing that. Mansfield is also in a priority area for European social fund purposes in regard to retraining.

To describe Mansfield and its surrounds as wholly depressing would be to give a mistaken impression. There is much good news. First and most important, Mansfield benefits, and will continue to do so, from the upswing in the national economy, and particularly from the growth in the east midlands. Moreover, rising prosperity in Nottingham and Newark is having a direct overspill effect.

The many small engineering firms in Mansfield and Sutton are finding their order books fuller than they have been for many years and are looking forward to a period of the same growth and expansion that we are now seeing throughout the country. The record-breaking performance of miners at Sherwood colliery and other pits in the area clearly show that rising productivity and competitiveness are the keys to the future of mining in Nottinghamshire. The hon. Gentleman will also be aware that public sector investment is taking place on a record level in Mansfield.

Mansfield is being given one of the most modern district general hospitals in the country with the redevelopment of Kingsmill, and at the same time the Victoria hospital is being virtually rebuilt to provide better local health care than ever before.

But the real hope for Mansfield's future comes from the growth of the private sector. As the hon. Gentleman will know, just outside the town in Sherwood forest, Center Parc is providing an increasingly successful tourist development, and the growth of the tourist industry generally is providing many new opportunities for other local businesses.

British Coal, through British Coal Enterprises, is giving support to many former miners who are seeking—successfully—to set up businesses of their own, and the managed workshop scheme developed by Mansfield Brewery is one of the earliest and best schemes in the country where a private company has used its own resources and spare capacity to help get new fledgling businesses off the ground.

Mr. Meale: That is wonderful news, which will be published in Hansard on Monday. But unemployment is still increasing, although the method of calculation has been changed more than 20 times. If all those good things are happening, why are firms closing down? Why is unemployment rising? Why, according to every report on the area, is deprivation worsening? Things are not good, and we need the Minister's help and direction.

Mr. Maude: Obviously at any one time firms are closing and firms are opening. That is part of the industrial process, no matter what Government are in power. It always has been, and it always will be. I accept that firms are closing in Mansfield, but if the hon. Gentleman wants to do Mansfield a service he would do well to help us to draw attention to the many positive developments. Like me, he wants to encourage businesses to develop in Mansfield, but if we are to do that we need to present a positive image for the town. I know that the hon. Gentleman can be relied on to help to do that, but he will not do it if he does nothing but preach doom and gloom and talk only about the decline of industries there. Many businesses are growing and setting up, which is thoroughly good news for the area.

The knitwear industry has contributed considerably to the development of parts of the country, but, as with any economic activity, competition invevitably develops from areas that introduce new techniques and make economies in manufacturing costs. The knitwear market is also especially susceptible to the unpredictable and capricious influence of the demands of fashion. The industry is facing difficulties and no one suggests otherwise, but that is occurring not only in this country but internationally.

I can give the hon. Gentlemen some good news. Recently when I was in Hong Kong I helped to take part in a promotion by Richard Shops, which had just opened some new shops there, of garments made in Britain. The idea that trade in textiles and garments is entirely one way —from the far east to Europe—is false. I have seen with my own eyes garments made in Britain being exported to Hong Kong.

This industry, like many others, is developing what it is good at. The hon. Gentleman knows that knitwear is included in the multi-fibre arrangement due to expire in 1991. The MFA is under consideration with many other trade issues in the Uruguay round of GATT, and multilateral negotiations are under way in Geneva. We have committed ourselves as part of the European Community to studying the modalities for the restoration to normal of trade in clothing and textiles but also to strengthen GATT disciplines. We consider that a durable set of GATT rules for trade in clothing and textiles depends essentially on establishing the right conditions, which include a satisfactory safeguard clause against sudden import surges and a reduction in trade barriers in developing countries. We are particularly looking to the newly industrialised countries in that context.

Both hon. Gentlemen suggested that the solution to the problems of the industry is to erect barriers around the country and prevent any imports, especially cheap imports. The hon. Member for Bradford, West referred to the report by Professor Silberston and the fact that we have asked him to update it. Last time the Professor concluded that the effect of the MFA on British consumers was to increase the cost of clothes by 10 per cent. That should concern hon. Gentlemen. It affects every constituent and poorer people more than the better off. Protectionist arrangements, such as the MFA, make it more difficult for Third world countries that were seeking to industrialise and reduce their dependence on aid from the industrialised world to do so. Again, I should have thought that both hon. Gentlemen would wish to bear that matter in mind.

Mr. Meale: I am bewildered by that. The figures I have seen, for example, for women's knickers show that in 1984 a total of 1·5 million pairs of knickers were imported from China, which is the biggest exporting textile nation. Because there was no action under the MFA and no Government direction, the figure rose in 1985 to 7 million, in 1986 to 14 million, and in 1987 to 30 million. That is the result of a lack of action by the Government.

Mr. Maude: There is and always has been trade in clothes. In the past we have benefited enormously from trade in clothes. Industries in some countries are better at some products than are industries in other countries. All economic growth and development has come about because industries have specialised in doing what they are good at. The idea that we should erect barriers and prevent any clothes made elsewhere from being imported is absurd. It would not benefit British industry. The British industries that have remained least efficient are those that have been protected.

If industry is to become efficient and productive, as I know the knitwear industry predominantly is, it needs not more protection but to invest, develop and take its place in the world market. That is how we shall increase prosperity and I have no doubt that that is already happening.

Question put and agreed to.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Teachers' Income

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the average annual income of teachers with (a) five, (b) 10 and (c) 20 years working experience in (1) Belgium, (2) the Netherlands, (3) France, (4) Sweden, (5) Denmark, and (6) the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is not readily available. However, a number of comparisons of European Community countries are available in pages 133 to 160 of "The Conditions of Service of Teachers in the European Community", published by the European Commission in 1988. A copy is available in the Library.

School Meals

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average price of a school meal in (1) the Inner London education authority area, (2) Oxford, (3) Liverpool, (4) Birmingham, (5) Manchester, (6) Newcastle-upon-Tyne, (7) Cardiff, (8) Norwich, and (9) York.

Mr. Butcher: Data relating to the average price of a school meal in individual cities are not collected centrally. Data relating to the charges made for fixed-price school meals in local education authorities in England, based on the Department's annual school meals census, are included in the report on school meals statistics at October 1987, published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy. A copy is available in the Library.

Matters relating to Cardiff are for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Dyslexic Children

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will list all the educational facilities provided to dyslexic children in the United Kingdom;

(2) how many children born for each year since 1974 have been found to suffer from dyslexia in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Butcher: Since the implementation of the 1981 Education Act in 1983, this Department has not collected national or local statistics of children by category of handicap. This information is not therefore available.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to which countries make special educational provisions for dyslexic children.

Mr. Butcher: The Department does not collect, and is not aware of any systematic study of, detailed information about the educational provision made in other countries for children with specific learning difficulties.

Plankton

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what support Her Majesty's Government are giving to the research programme on plankton in the North sea and the eastern Atlantic at the Plymouth marine laboratory.

Mr. Jackson: The continuous plankton recorder survey at the Plymouth marine laboratory will cost in the order of £300,000 in 1988-89. The NERC is providing about half of the funds from its science budget allocation, with a contribution of up to £140,000 from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. I understand that in 1989-90, while the NERC is to cease funding in order to concentrate on research that it considers to be of higher priority, MAFF has offered to contribute up to £150,000, subject to PML offering a satisfactory proposal. Other funding from organisations which benefit from the survey will be sought.

Nursery Places

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of under-fives are in full-time state nursery education in each European Community country.

Mr. Butcher: The following information is readily available. Further details can be obtained from the Department's Statistical Bulletin, a copy of which is in the Library.

Participation in education and day care by 3-5 year olds in certain EC countries: 1982

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many nursery places were available in (a) North Yorkshire local education authority and (b) the Ryedale district council area for each of the years 1983, 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Butcher: Information on the number of nursery places and information for areas within local education authorities are not available centrally. The number of pupils under five in maintained nursery schools and nursery classes in primary schools in North Yorkshire for each of the years 1983 to 1987 was as follows:

Pupils under five in nursery schools and classes

January each year	Number

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many nursery school places are available in each local education authority in England, in the last year for which figures are available.

The number of pupils under five in maintained nursery schools in each local education authority in England in January 1988 is given in the following table. There are also pupils in nursery classes in primary schools; these are excluded from the answer.

School Rolls

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list all those local education authorities who have increasing school rolls; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: It is for local education authorities themselves to assess their school provision in the light of local circumstances. In most LEAs primary school rolls are rising and secondary school rolls are continuing to decline.

Temporary Classrooms

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what estimate he has made of the cost of replacing the 500 temporary classrooms in use by Bradford schools by permanent accomodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: It is entirely a matter for the Bradford education authority, rather than my right hon. Friend, to calculate the cost involved.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Sunday Trading

71 Mr. Cran: To ask the Attorney-General if he proposes to issue further guidance to local authorities regarding the enforcement of the Sunday trading laws; and what steps he is taking to ascertain the scale of such enforcement, other than the information he has requested from the Association of District Councils.

The Attorney-General: I have no plans to issue guidance concerning the enforcement of the law relating to Sunday trading. As to the scale of enforcement undertaken by local authorities, I received in July a detailed summary of the survey undertaken by the Association of District Councils into the current situation and have no plans to seek further information at this stage.

Courts (Functioning)

72. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Attorney-General if there are any plans to improve the functioning of law courts.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor has the effectiveness and efficiency of the court service under constant review.

Crown Prosecution Service

74. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Attorney-General what has been the cost to the Government of the Crown Prosecution Service for the last two years.

The Attorney-General: The net cost to the Government of the Crown Prosecution Service for the years to 1986-87 and 1987-88 was as follows:

	£ million
1986-87	67·45
1987-88	120·90

The Crown Prosecution Service became a national service on 1 October 1986. Prior to that date, only the former metropolitan counties had been assimilated into the service. This expansion explains the disparity between the two figures given above.

Birmingham Pub Bombing

75. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Attorney-General when he last met the Director of Public Prosecutions to discuss the Birmingham pub bombing case.

The Attorney-General: I last discussed this case with the Director on Friday 8 July 1988.

Dr. Frank Skuse

76. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General on how many occasions Mr. Ray Paton was interviewed by City of London police in the course of the recent inquiry into the conduct of Dr. Frank Skuse.

The Attorney-General: Mr. Paton was questioned on three occasions during the course of the inquiry.

Guildford and Woolwich Pub Bombings

77. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Attorney-General when he last met the Director of Public Prosecutions to discuss the Guildford and Woolwich pub bombings case.

78. Mr. Wall: To ask the Attorney-General when he last met the Director of Public Prosecutions to discuss the Guildford and Woolwich pub bombings case.

79. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Attorney-General when he last met the Director of Public Prosecutions to discuss the Guildford and Woolwich pub bombings case.

80. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Attorney-General when he last met the Director of Public Prosecutions to discuss the case of the persons convicted of the Guildford and Woolwich pub bombings.

The Attorney-General: I have had no reason to discuss that case with the Director.

Solicitors Remuneration Order

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Attorney-General on what date he received the 23rd report of the Law Reform Committee (Cmmd. 8733); when he intends to introduce the amendments to the Solicitors Remuneration Order recommended therein; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The 23rd report of the Law Reform Committee on the powers and duties of trustees (Cmnd. 8733) was published on 19 October 1982. The council of the Law Society agreed in principle to the changes to the Solicitors Remuneration Order recommended on that report in June 1987. Discussions on their implementation have now concluded. It is expected that the Law Society will invite the committee responsible under section 56 of the Solicitors Act 1974 for amendments to the order to make a new order early in 1989.

Family Law Reform Act

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Attorney-General if he will now specify the date on which the outstanding parts of the Family Law Reform Act 1987 will be brought into force.

The Attorney-General: I cannot yet specify a date when the remaining parts of the Act will be brought into force, but I hope it will be possible to make an announcement in respect of part II of the Act shortly.

"Spycatcher"

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Attorney-General if he will now give the estimated sum that will be paid in total in all matters involving the Government's total legal action in the United Kingdom and abroad regarding the "Spycatcher" case, including travelling and all other related expenses.

The Attorney-General: It will not be possible to estimate the eventual total costs for some time, as several bills have not yet been submitted to the Government, but the figure of £1,019,000 given in a written answer to a question by the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 19 October, is likely to increase substantially.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his reply of 19 October, Official Report, column 853, if he will provide a convenient analysis of the £1,019,000 cost to public funds of efforts made by Her Majesty's Government in respect of legal actions against the book "Spycatcher".

The Attorney-General: The breakdown of costs is as follows:

Civil Proceedings for Breach of Confidence

	Legal fees	Travelling and subsistence	Total
Australia	559,862	77,078	€36,940
New Zealand	157,428	15,786	173,214
Hong Kong	—	—	77,716
England and Wales	—	—	70,171
Legal advice received from other countries			60,769
			1,018,810

Jurors

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Attorney-General how many black jurors have been involved in the trying of cases in Liverpool Crown court in the last period of 12 months for which figures are available.

The Attorney-General: This information cannot be provided as no record is kept of the ethnic origin of jurors.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Attorney-General how many jury panels out of the total number selected over the last period of 12 months for which figures are available originate from each of the Liverpool areas; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The figures requested could be extracted only at disproportionate cost. However, jurors are summoned from all the electoral districts within the catchment area of the Crown court at Liverpool, based on annually updated electoral registers.

Legal Profession

Mr. Hind: To ask the Attorney-General whether the Government have any proposals for the future of the legal profession; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor has considered the report to the general council of the Bar and the council of the Law Society on the future of the legal profession chaired by Lady Marre which the Bar and the Law Society published in July this year.

The Lord Chancellor has now decided that it would be appropriate to publish his own proposals relating to the requirements for carrying out in the future the work presently conducted by the legal profession. He therefore intends to issue a Green Paper for consultation early in the new year with a view to reaching decisions before the summer recess 1989. Separate consultation papers on contingency fees and on corporate conveyancing will also be prepared with the intention of publication on a similar time scale to the proposed Green paper.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Rural Areas (Violence)

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the reasons for his decision not to publish the report on violence in rural areas by the chief constable of Surrey; and whether he will review that decision.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The report was undertaken by the Association of Chief Police Officers. Its distribution is a matter for the association.

Visiting Forces Act

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications have been made for waivers under the Visiting Forces Act for each year since 1979.

Mr. John Patten: Requests for waiver under the Visiting Forces Act 1952 may be made either by the visiting force authorities where primary right of jurisdiction lies with United Kingdom courts, or by the United Kingdom where primary right of jurisdiction lies with the visiting force authorities. There is no requirement for central reporting of cases in either category, but their numbers are thought to be small.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the latest available figures for his Department in the London pay area of the number of vacancies by grade and the proportion this is of the grade complement in London.

Mr. Hurd: The latest available information in respect of posts in the London area which are normally filled by direct recruitment is as follows:

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide the latest available figures for his Department for (a) numbers of staff in receipt of local pay additions, by grade, (b) location of those offices awarding local pay additions and (c) annual cost.

Mr. Hurd: The information requested is as follows:

The estimated annual cost of local pay additions in the Department is £1·5 million.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide the latest available figures for the Metropolitan police for (a) numbers of staff in receipt of local pay additions, by grade, (b) location of those offices awarding local pay additions and (c) annual cost.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner that the latest information available is as follows:

(a)	Number
Executive officers	54
Administrative officers	2,194
Administrative assistants	115
Senior personal secretaries	9
Personal secretaries	51
Typing managers	89
Typists	892

(b) Local pay additions are awarded to selected staff in Metropolitan Police offices throughout the Metropolitan Police District.

(c) £2,292,975.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the latest available figures for the Metropolitan police in the London pay area of the number of vacancies by grade and the proportion this is of the grade complement in London.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner that on 30 September there were a total of 479 vacancies within the working civil staff ceiling of the Metropolitan police. This represents a shortfall of 3·7 per cent.

The Metropolitan police is introducing a system of grade complements within the civil staff ceiling. Until this has been completed, it is not possible to provide reliable figures on vacancies by grade.

Metropolitan police staff are based in the London area.

BBC and IBA

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will urgently take steps to remove British Broadcasting Corporation and Independent Broadcasting Authority board appointments from direct Government involvement.

Mr. Renton: No. The current arrangements work satisfactorily.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will urgently introduce legislation giving the right of participation in the work of the boards of the British Broadcasting Corporation and the Independent Broadcasting Authority to elected representatives of all the professionals and technicians, producers and workers.

Mr. Renton: No. Appointments to the broadcasting authorities are made on the basis of personal distinction, experience and ability.

Official Secrets Act (Reform)

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many organisations have made representations to him in connection with the White Paper on reform of section 2 of the Official Secrets Act 1911 (Cm. 408); and if he will list those organisations.

Mr. John Patten: Up to 21 October, my right hon. Friend had received representations on the proposals set out in the White Paper from the following nine organisations:

The Association of British Editors.
The BBC.
The Campaign for Freedom of Information.
The Guild of British Newspaper Editors.
The Law Society of Scotland.
The National Consumer Council.
The Newspaper Society.
The Press Council.
The Society of Authors.

Public Representations

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which subject within his Department's range of responsibilities has generated most representations from the public in the past 12 months; and if he is able to estimate the numbers of correspondence and telephone calls.

Mr. Hurd: This information is not available centrally and could be obtained, if at all, only at a disproportionate cost.

Adolfo Calero

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why Adolfo Calero was given permission to enter the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tim Renton: Mr. Calero qualified for entry as a visitor under the immigration rules.

Heathrow and Gatwick Airports (Armed Police)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what special training police officers publicly wearing sidearms at Heathrow and Gatwick have received in the use of firearms; what instructions they have for the use of such firearms in terminal buildings; and how many times such firearms have been fired in the past 12 months.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: All police officers who are authorised to carry firearms must undergo initially the basic 10-day firearms training course, and then attend two-day refresher courses four times a year. An officer must qualify on each occasion in order to retain his authorisation certificate. All authorised firearms officers are made fully aware that under section 3 of the Criminal Law Act 1967

'a person may use such force as is reasonable in the circumstances in the prevention of crime, or in the effecting or assisting in the lawful arrest of offenders or suspected offenders or of persons unlawfully at large', and that responsibility for the use of the firearm is an individual decision which may have to be justified in legal proceedings. I understand that during the last 12 months firearms have been fired by officers stationed at Heathrow and Gatwick only for training purposes.

Cruise Missiles (Policing)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, since the ratification of the intermediate nuclear forces treaty, any public expenditure has been incurred in respect of policing for exercises involving United States cruise missiles outwith the Greenham common base; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is not the practice, for both operational and security reasons, to give details of matters relating to exercises conducted by nuclear missile units.

Nazi War Crimes

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when it is expected that the committee inquiring into those in the United Kingdom alleged to have been involved in Nazi war crimes will make its report to him.

Mr. Hurd: I understand that the report of the war crimes inquiry is likely to be submitted to me by next Easter.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many reported crimes and convictions there were in 1987 in respect of offences involving the following weapons (a) shotguns, (b) airguns, (c) other firearms, (d) crossbows, (e) knives (f) martial arts weapons and (g) bows and arrows.

Mr. John Patten: Information on reported crimes involving firearms in 1987, by type of weapon, will be given in table 3.5 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1987", which is being published later this week. Information on convictions in 1987 for offences involving firearms, bringing up to date the information in table 7 of HOSB 2/88, is given in the table below and will be published in due course in a Home Office statistical bulletin. Corresponding information for crossbows, knives martial arts weapons and bows and arrows is not available. However, from an ad hoc survey covering 21 of the 43 police forces it is estimated that in 1987 about 1,000 (one in 12) of the recorded offences of violence against the person in England and Wales and about 8,000 (one in 4) of robberies and aggravated burglaries involved sharp instruments.

Table: Persons found guilty in 1987 of offences under the Firearms Act 1968 by type of offence
England and Wales

Possession of firearms with intent to endanger life or injure property	37

Person under 17 acquiring firearm	14
Making false statement in order to procure grant or renewal of firearm or shot gun certificate	150
Other summary offences	145
Total summary offences	1,658
All offences	2,695

[1] Section 1 includes all firearms (including imitations, conversions, signalling apparatus) except shot guns and air weapons as defined in sections 1(3)(a) and 1(3)(b) of the Firearms Act 1968.

Children (Fruit Machines)

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimates he has as to how much money children under 18 years and under 16 years are spending on fruit machines.

Mr. John Patten: The research carried out by the Home Office research and planning unit "Amusement Machines: Dependency and Delinquency" (research study No. 101) provides estimates for the amount of money spent by young people under the age of 17 on amusement-with-prizes (fruit) machines. No figures are provided for those aged 17 and the figures are not broken down for the ages under 17, and this information is not otherwise available.

The figures are set out in detail in paragraph 4 of the report. In summary, from the sample of 10 to 16-year-olds, 71 per cent. of fruit machine players spent less than £1 per week, 17 per cent. spent £1 to £2 per week and 10 per cent spent more than £2. The figures should properly be viewed in relation to the amount of spending money available to the players per week and the proportion of this which was spent on fruit machines; and estimates for these are given in the report.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to ban children under 18 years from playing fruit machines.

Mr. John Patten: No. I would refer the hon. Member to the statement I made in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon North (Mr. Gorst) on 28 July at columns 423-24.

Crime Investigations Priority Project

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the role and purpose of the crime investigations priority project.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the crime investigations priority project is a study of ways in which crime investigation is undertaken within the Metropolitan police. Its purpose is to identify ways in which investigative resources might be used more effectively.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he proposes to take to reduce the number of remand prisoners in police cells.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are more prisoners held in police cells because of industrial action by some branches of the Prison Officers Association. On 29 September, the Home Secretary invited the POA national leaders to work with prison service management to bring a rapid end to industrial action across the prison system and made clear our intention to take vigorous action if a significant improvement was not shortly forthcoming. Encouraging progress has been made. The POA branches in the four prisons recently involved in industrial action have undertaken to end their refusal to admit prisoners and the prisons should start to build up to capacity again this week.

Meanwhile, the measures to produce more prison places which the Home Secretary announced at the end of March are on target. In total, over 2,600 new places have been provided so far, including two new prisons which have opened in the past two months. A further 1,400 places will be delivered by the end of the financial year.

Member's Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, concerning Mr. M. Younis, about whom the right hon. Member first wrote to him on 4 May; and what are the reasons for this delay in response.

Mr. Hurd: I replied to the hon. Member's letter of 5 May on 30 June and sent him a copy of that reply on 20 October.

Indo-Chinese Refugees

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Indo-Chinese refugees from Hong Kong he now expects to be admitted to the United Kingdom in the next year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We will be admitting the remainder of 468 relatives of refugees already here whose acceptance was announced by my right hon. Friend on 8 May 1987 at column 547. We are considering proposals that have been made, in the light of developments in Hong Kong, for the United Kingdom to admit more.

PRIME MINISTER

"Next Steps"

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister whether those functions of the Civil Service which are given agency status as part of the "next steps" initiative will be exempt from privatisation; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Government's privatisation policies will continue. Before an agency is established, alternative options, including contracting out the work and privatisation will be examined. "Next steps" is primarily about those operations which are to remain within Government. I cannot rule out, however, that after a period of years agencies, like other Government activities, may be suitable for privatisation. Where there is a firm intention of privatisation when an agency is being set up, this should be made clear.

Environment Policies

Mr. Wray: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her Majesty's Government's top priorities on the environment and related issues for the next 24 months and indicate the Government Department or Departments involved in such policies and activities.

The Prime Minister: Her Majesty's Government's main priorities are to reduce further the use of ozone depleting chemicals and to prevent acid rain; to research climate change and the greenhouse effect and to take appropriate action; to protect the environment of the North sea; to strengthen the pollution control framework for water by establishing the National Rivers Authority; to establish an integrated pollution control system and reform the laws on waste disposal. In the developing countries of the Third world, we will direct more of our aid to encourage the wise and sustainable use of forest resources. A number of Government Departments are involved in these policies and activities.

Official Residences

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister if she will provide the final figure for 1987-88 for (a) the cost of maintaining and running 10 Downing street and additional costs at Chequers, (b) the grant-in-aid to the Chequers Trust and (c) the costs on a consistent basis, expressed at constant 1984-85 prices.

The Prime Minister: The figures requested are:

a. cost of maintaining and running 10 Downing street and additional costs at Chequers (1) (2) (3)	5,418,455
b. the grant-in-aid to the Chequers Trust	224,000
c. figures at (a) and (b) in 1984-85 price terms (4)	(a) 4,708,764
	(b) 194,661

Notes:

(1) The figure includes costs at both 10 Downing street and Chequers; the information is not available by location.

(2) Salaries and wages, notional pension liability, administration costs, the costs of office services and the grant-in-aid to the Chequers Trust are included. The salary of the Prime Minister is excluded.

(3) The figures are consistent with the estimates given in the reply to the hon. Member on 14 April 1988 at column 217. If office services costs are excluded (to put the figures on a consistent basis with those for 1986-87 given to the hon. Member on 23 October 1987 at column 846), the total for 1987-88 is £4,872,925 (£4,234,686 at constant 1984-85 prices).

(4) Constant costs have been calculated using the Treasury's GDP deflator for 1986-87 rebased to 1984-85.

Official Duties (Expenditure)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister what was the total cost to public funds of all her offices, duties, accommodation and expenses in 1987-88.

The Prime Minister: The total cost of all my offices in 1987-88 was £5,451,853(1).

Note:

(1) Salaries and wages, notional pension liability, administration costs and the grant-in-aid to the Chequers Trust are included. My salary as a Cabinet Minister is also included. My pay and allowances as a Member of this House are excluded.

Representations

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister which subject has generated most representations to her office from members of the public in the past 12 months; and if she is able to estimate the numbers by correspondence and telephone calls.

The Prime Minister: During the past 12 months I have received over 200,000 letters about various subjects and topical issues. No records are kept of the number of telephone calls.

Official Entertainment

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister what were the final 1987-88 figures for the total cost of official entertainment associated with the office of Prime Minister.

The Prime Minister: The 1987-88 final figure for the total cost of entertainment associated with the office of the Prime Minister was £9,756.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister what is the estimated cost for 1988-89 for entertainment associated with the office of the Prime Minister.

The Prime Minister: The estimated cost is £21,250. (This figure is not comparable with those given for previous years due to changes in the way in which costs are allocated to individual budgets.)

Australia (Visit)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her reply of 19 October, Official Report, column 856, how the charge of £1,750 to journalists was arrived at.

The Prime Minister: The charge to journalists was calculated with reference to the costs that they would have incurred had they flown by commercial carrier.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her reply of 19 October, Official Report, columns 855-56, if the figure she gave for the cost to public funds of her recent visit to Australia included the total sum for the Royal Air Force VC-10 aircraft and crew.

The Prime Minister: Yes.

British Rail

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister when she last travelled by British Rail on official business.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave him on 22 April 1988 at column 583.

Tidy Britain Initiative

Mr. Banks: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the progress of her Tidy Britain initiative launched on 22 March.

The Prime Minister: Nineteen experimental projects are under way which are intended to test new approaches to the problem of tackling litter. A review at the end of the year will draw lessons which will be capable of more general application. The Tidy Britain group reports that it is receiving good support for the projects from all sections of the community.

Conservative Party Conference

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister which Departments of state incurred costs associated with the 1988 conference of the Conservative party.

The Prime Minister: The Home Office and the Ministry of Defence both incurred costs associated with the provision of security relating to the 1988 Conservative party conference. A number of Departments incurred minor additional costs on transacting official business as a result of their Ministers' attendance at the conference.

Members (Hospitality)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her answer of 29 October 1987, Official Report, columns 359-60, how many Conservative hon. and right hon. Members have received hospitality at No. 10 Downing street since that date, and what is the estimated cost to public funds.

The Prime Minister: Since 29 October 1987, 108 Conservative hon. and right hon. Members have attended lunches (including working lunches) teas, dinners (including working dinners) and receptions at No. 10 Downing street. The costs of these attendances are not separately identifiable.

GCHQ

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her oral answer to the hon. Member for Bury, North (Mr. Burt) of 20 October, and the oral answer of the hon. Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave) the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, of 19 October, Official Report, column 882, whether the figure of 10,000 refers to man hours or man days lost at Government Communications Headquarters due to industrial action between 1979 and 1981.

The Prime Minister: I confirm that the figure of 10,000 man days is the correct one.

Security Services

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister, if she will set out her objections to the establishment of a Select Committee to oversee the security services; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: It has been the longstanding convention, under Governments of both parties, that the security services are responsible to the appropriate Secretary of State and through them to the Prime Minister. I believe that the establishment of a Select Committee would not represent an improvement in these arrangements.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

GATT (Uruguay Round)

114. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what action he proposes in the general agreement on tariffs and trade Uruguay round to stimulate exports from developing countries.

Mr. Alan Clark: The United Kingdom is seeking a more liberal multilateral trading system, the extension of GATT principles to agriculture, trade in services, investment and intellectual property and the strengthening of the GATT system by the closer integration of developing countries. These reforms will benefit all countries. The European Community has made it clear that it is willing to negotiate on all subjects of interest to the developing countries, including tropical products and textiles.

Steel Prices

Mr. Speller: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will request his colleagues in the EC to investigate alleged violations of European Community competition rules in respect of a cartel which decides prices for stainless steel.

Mr. Atkins: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 28 July at column 376.

Vacancies (London)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the latest available figures for his Department in the London pay area of the number of vacancies by grade and the proportion this is of the grade complement in London.

Mr. Forth: Information is not held by the Department in the form requested, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Local Pay Additions

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will provide the latest available figures for his Department for (a) numbers of staff in receipt of local pay additions, by grade, (b) location of those offices awarding local pay additions and (c) annual cost.

Mr. Forth: The approximate numbers of staff in receipt of local pay additions in my Department are: administrative assistant—770; administrative officer—1,200; typist—250; personal secretary—240; senior personal secretary—40; typing manager—27; executive officer—35. The additions are being paid (but not necessarily to all these grades in each location) in the Department's offices in central London, Croydon, Reigate, Eastcote, Reading, Watford, Kenley and Cambridge. The annual cost is approximately £1 million.

British Steel Corporation

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what studies he proposes or has made of the possibility of the separate flotation of the Scottish arm of the British Steel Corporation, in the event of its privatisation.

Mr. Atkins: A range of alternative options, including the separate sale of British Steel's Scottish operations, was considered before the Government announced, on 3 December last year, their decision to privatise British Steel as a single entity. The Government do not consider that there is any need for further studies of the issue.

Insider Trading

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will take steps to seek to amend the legislation on insider trading to make the offence consequent on acting upon rather than obtaining inside information.

Mr. Maude: There is no offence of obtaining inside information as such under the Company Securities (Insider Dealing) Act. All the offences under that Act depend on the prosecution showing that a person who has inside information has dealt on a recognised stock exchange or has done certain other acts.

Preferential Trade Arrangements

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to the answer of 29 July, Official Report, columns 653-61, what are the criteria used for the inclusion of a country in (a) Lomé convention preferential trading arrangements, (b) the European Community generalised scheme of preferences (GSP) list and (c) the European Community preferential trade agreements.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following criteria apply to the inclusion of countries in preferential trading arrangements:

Lomé convention

The Lomé convention is open to states whose economic structures and productive capacity are comparable with those of existing ACP member states. Membership is by approval of the EC/ACP Council of Ministers.

Generalised Scheme of Preferences

The European Community offers generalised preferences to all the member countries of the "Group of 77", which is made up of all those designated as developing countries by the United Nations, as well as to certain territories or countries dependent on Community countries such as Hong Kong, Macao and French Polynesia.

Other Preferential Trading Agreements

The EC has also agreed preferential trading arrangements with 13 Mediterranean partners during the course of the last 25 years, some of which are aimed at achieving a customs union between the contracting parties, and some at furthering the economic and social development of the Mediterranean partner as well as improving trade and other relations. They are the result of individual negotiation, and no general criteria apply.

Trade Deficit

Mr. Wray: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to which were the 15 countries with the highest balance of trade deficit in (a) terms of percentage of their gross domestic products, and (b) in pounds sterling, for each year since 1975.

Mr. Alan Clark: The analysis has been restricted to the members of OECD because a comparison involving all countries would involve disproportionate cost. Figures for all OECD countries up to 1986, the latest available on the balance of payments basis, are in the tables.

An index for commercial customers may be calculated by removing from British Telecom's telecommunications charges index those items which are included in the RPI. In addition to the telephone, this index includes charges for telex, leased lines and customer premises equipment, as follows:

Trade Missions

Mr. Wray: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many trade missions the Latin America Trade Advisory Group supported to (a) Mexico, (b) Bolivia, (c) Venezuela, (d) Panama and (e) Nicaragua, for each year since 1976.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Latin American Trade Advisory Group (LATAG) started sponsoring missions to Latin America in 1985. Since then there have been eight DTI-supported LATAG missions to the area, two visitied Venezuela in 1985 and 1986 and one Panama in March this year. The other Latin American countries visited by LATAG missions are Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Paraguay and Uruguay.

Scotch Whisky (Korea)

Sir John Farr: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent representations he has made to the Government of the Republic of Korea to permit the sale of bottled-at-origin Scotch whisky in Korea.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Korean authorities have undertaken to liberalise the market for bottled-in-Scotland Scotch whisky on 1 July 1989. We welcome this undertaking, but continue to press, both bilaterally and through the European Community, for firm details of the proposed measures. We have made our position clear to the authorities in Seoul, and the issue will be high on the agenda for forthcoming United Kingdom economic policy talks.

British Shipbuilders

Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met the chairman of British Shipbuilders; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Newton: I last met the chairman of British Shipbuilders on 17 October. We discussed a range of issues of current interest to the corporation, including the position on the disposal of its subsidiary companies.

Underwriting Agency Agreements

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what communications he has had with the council of Lloyd's following its consideration of the working group on underwriting agency agreements; and if he will place copies of the relevant correspondence in the Library.

Mr. Maude: The chairman of Lloyd's has kept my Department in close touch with the views of the council of Lloyd's on the subjects considered in the working group report on underwriting agency agreements. I understand that the council of Lloyd's will soon be taking decisions on these matters following extensive consultation with the members of Lloyd's and the Lloyd's community. It is not the practice to make public correspondence between Lloyd's and the Department. Parliament is kept informed on Lloyd's progress in implementing the recommendations of the committee of inquiry into regulatory arrrangements at Lloyd's—the Neill report—by the placing in the Library of regular memoranda from the chairman of Lloyd's.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, pursuant to the reply of 29 July, Official Report, column 749, he will list those factors which guide his continuous and comprehensive assessment of monetary conditions.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Member to recent financial statement and Budget reports, where the principles underlying the Government's monetary policy are set out each year in chapter 2, and also to my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer's speech to the Lombard Association in April 1986.

Conservative Party Conference

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many officials from his Department were on official duties in Brighton on the occasion of the 1988 Conservative party conference; and what was the total cost to public funds.

Mr. Brooke: Six officials from my Department were present in Brighton on various occasions during the 1988 Conservative party conference to assist Treasury Ministers in their conduct of departmental business. Minor travelling costs were incurred.

European Community (United Kingdom Contributions)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the table showing the net contribution made by the United Kingdom to the European Economic Community in each of the calendar years since 1973; and what is his estimate for 1988 and 1989, including the special payment for excess spending to be paid in 1988.

Mr. Brooke: The information requested is set out in the table. An estimate of the United Kingdom's net contribution in 1988 will be contained in the statement on the 1988 Community budget to be published shortly after the autumn statement. It is not the Government's practice to publish calendar year forecasts for future years.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average payment of value added tax made by a couple with two children now and in 1979.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 19 October 1988]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Financial Secretary gave to the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown) on 17 May at column 423.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Overseas Development Natural Resources Institute

87. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects the Overseas Development Natural Resources Institute to move to its new location at Chatham.

Mr. Chris Patten: The relocation of the Overseas Development Natural Resources Institute to its new site at Chatham maritime began on 1 August 1988. Phase 1 of the move was completed in late September and almost 60 per cent. of the institute staff are now operational at Chatham. Relocation of the remainder will be phased over the next year and is expected to be complete by the end of 1989.

EC Aid Budget

88. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of the European Community's aid budget is funded by him in the current financial year, and what trend that budget shows in real terms.

Mr. Chris Patten: We contribute 16·58 per cent. of the sixth European development fund, and paid 21·3 per cent. of aid financed from the Community budget in 1987, which is attributed to the British aid programme. I cannot yet give later figures.

The present EDF more than maintains the real value of its predecessor. We also judge that there was a slight real increase in budget-financed aid between 1985 and 1987.

Aga Khan Foundation

89. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what purpose he has signed an accord with the Aga Khan Foundation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The accord reflects the successful collaboration between the Aga Khan Foundation (UK) and the Overseas Development Administration and confirms our joint intention to consolidate that partnership in further development projects.

Since 1983, we have collaborated in five projects, the largest of which is the rural support programme for the Chitral district in the North West Frontier province of Pakistan to which the ODA will contribute a grant of £3·7 million. Following signature of the accord in May, three further joint-funded projects have been approved.

Water and Sewerage Projects

90. Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the water supply and sewerage projects being funded by him in developing countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: Under bilateral aid arrangements the Overseas Development Administration currently supports 88 water supply and sewerage projects in developing countries at a total cost of approximately £184 million.

Sub-Saharan Africa

91. Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total British bilateral aid given to the whole of sub-Saharan Africa in 1979, and in the latest year for which figures are available, in constant prices.

Mr. Chris Patten: British bilateral aid to sub-Saharan Africa was £386 million in 1979 and £284 million in 1987 in constant 1987 prices. On the same basis British aid to sub-Saharan Africa channelled through multilateral institutions rose from £161 million in 1980 to £209 million in 1986.

101. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received regarding aid to sub-Saharan Africa.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have frequent discussions with Ministers and senior officials from sub-Saharan African countries. Much of my mail bag is concerned with this subject.

113. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total British bilateral aid given to the whole of sub-Saharan Africa in 1979, and in the latest year for which figures are available, in constant prices.

Mr. Chris Patten: British bilateral aid to sub-Saharan Africa was £386 million in 1979 and £284 million in 1987 in constant 1987 prices. On the same basis British aid to sub-Saharan Africa channelled through multilateral institutions rose from £161 million in 1980 to £209 million in 1986.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total United Kingdom bilateral aid given to the whole of sub-Saharan Africa in 1979 and in the latest year for which figures are available, in constant prices.

Mr. Chris Patten: British bilateral aid to sub-Saharan Africa was £386 million in 1979 and £284 million in 1987 in constant 1987 prices. On the same basis British aid to sub-Saharan Africa channelled through multilateral institutions rose from £161 million in 1980 to £209 million in 1986.

Apartheid

92. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the United Kingdom contribution to the European Community's special programme for the victims of apartheid, in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Chris Patten: Our share of expenditure under this special programme was £1·95 million in 1987, and our share of commitments was £2·8 million.

Malawi

93. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, when he next intends to make an official visit to Malawi.

Mr. Chris Patten: I hope to visit Malawi in the first half of next year.

Self-reliance

94. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his Department does to encourage self-reliance in those areas and among those peoples in receipt of aid.

Mr. Chris Patten: The basic purpose of the aid programme is to promote sustainable economic and social progress in developing countries. Self-reliance is developed particularly through our technical co-operation programmes, including the training of developing country personnel, and through support to countries undergoing agreed structural adjustment programmes designed to increase exports and develop the private sector.

Afghanistan

95. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance he is currently giving to Afghan refugees; and how he proposes to aid their rehabilitation in Afghanistan.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have now fully committed the £10 million which was pledged for Afghan refugees earlier this year. These funds have been channelled through the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the International Committee for the Red Cross, UNICEF and British voluntary agencies, including Afghan Aid.

We are continuing to keep in close contact with the United Nations special co-ordinator for Afghanistan, as he draws up his plans for the relief and resettlement of the refugees. In view of the importance of agricultural rehabilitation in this process, I have recently agreed to provide £150,000 to assist the work of the agricultural survey of Afghanistan.

Third World (Private Aid)

96. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the size of private aid flows to the Third world from other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries, in relation to those from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Chris Patten: Comparative figures for grants to developing countries by voluntary agencies, which are the only type of net private aid flow recorded, are available only for the 18 member countries of the OECD's development assistance committee and, most recently, for 1986.

Following is the information:

Voluntary Grants

	£ million
Australia	27
Austria	13
Belgium	16
Canada	120
Denmark	8
Finland	19
France	57
Germany	372
Ireland	14
Italy	8
Japan	56
Netherlands	95
New Zealand	5
Norway	39
Sweden	58
Switzerland	45
United States of America	1,196

In the same year the figure for grants from British voluntary agencies was £119 million, while total net private flows from the United Kingdom to developing countries stood at £2,916 million.

English Language Teachers

97. Mr. Rhodes James: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many English language teachers are supported under his Department's overseas aid budget; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: At 31 December 1987 the Overseas Development Administration was supporting 137 key English language teachers-advisers and 41 English language lecturers in some 45 countries at a cost of £5·5 million in the calendar year 1987.

OECD

98. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the development assistance committee of the Organisation for Economic co-operation and Development will next review the development assistance efforts and policies of Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Chris Patten: The next review is on 1 December 1988.

Aid (Priorities)

99. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last reviewed Her Majesty's Government's priorities for granting aid assistance.

Mr. Chris Patten: Priorities for granting aid assistance are kept under continuous review.

Spain and Portugal

100. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the impact on the European Community's aid programme of the accession of Spain and Portugal.

Mr. Chris Patten: Spain and Portugal are making a valuable contribution to the consideration of European Community aid policies, and to proposals for specific projects.

Sri Lanka

102. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last paid an official visit to Sri Lanka.

Mr. Chris Patten: I visited Sri Lanka between 16 and 19 March of this year.

Kampuchea

103. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives are being considered by Her Majesty's Government in respect of a revival of the Mekong river project; and what consideration has been given to the use of this scheme as a means of international support to the current development needs of Kampuchea.

Mr. Chris Patten: As I told the hon. Member on 13 July, at column 206, we expect to spend about £100,000 in the current financial year in support of two projects managed by the interim Mekong committee. We hope that in the longer term the full committee will be reconstituted but believe it would be premature to consider now any initiatives to revive proposals for major projects to develop the Mekong river.

Nicaragua

104. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to the level of aid to Nicaragua provided by the Government of Italy; if he will increase the United Kingdom's aid to Nicaragua to that figure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The latest figures we have from the development assistance committee are those for 1986. They show that bilateral aid from Italy to Nicaragua amounted to US$13·7 million. We have no plans to increase our aid to Nicaragua.

India

105. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to review the scope of British aid to India.

Mr. Chris Patten: We review our aid to India regularly. We expect India to remain our largest bilateral aid programme. How much we spend is determined by what we can afford and the rate at which we and the Indian authorities agree on projects. As agreed with the Indian authorities we will continue to concentrate on projects to promote economic growth and to alleviate poverty.

EC (Price Review)

106. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he was consulted by the EEC Commission over the changes in aid consequent upon the price review.

Mr. Chris Patten: The level of EC aid has not been affected by the Community's agricultural price review.

Ethiopia

107. Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance Her Majesty's Government is providing to help the recent large influxes of Sudanese and Somali refugees into Ethiopia.

Mr. Chris Patten: So far in 1988 we have provided over £5·6 million—£4 million to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in the form of cash and foodstuffs, and £1·5 million to British voluntary agencies working with UNHCR to supply water and medical services to Somalis in south-east Ethiopia. We are considering what further help might be provided.

Private Aid

108. Mr. Ashby: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his Department is doing to encourage private aid flows to developing countries.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Government help the voluntary sector in four principal ways:

1. By changes in tax concessions aimed at encouraging charitable donations;
2. Through matching, under the joint funding scheme, the cost of agreed long-term development projects mounted by British voluntary agencies;
3. By providing substantial grants to the volunteer recruitment agencies on the condition that the agencies themselves meet pre-agreed fund-raising targets; and
4. By making immediate and substantial contributions to appeals launched by the Disasters Emergency Committee.

In addition, the Government have helped through the abolition of exchange controls and in other ways to promote substantial flows of United Kingdom private investment to the developing countries.

Immunisation

109. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report further progress on the UNICEF global immunisation programme, and the United Kingdom contribution thereto.

Mr. Chris Patten: By 1 September UNICEF had committed just under US$302 million to immunisation projects or 71 per cent. of what they estimate to be needed.

This year the United Kingdom will give a record £7·5 million to UNICEF's general resources, and some of this will go towards programmes which increasingly contain an immunisation element. In addition, so far this year we have provided almost £6 million to UNICEF special appeals which also contain an immunisation element.

Consultancy Contracts

110. Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many new consultancy contracts his Department agreed in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what was their value.

Mr. Chris Patten: In the year ending 31 March 1988, the Overseas Development Administration agreed 173 new consultancy contracts worth £30,870,000.

West Bank and Gaza

111. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on British aid to the West Bank and Gaza.

Mr. Chris Patten: In the current financial year we aim to spend about £850,000 on bilateral assistance to the occupied territories. This will cover grants to British non-governmental organisations for health and community work including the special contribution that I agreed to make earlier this year to the St. John's ophthalmic hospital in Jerusalem. It will also finance training for Palestinian students in Britain and the supply of books to certain Palestinian institutions.

Japan

112. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met representatives of the Government of Japan to discuss overseas development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: I am in frequent contact with representatives of the Government of Japan. I visited Tokyo as recently as 4 to 8 July when I had wide-ranging discussions with the Japanese Government on overseas development issues.

Pan-American Health Organisation

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's funding directly and indirectly to the Pan-American Health Organisation in the current financial year; and whether there has been any previous funding.

Mr. Chris Patten: The British Government do not make a direct contribution to the Pan-American Health Organisation. The Pan-American Health Organisation receives support from member states and from its parent body the World Health Organisation. In 1988-89 we are providing £16·6 million in support of the World Health Organisation's regular budget and a number of special programmes.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement explaining the cause of the recent error in the jobless totals for April, May and June for various parts of the United Kingdom, including the Borders region in Scotland; if he will ensure that the errors will not cause prejudice to the areas concerned in assessing entitlement to Government assistance; and if he will take steps to ensure that such errors will not occur again.

Mr. Lee: The error in the jobless totals in the Borders region of Scotland in April, May and June was the result of a defect in the post code directory used to allocate claimants post codes to the ward in which they live. The Scottish total was not affected. The post code directory is produced by the Office for Population Censuses and Surveys and using information for Scotland coming from the General Register Office for Scotland. The directory was corrected before the July unemployment figures were compiled.

Revised figures for the areas affected have been published so that the original figures will not cause prejudice in assessing entitlement to Government assistance. Checks have been introduced to avoid the recurrence of this error. Also, additional checks have been built into the Department's system for producing unemployment figures.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current level of (a) unemployment and (b) job vacancies in the travel-to-work area of Bradford; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. On 8 September 1988, the number of unemployed claimants in the Bradford travel-to-work area was 22,198 or 10·4 per cent. of employees in employment plus the unemployed, compared with 27,522 or 12·7 per cent. a year ago. The September 1988 figures include some over-recording. On 2 September 1988 the number of unfilled vacancies registered at jobcentres which closely correspond to the Bradford travel-to-work area was 1,790 compared with 1,846 a year ago.

Labour Costs

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the relative movement of unit labour costs in the United Kingdom and the other European Economic Community countries since 1979.

Mr. Lee: International comparisons of unit labour costs for the whole economy are not available. However, the available information for manufacturing industries is provided in the table:

Unit labour costs in manufacturing (increases) percentage change since 1979

Country	Per cent.
Netherlands	7·0
Belgium	10·7
Germany	26·8
United Kingdom	54·7
Ireland	55·2
Denmark	62·8
France	73·2
Spain	91·3
Italy	108·9

Notes:

1. The percentages are calculated from index series produced by the International Monetary Fund; the latest available figures are for the first quarter of 1988.
2. Figures for Greece, Luxembourg and Portugal are not available.
3. The source index series are in local currency and are not adjusted for exchange rate changes.

Pollution (North Sea)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the future of the tourist industry in North sea resorts, in the light of reports during the summer of seal deaths and pollution caused by industrial waste, marine incineration, sewage sludge containers and waste substance.

Mr. Lee: I have seen no evidence that these reports are having any adverse effects on the number of visitors to North sea resorts. Indeed, I understand that many resorts are reporting excellent business during the 1988 main season and anticipate an equally buoyant autumn.

However, I remain concerned about these reports. Hence I welcome the initiatives which the Government are taking, including the research into seal immune systems commissioned by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, which will seek to establish whether pollution may have exacerbated the effects of the disease which caused this year's seal deaths.

Employment Training Programme

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any proposals to meet the council of the Trades Union Congress to discuss the employment training programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has no such plans.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Rain Forests

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) when he last discussed with his European counterparts, the United States of America Administration and the Brazilian Government the destruction of the rain forests in the Amazon basin;

(2) if he will list British, European Community and other international initiatives aimed at concerted action to stop the destruction of rain forests in Brazil;

(3) what specific proposals Her Majesty's Government, the European Community and other countries are discussing in order to begin the reforestation of rain forests in Brazil.

Mr. Eggar: I Intend to raise these issues with the Brazilian Government during my visit to Brazil in early November.

We keep in touch with our European Community partners and the US Administration on this matter in the International Tropical Timber Organisation and in other fora. The United Kingdom is a major participant in scientific research on the reafforestation of the Amazon.

The hon. Member may be aware that the Brazilian Government have recently announced an initiative aimed at limiting the destruction of the rain forests.

Chile

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last discussed the situation of Chile with the Chilean ambassador or other Chilean authorities.

Mr. Eggar: The Chilean ambassador called on me on 11 October to discuss the outcome of the plebiscite. Her Majesty's ambassador in Santiago also remains in frequent contact with the Chilean authorities.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last discussed with his European counterparts and the United States of America Administration the situation in Chile and the ways in which the opposition in Chile could be further supported in their aims to bring about a civilian and democratic government.

Mr. Eggar: We have continuing contact with our European partners and with the United States Administration on Chile. The 7 October statement by the 12 member states of the European Community, a copy of which is in the Library of the House, describes the commitment of the 12 to the restoration of democracy in Chile.

Nicaragua

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards referring to the Government of Nicaragua as the Sandinista Government; and what considerations underlie that policy.

Mr. Eggar: There is no such policy.

Public Representations

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which subject within his Department's range of responsibilities has generated most representations from the public in the past 12 months; and if he is able to estimate the numbers by correspondence and telephone calls.

Mr. Eggar: Consular inquiries account for the largest number of representations from the public. Statistics are not available.

Adolfo Calero

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any assistance, facilities or advice were made available by his Department to Adolfo Calero on the occasion of his visit to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: No.

US Embassy (Firearms)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to the quantity and type of firearms held within the United States embassy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We regularly remind all heads of mission of United Kingdom law on the possession and carriage of firearms, but it is not our practice to comment on the position of individual missions.

Kampuchea

Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his policy towards Kampuchea, with regard to (a) the provision of reconstruction and development aid to that country and (b) diplomatic relations with the coalition Government of democratic Kampuchea.

Mr. Eggar: We concentrate our aid on the humanitarian needs of the victims of years of conflict in Cambodia. We are not prepared to give development aid to help sustain in power the illegal Vietnamese-backed regime in Phnom Penh.

Her Majesty's Government do not recognise the coalition Government of democratic Kampuchea (we recognise only states) and have no dealings with the coalition as a Government.

BBC External Services

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of those countries currently known to be jamming the output of the British Broadcasting Corporation external services.

Mr. Eggar: BBC world service output is not intentionally jammed anywhere at present.

ENERGY

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what specific (i) economic, (ii) commercial, (iii) financial and (iv) technical factors will introduce real competition after electricity privatisation; and if he will detail how such competition will reduce (a) the cost of supplies, (b) the cost of the labour force, and will increase (c) investment, (d) research and development and (e) efficiency, and, in general, reduce the prices of electricity to domestic and non-domestic consumers;

(2) what specific (i) economic, (ii) commercial, (iii) financial and (iv) technical factors he considered when concluding that his privatisation proposals will produce real competition in the generating of electricity.

Mr. Michael Spicer: There is no natural monopoly in the generation of electricity, which accounts for about 80 per cent. of the total cost of electricity. Our proposals will introduce competition in generation and will also provide scope for generators and others to compete with distribution companies in supplying customers directly. Competition in these areas will help protect customers from monopoly abuse and put downward pressure on costs.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to the western countries in which the generation of electricity by nuclear power is in the hands of (i) the state, (ii) the private sector and (iii) the state and private sector.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The information requested by the hon. Member is as follows:

State
France	Netherlands
Italy	South Africa
Canada	United Kingdom
Private
West Germany	Belgium
Japan
Private/Public
USA	Switzerland
Spain	Finland
Sweden

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will detail the effects on efficiency produced by the separation of generation from transmission in his electricity privatisation proposals and his measures to deal with such effects;

(2) if he can now give a detailed estimate of the extra cost of splitting the transmission responsibilities of electricity from the main generators in his privatisation proposals.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government believe that any additional costs that might arise from the transfer of ownership of the grid will be outweighed by the benefits of increased competition. The separation of the grid from the generators is an essential step to increase competition in generation. The distribution companies, which will own the grid company, will have every reason to encourage new generators to connect to the system. No generator owning the grid would have such an incentive.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if, in his proposals for the privatisation of the electricity system, he will introduce measures aimed at preventing area board mergers or any other similar move likely to produce monopolistic practices;

(2) what proposals he has to avoid monopolistic practices in the generation, distribution and commercialisation of electricity once the privatisation of the electricity system is put into operation.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Our privatisation proposals will introduce effective competition in the generation and supply of electricity. Detailed proposals for regulating those areas where monopolies will remain after privatisation will be included in legislation and licences for the new companies.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are his specific proposals for the proper representation of consumers of domestic and commercial electric power once the electricity system is privatised.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The White Paper, Privatising Electricity (Cm. 322), made it clear that arrangements will be made for maintaining an effective voice for customers' interests after privatisation. We want to ensure that none of the benefits of the existing customer representation arrangements are lost.

The detailed arrangements necessary to achieve our objective are still under consideration. We have undertaken detailed and lengthy discussions with all the existing area electricity consultative councils and the Electricity Consumers' Council and will take their views into account when finalising the future arrangements for consumer representation.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are his proposals for the regulation of the lower voltage grid in the case of privatisation of the electricity system.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The regulatory regime will ensure access to the lower voltage system on reasonable terms.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are his specific proposals for the responsibility for planning electricity generation and supply in Britain in the event of the privatisation of the electricity system.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Distribution companies in England and Wales will have a statutory obligation to supply and will need to determine the amount of electricity that they will require to meet demand and satisfy the obligation. They will then obtain this by contracting for sufficient capacity and energy from generating companies, or by generating themselves.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what information he has about the prices to (i) domestic and (ii) non-domestic consumers of 1 kwh (unit) of electricity in (a) Belgium, (b) Denmark, (c) France, (d) the Federal Republic of Germany, (e) Holland, (f) Italy, (g) Norway, (h) Spain, (i) Sweden (j) the United Kingdom and (k) the United States of America on 30 June;

(2) what information he has on the annual changes in electricity prices (in percentages) in (a) Belgium, (b) Denmark, (c) France, (d) the Federal Republic of Germany, (e) Holland, (f) Italy, (g) Norway, (h) Spain, (i) Sweden, (j) the United Kingdom and (k) the United States of America for each year since 1975 up to the 30 June;

(3) what information he has as to the average percentage increase in electricity prices to (a) domestic and (b) commercial consumers in (i) Belgium, (ii) Denmark, (iii) France, (iv) the Federal Republic of Germany, (v) The Netherlands, (vi) Norway, (vii) Spain, (viii) Sweden and (ix) the United Kingdom for each year since 1974.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The table gives the price in pence per kWh at 1 July in 20 countries and shows that domestic and industrial electricity prices in England and Wales remain in the mid-range of both European and world prices.

	Domestic	Industrial
Australia	5·15	4·15
Austria	8·34	4·84
Belgium	9·09	4·07
Canada	3·44	2·35
Denmark	8·35	2·38
England and Wales	6·81	4·20
Finland	4·59	2·93
France	7·40	3·72
Germany	9·41	6·23
Greece	6·23	4·46
Ireland	7·40	4·23
Italy	9·49	4·57
Japan	10·74	7·21
Korea	9·14	4·23
Netherlands	6·30	3·14
Portugal	6·94	4·78
South Africa	3·68	2·04
Spain	8·16	4·76
Sweden	4·16	2·50
USA	7·32	5·04

We have no detailed information as to historic annual percentage price increases for these countries.

Electricity Generation

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to those western countries in which the generation of electricity depends for more than 50 per cent. on (i) coal, (ii) hydro electric power, (iii) oil, (iv) gas and (v) nuclear power.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The western countries of the IEA and OECD in which the generation of electricity depends for more than 50 per cent. on one fuel are as follows:

	per cent.
(i) Coal
United States of America	57·2
West Germany	54·4
Luxembourg	50·0
Australia	77·2
Greece	71·8
United Kingdom	71·0
Denmark	95·9
Yugoslavia	58·1
(ii) Hydro electricity
Canada	62·5
Norway	98·7
New Zealand	80·4

Iceland	100·0
(iii) Gas
Netherlands	59·4
(iv) Nuclear
France	69·9

This information is based on estimated data for 1987 contained in the IEA publication "Coal Information 1988". Table 13—"Electricity Production by Fuel".

Select Committee

Mr. Wray To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to reply to the third report of the Select Committee on Energy (HC,1987-88, 307), and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: I expect to reply shortly.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Partially Sighted Society

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what extra moneys he has given to the Partially Sighted Society; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the annual grant made by his Department to the Partially Sighted Society; for what purposes; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will increase the annual grant to the Partially Sighted Society; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The Partially Sighted Society has received grant aid towards headquarters costs since 1977. Following a recent review, a grant of £10,000 a year for three years has been awarded from this year. There has also been an additional grant this year of £20,000 to help the society with the cost of its low vision aid service.

Benefits

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will increase the £250 limit on benefit payments made by uncrossed girocheque, in view of the increases in benefit rates since it was fixed at that level and the difficulties it can cause to claimants who have no bank accounts.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The level at which girocheques are to be crossed is determined by Girobank in conjunction with the Post Office and the Department. The level is subject to regular review when account is taken of (a) the number of payments of benefit above the uncrossed level and (b) the need to protect both the beneficiary and the Department from fraudulent encashment of large amounts.

The current level was introduced in 1986 and was reviewed in 1987 at which time there was no evidence to support an increase in the uncrossed level. A further review will take place shortly. Claimants who do not have a bank account are advised that a relative, friend, employer or tradesman may help to cash a girocheque or, if difficulty continues, to contact the local social security office to arrange for payment to be split into two, or more, uncrossed girocheques.

Social Fund

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many people in (a) Scotland, (b) Strathclyde, (c) Greater Glasgow, and (d) Glasgow, Provan, were successful in their applications to the social fund, by 30 September;

(2) how many people applied for social fund grants in (a) Scotland, (b) Strathclyde, (c) Greater Glasgow and (d) Glasgow, Provan up to 30 September;

(3) what proportion of the social fund allocated to Glasgow, Provan for 1988-89 was spent by 30 September.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Of the local offices of the Department in Scotland, those contained within the Strathclyde region, excluding those within the area of Greater Glasgow, are Airdrie, Ayr, Bellshill, Campbeltown, Clydebank, Coatbridge, Cumbernauld, Dumbarton, East Kilbride, Greenock, Hamilton, Irvine, Johnstone, Kilmarnock, Motherwell, Oban, Paisley and Port Glasgow but their boundaries are not conterminous.

The offices contained within the Strathclyde region which are also in the Greater Glasgow area are Glasgow Anniesland, Glasgow Bridgeton, Glasgow City, Glasgow Craigton, Glasgow Cranstonhill, Glasgow Laurieston, Glasgow Maryhill, Glasgow Parkhead, Glasgow Partick, Glasgow Provan, Glasgow Rutherglen, Glasgow South Side, and Glasgow Springburn.

Information on numbers of applications for social fund loans and grants received, processed and awarded, listed by local office, including information on budget allocations and expenditure, is available in the Library.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications have been made to date for social fund (a) community care grants, (b) budgeting loans, and (c) crisis loans; and how many have been refused in each category.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information for the period 11 April to 31 August 1988 (the latest for which figures are available) is as follows:

	Decisions made	Applications refused
Community Care Grants	73,430	40,059
Budgeting Loans	281,968	124,793
Crisis Loans	167,979	24,904

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many cases have been taken to review by (a) a social fund officer and (b) a social fund inspector in the categories of (a) community care grants, (b) budgeting loans and (c) crisis loans; and what proportion of such reviews were (1) refused and (2) decided in the applicant's favour.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is given in the tables.

Reviews by Social Fund Officers: 11 April 1988-31 August 1988

	Total No. of review decisions	Decisions revised (as percentage of total)	Decisions not changed (as percentage of total)
Community Care Grants	4,336	34	66
Budgeting Loans	20,135	32	68
Crisis Loans	3,336	49	51
Total	27,807	34	66

Reviews by Social Fund Inspectors: 11 April 1988-30 September 1988

	Total No. taken to review	Decisions substituted by SFI (as percentage of total)	Referred back to SFO for determination (as percentage of total)	Confirmed by SFI (as percentage of total)
Community Care Grants	133	2	36	62
Budgeting Loans	437	—	38	62
Crisis Loans	51	6	37	57
Total	621	1	38	62

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many reviews of social fund decisions are waiting determination by (a) social fund officers and (b) social fund inspectors.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of applications for review by social fund officers awaiting determination on 31 August 1988 was 3,523. The number of applications for review by social fund inspectors on 30 September 1988 was 263.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will establish an internal inquiry into the reasons for social fund payments at his Department's Halifax office running at 50 per cent. of the budgeted level; and if he will issue guidelines to encourage higher levels of payment.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no plans to initiate an inquiry into levels of social fund payments at the Department's Halifax office, or to issue further guidance. At present loans expenditure is close to the amounts profiled and the office has undertaken a number of initiatives to promote awareness of community care grants.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide figures on community care grants from the social fund in Scotland for (a) the number of applications for funds to cover the cost of hospital visits, (b) the number of the above applications that have been approved and (c) the total sum of money paid out to successful applicants at (i) each area office and (ii) in Scotland as a whole.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Homeless Unemployed

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many of the homeless unemployed in the United Kingdom have families of one or more children;

(2) how many of the unemployed in (a) Scotland, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Glasgow are also homeless;

(3) how many of the unemployed in England and Wales are also homeless;

(4) how many of the homeless unemployed have families of one or more children in (a) Scotland, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Glasgow.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Family Credit

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for family credit are still to be determined; and what is the average time currently taken for the determination of a family credit claim.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: At 14 October 1988 there were 62,299 claims for family credit still to be determined. Of these, there were 37,238 where replies to inquiries were awaited, mainly from employers about earnings, before further action could proceed.

The average time between receipt and determination of claims cleared during September 1988 was 29·7 working days. During much of that period clearance times were affected by the postal dispute, particularly in delaying further inquiries. Prior to the dispute, in August, the average clearance time was just over the target of 18 working days.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of people entitled to family credit have claimed it.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A precise estimate of the number of people currently entitled to family credit cannot be made until information from the 1988 family expenditure survey is available.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if a deadline has been imposed on claims for transitional protection for those people recently affected by reductions in housing benefit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No cut-off date for applications has yet been announced.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps were taken to inform potential claimants of the transitional protection of housing benefit; and what proportion of potential claimants have applied for transitional protection.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Over 8 million leaflets have been printed and more than 4 million of these have been distributed to various advice centres, DSS local offices and local authorities, together with posters encouraging people to apply. A national press publicity campaign was launched during week commencing 23 May and a further campaign was launched at the end of July. In addition some local authorities have been advising claimants directly where they are able to anticipate eligibility to transitional payments. A freepost address and a freeline telephone number have been in operation since early May, giving information and advice on the scheme. Applications are still being received each day and the number received to date stands at just under 350,000.

Family Statistics

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in Great Britain (a) over pension age and (b) under pension age are (i) below, (ii) on and (iii) up to 40 per cent. above supplementary benefit level; how many children there are in each group; and how many heads of households in each group are (x) in work, (y) unemployed or (z) sick or disabled.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The figures are set out in the table.

Thousands

	Below the Supplementary Benefit Scale Rates	In receipt of Supplementary Benefit or HBS[1]	Up to 140 per cent. of the Supplementary Benefit Benefit Scale Rates (but not receiving Supp Benefit)
Estimated number of persons in 1985:
Over pension age	960	1,880	3,690
Under pension age	1,460	5,080	4,780
Estimated number of children in 1985: in families
Over pension age	[2]	[2]	[2]
Under pension age	360	1,890	1,650
Estimated number of heads of households in 1985:
In full-time work	240	—	980
Unemployed	320	1,540	490
Sick or disabled	50	220	210

[1] HBS = Housing Benefit Supplement.
[2] below 10,000.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of couples, either married or cohabiting, in which the man is unemployed and the woman is employed or receiving social security benefits as head of household.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information is not available.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give figures showing the numbers and proportion of all households in Great Britain in which the head of household is a woman.

Mrs. Currie: I have been asked to reply.

It is estimated that in spring 1987 there were 21·404 million households in Great Britain, of which 5.086 million or 23·8 per cent. were headed by a woman.

Notes:

1. The source of the estimates is the 1987 Labour Force Survey. The estimates were produced by the Department of Employment.
2. All married couple households are assumed to be headed by the man.
3. Analysis of General Household Survey results for 1985 shows that in that year about 50 per cent. of households headed by a woman consisted of a woman aged 60 or over living alone; and that a further 14 per cent. of such households contained at least one child (i.e. person aged 15 or under).

Poverty

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table setting out the figures for those his Department accepts as living in poverty in September.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There is no official definition of "poverty" and no generally agreed way in which to quantify it. Nor has there ever been any suggestion of, or acceptance by, any Government, irrespective of party, that it is possible to draw any simple poverty line.

Supplementary Pensions and Allowances

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give figures showing the number and proportion of recipients of supplementary pensions and supplementary allowances in May 1987 who were (a) women and (b) lone parents.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is as follows:

	Total claimants (Thousands)	Women (Thousands)	Lone parents (Thousands)
Supplementary pension claimants	1,727	1,280 (74 per cent.)	3 (0·17 per cent.)
Supplementary allowance claimants	3,169	1,256 (40 per cent.)	661 (21 per cent.)

Benefit Advice Shops

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his policy towards the provision of benefit advice shops by local authorities.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A number of organisations, including local authorities, make a voluntary contribution towards the provision of social security benefit advice. But the prime source of advice and information is the Department, via its local office network.

Bradford

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of extra staff likely to be needed at his Department's offices at Vicar lane and Leeds road, Bradford, in the light of the 9,000 redundancies over five years announced by Bradford city council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Levels of staff in DSS offices are determined through a complementing system which has been developed and agreed by management and trade unions and consists of constant measurement of activity, annual recomplementing and reviews of staffing levels. It is designed to match staff to workloads by calculating the number of staff to be allocated to local offices using statistical information on workloads collected by local offices. This information, together with other factors, is used to forecast future workloads which are converted into staffing resources using the average times required to carry out different tasks. The system is therefore designed to reflect differences in caseloads experienced by different offices.

It is not possible to be specific on the possible effect of redundancies on the local office workloads at this stage. However a broad estimate of two to three staff would be required to service the work generated by 1,000 claims over a year.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the likely cost of additional benefits payments arising from the 9,000 redundancies over five years announced by Bradford city council.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No such estimate has been made.

Crisis Loans

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received about the payment of crisis loans in the form of vouchers made out to one particular retailer; what is his policy on this matter; and if he will take steps to ensure that all such future loans provided by his Department will not restrict the freedom of choice of recipients.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None. Guidance contained in the social fund manual makes it clear that crisis loans will usually be made by giro cheque payable to the applicant. Social fund officers may however decide to make a payment wholly, or in part, by voucher if this is likely to be to the benefit of the applicant or his family. We have no plans to alter this guidance.

DEFENCE

Aviation Support Ship

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will be in a position to invite tenders for an aviation support ship.

Mr. Sainsbury: The House will recall that my right hon. Friend announced in December 1986 the Government's decision to retain an amphibious capability in the longer term. As part of the continuing review of how best to meet this commitment, the method of providing helicopter lift, including the concept of an aviation support ship, has been considered.

In the summer, my Department gave a presentation to Industry which outlined our requirements for an ASS and our intention to procure the vessel on a "prime contractorship" basis. I am pleased to be able to announce that an invitation to tender for the ASS is being issued today to those consortia who subsequently expressed an interest in bidding and meet our criteria.

Tenderers will be free to offer varying options for meeting the requirement, not just by new design and build. Other options might include new build to an existing but suitably modified merchant ship design, or by the conversion of an existing merchant ship hull. The successful prime contractor will also be responsible for the selection, procurement and setting to work of the weapons and associated system.

Surplus Housing

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many housing units in the ownership of his Department are surplus to requirements in the Plymouth and surrounding area; and what plans he has to dispose of them.

Mr. Freeman: A total of 486 housing units in the ownership of the Ministry of Defence have been identified as surplus to requirements in Plymouth and the surrounding area. Over the next 12 months it is expected that 164 will be offered for sale to service personnel under the discount scheme, 278 will be sold on the open market and 44 will be demolished.

Surplus Land

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many acres of land in Plymouth and the surrounding area in the ownership of his Department are surplus to requirements; and if he will make a statement on his plans for their disposal.

Mr. Freeman: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence announced last November, we are planning to dispose of a number of sites in the Plymouth area over the next few years. Some 70 acres are involved including the Royal William yard. Devonport Management Ltd. has also indicated that part of the area licensed from the Ministry of Defence in south yard can also be released. We are in discussion with Plymouth city council and have already agreed to work with it in planning the release of land, which will be sold on the open market, to support the concept of comprehensive redevelopment of the Stonehouse bay area. We have engaged consultants to advise us in this work and hope to make very early progress.

Drugs Research

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what research on drugs affecting perception and reaction time of service personnel is being or has been carried out at Porton Down during the past five years.

Mr. Sainsbury: Tests of perception and reaction time are included in studies by the chemical defence establishment at Porton Down of medicinal drugs used to increase servicemens' resistance to chemical agents. These tests are standard and widely used and are basic to investigating the ability of service personnel to function efficiently whilst using protective systems.

Cruise Missiles

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department has incurred any expenditure in respect of exercises involving cruise missiles based at Greenham Common since the ratification of the intermediate range nuclear forces treaty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not the practice, for both operational and security reasons, to give details of matters relating to these exercises. As my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, North (Mr. Stewart) said in his reply to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 3 December at column 708, cruise missiles off-base training exercises from Greenham Common will continue until the missiles are withdrawn from the base.

Armed Forces Pension Scheme

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the cost would be in the current year if the 1973 improvements in the armed forces pension scheme were to be extended to (a) pre-1973 war widows and (b) service men entitled to disability pension in respect of injuries received before 1973.

Mr. Freeman: It is estimated that if the 1973 improvements to the armed forces pensions scheme were extended so as to pay pensions on the same basis and rates as for current awards, the additional cost for the full year would be (a) for war widows, in the region of £200 million and (b) for disabled ex-service men, in the region of £400 million.

Conservative Party Conference (Security)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 19 October, Official Report, column 860, if he will now give the total cost to his Department of (a) the military personnel deployed to assist the police, (b) HMS Nurton and (c) the three boats crewed by Royal Marines all being involved in security work associated with the 1988 Conservative party conference.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing further to add to my answer to the hon. Member of 19 October.

Harland and Wolff

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is his Department's policy on inviting tenders from the Belfast shipyard of Messrs. Harland and Wolff;

(2) whether he has invited shipyards to submit proposals for a new aviation support ship; whether Messrs. Harland and Wolff of Belfast will be given an opportunity to be considered for this project; and if he will make a statement.

(3) how many shipbuilding firms he made a presentation for the proposed new aviation support ship; why Messrs. Harland and Wolff were not invited to this presentation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 21 October 1988]: A total of 61 companies responded positively to the invitation to attend a presentation given by my Department on the aviation support ship in June of this year, including seven private shipbuilding companies. The invitation to tender is being issued today, with tenders to be returned in July 1989. It is not envisaged that the order will be placed before 1990.

The Government have made it clear that a private sector Harland and Wolff will, subject to its suitability and eligibility, be able to tender for MOD contracts. On this basis, whether then it will be able and would wish to tender for the current contract will clearly depend on whether the future structure of the company can be resolved within the limited time available.

HEALTH

NHS (Review)

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received in response to the fifth report of the Social Services Select Committee on the future of the National Health Service.

Mrs. Currie: We have received a number of representations relating to the areas of policy addressed in the Committee's fifth report, and one specifically in response to it. We shall respond to the report in due course.

Private Nursing Homes

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is, for each year since 1974, the public expenditure in private nursing homes in 1988 moneys.

Mrs. Currie: Information in the form requested is not held centrally. Following is the available expenditure information derived from the annual accounts and financial returns submitted to the Department by health authorities and local authorities, respectively.

In addition, people in homes may be able to get help with fees through income support. Information on the amount of total expenditure on income support to people in residential care and nursing homes is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security.

"Medical Care of the New-born"

Ms. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he intends to take in the light of the deficiencies in a wide range of essential laboratory and technical staff specialising in problems of the new-born, identified in the report "Medical Care of the New-born" by the Royal College of Physicians.

Mr. Mellor: The professional and technical staff groups have, overall, had the largest percentage growth of all staff groups in recent years, but we are aware of shortages in some high technology areas where there is competition for staff from other types of employer. The management side of the relevant Whitley council has developed proposals for a more flexible grading structure for medical laboratory scientific officers and has made an offer to the staff side. The joint DH/NHS manpower planning advisory group has commissioned a report on the staffing and structure of the pathology services which will be issued for consultation shortly. However, the claims of staff shortages in the neonatal area in the Royal College of Physicians' report are not specific and we have received no other evidence of shortages in this area.

Nuclear Warfare

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department plans to publish any response to or initiate any public discussion on the report from the British Medical Association's board of science and education entitled "Selection of Casualties for Treatment After Nuclear Attack", and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The Government have no plans to respond to the report quoted, nor to initiate public discussion of it. We have no plans to depart from the widely accepted principles of medical triage.

Government advice about the effects of nuclear attack, including the scale of casualties, is contained in section 2 of the Home Office publication, "Emergency Planning Guidance to Local Authorities" issued in 1985. Further advice concerning the treatment of casualties following nuclear attack is given in part 4 of health circular (88)31, "Emergency Planning in the NHS: Health Service Responsibilities in Civil Defence", issued in July 1988.

General Practitioner Maternity Units

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of general practitioner maternity units that have closed in the last five years, nationally and by region.

Mrs. Currie: The table gives a regional breakdown of the 13 general practitioner maternity units which we are aware have been approved for closure between 1983 and December 1987.

Oxford	1
North Western	1
Trent	8
West Midlands	2

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the number of general practitioners maternity units that are scheduled to close over the next five years, for each region.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the information requested is not available centrally.

Care in the Community

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he now expects to publish Her Majesty's Government's response to the Griffiths report on care in the community.

Mr. Mellor: We are giving Sir Roy's report and the numerous representations we have received the most careful consideration. We shall bring forward our own proposals in due course and are mindful of concern that action should not be unduly delayed.

Halifax General Hospital (Cook-chill System)

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will call for a report from the chairman of the Yorkshire regional health authority as to why it has refused to disclose which members of a sub-committee took the decision that the system of cook-chill would be introduced into the new Halifax general hospital when it is built.

Mrs. Currie: No.

Schizophrenia

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of admissions to hospitals of persons suffering from schizophrenia in the immediate past 12 months for which statistics are available; what proportion of such admissions were for the first time in that period; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: In 1986, the latest year for which statistics are available, there were 25,046 admissions to NHS mental illness hospitals and units in England where the main diagnosis was schizophrenia psychoses. One person can be admitted several times in one year. I regret that it is not possible to say what proportion of these admissions related to people admitted for the first time in that year. However, of the admissions in 1986, 2,523 or 10 per cent. were of people who had never previously been admitted to a mental illness hospital or unit.

Mental Disorder (Aftercare)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the rôle of health and local authorities in relation to the provision of aftercare for all former patients who have suffered mental disorder; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The primary objective of aftercare is to ensure that the discharged patient remains mentally fit and can return as far as possible to a normal life.

Any requirement for continuity of treatment remains the responsibility of the health authority. The local authority would be expected to meet assessed needs for community support, such as residential care, day care, domiciliary and social work support. Section 117 of the Mental Health Act 1983 places a duty on both health and local authorities to consider and arrange provision of the aftercare needs of discharged patients formerly detained under certain sections of that Act.

Hearing Aids

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he has any plans to change the provision of hearing aids as an integral part of the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what plans he has to impose charges or contributions on National Health Service hearing aids; whether such charges or contributions are to be subject to means-testing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We are aware of dissatisfaction with aspects of the present arrangements and of the views of the Royal National Institute for the Deaf. We are carefully considering these and other suggestions. We have not yet, however, arrived at firm plans for any financial or other changes.

In-patient Waiting List (Wessex)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give, for each district within the Wessex regional health authority, the total in-patient waiting list, broken down by specialty, and waiting time for March 1985, March 1986 and September 1987.

Mr. Mellor: For the information on waiting lists in the Wessex regional health authority I refer the hon. Member to the bound volumes of regional and district summaries of hospital in-patient lists, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Sight Tests

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total of sight tests carried out under the National Health Service during 1987.

Mr. Mellor: A total of 11·1 million sight tests were carried out in England during 1987.

AIDS

Mr. Marlow: to ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide advice as to the extent to which the AIDS virus can be carried and transmitted by mosquitoes (a) within the United Kingdom and (b) in high risk areas overseas.

Mr. Mellor: There is a theoretical possibility that the mouthparts of a mosquito could become contaminated with HIV as a result of feeding on an infected individual. However, expert advice is that the experimental, entomological and epidemiological evidence indicates that the risk of transmission of HIV by mosquitoes is highly improbable. There is no evidence to indicate that such transmission is occurring either in the United Kingdom or overseas.

Merseyside (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the visit of the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health, the hon. Member for Derbyshire South, (Mrs. Currie) to Liverpool on Wednesday 19 October.

Mrs. Currie: On Wednesday 19 October I visited Sunnybank, one of 11 continuing care homes run by Marie Curie Cancer Care. I was impressed by the high standards of care the patients and their families receive. I expressed my appreciation to the director-general of Marie Curie Cancer Care, who was present, for the services it provides nationally for people with cancer.

I also visited Deysbrook barracks to meet apprentices and later went to West Derby Conservative club. If the hon. Member requires further details perhaps he would contact me direct.

Care of the New-born

Ms. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to implement the recommendations in the report on the care of the new-born in England by the Royal College of Physicians, with particular regard to the proposals (a) that each region should have regional and sub-regional centres for ill new-born babies, and women with high-risk pregnancies, (b) that 80 extra consultant posts in intensive care of the new-born should be established, (c) that there is no shortage of junior doctors in this field and (d) that adequate resources should be available to train sufficient neonatal nurses.

Mrs. Currie: Every region already has a range of facilities to care for pregnant women, mothers and new-born children. In all cases these facilities comprise either regional or sub-regional centres along the lines of the recommendations in the reports of the Social Services Committee (1979-80) and the maternity services advisory committee.

It is for health authorities to determine the number of new consultant posts needed to meet their service requirements.

The joint planning advisory committee advises on the number of training posts at registrar and senior registrar level for doctors making a career in this country. Its advice is based on health authorities' future requirements for consultants in each specialty. The total number of junior posts in the field also takes account of the training needs of doctors intending to enter general practice and posts available to doctors visiting this country for training.

The National Health Service management board has commissioned a study of current high-tech nurse training, including neonatal training. The results of the survey are being analysed and will be considered by the National Health Service management board shortly.

Health Authorities (Rates)

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will indicate for each health authority in the shire counties the number of people they serve, how much each pays in lieu of rates to the local authority and how much this amounts to per person served by the area.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 26 July 1988]: I regret that information precisely as requested is not available. Following is the information held centrally.

NHS Pay

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the percentage increase of pay to (a) nurses, (b) doctors and (c) ancillary staff in the National Health Service for each year since 1970.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 21 October 1988]: The table gives details of increases in rates of pay. The extent by which basic rates are enhanced by additional earnings varies between staff groups and is substantial in the case of ancillary staff.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bee Disease

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many bee disease officers have been employed, full or part-time, by his Department in each of the last three years; what their duties have been; what has been the cost of running the service; and if he has any plans to review the present arrangements.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Bees officers are employed seasonally, normally for six months of the year. Their duties are to inspect bee colonies for fool broud, and to take necessary follow-up action. The numbers of officers employed and the direct costs of this inspection work for the last three seasons are as follows. The reduction in 1988 reflects the decision to cease routine inspections about which beekeeping associations were informed in September 1987. These arrangements are kept under regular review.

Pollution

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will outline his plans to safeguard the parts of the British fishing industry dependent on the North sea in respect of pollution caused by industrial waste, marine incineration, sewage sludge containers and waste substances.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Government's action plan for the protection of the North sea environment is contained in the ministerial declaration arising out of the North sea conference held in London in November 1987 and the guidance note on this declaration which was published in February of this year, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

My Department makes a careful scientific examination of all applications to dispose of waste at sea to ensure that no pollution is caused by dumping, and a review of licences is now in hand to determine whether dumping can be replaced by practicable alternative disposal options on land. My fisheries research laboratory also gives scientific advice to water authorities on the implications for the marine environment of pipeline discharges.

Pesticides

Mr. Wray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the research departments and scientific bodies consulted by him in matters of agricultural pesticides and their effect on human consumption and on wildlife and water.

Mr. Ryder: Ministers have a statutory duty under section 16(9) of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 to consult the advisory committee on pesticides. Its membership is listed in its annual reports (published by HMSO) along with the Departments and agencies which assist it by the nomination of assessors.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if co-ordination exists on a regular basis between his Department and its European counterparts in matters of pollution caused by pesticides and similar matters regarding (a) research and (b) proposals for common policies and action.

Mr. Ryder: The Department of the Environment has primary responsibility for co-ordination within the European Community on matters of pollution.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last received a comprehensive report about agricultural pesticides and their effect on human consumption and on wildlife.

Mr. Ryder: I believe that the hon. Member is referring to the general reports of the working party on pesticides residues. The last of these was published in March 1986 and the next will be published early next year. Where appropriate I also receive reports of the results of the individual monitoring exercises which are recorded in the general report.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many times and when the different institutions of the European Community (a) discussed the subject of environmental pollution produced by the use of pesticides, especially dieldrene, in farming activities and (b) discussed proposals aimed at controlling or establishing specific limits to the use of pesticides in farming and dieldrene in particular; and what the position of the United Kingdom and of each of the other member countries was in each of such discussions.

Mr. Ryder: My Department is responsible for discussions within the European Community on the prohibition of "plant protection products", that is pesticides used in agriculture, and on the presence of much pesticides in food. All member states, including the United Kingdom, have implemented directive 79/117 which prohibited plant protection use of dieldrin. In this context all member states, including the United Kingdom, supported proposals to set residue limits for dieldrin which preclude its use.

Public Representations

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which subject within his Department's range of responsibilities has generated most representations from the public in the past 12 months; and if he is able to estimate the numbers by correspondence and telephone calls.

Mr. MacGregor: This information can be given only at disproportionate cost.

Chernobyl

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to be in a position to make his response to the recommendations contained in the Agriculture Committee's report on the Government's handling of the Chernobyl incident.

Mr. Ryder: The Government's response to this report was submitted on 20 October.

Wool Guarantee

Mr. Curry: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, in the light of the Government's intention to end the potato guarantee, if he will make a statement on the future of the wool guarantee.

Mr. MacGregor: The Government set guaranteed prices for wool and potatoes only. The intention to end the potato guarantee and review the potato marketing support arrangements was announced earlier this year. The financial agreement between the Government and the British Wool Marketing Board expires on 30 April 1990 and must be reviewed before that date. The prospect of this review, and the announcement on potatoes, have created uncertainties in relation to wool. It therefore seems appropriate to state the Government's intentions on wool as early as possible to remove uncertainty and to give the industry maximum notice of proposed changes.

The board has been notably successful in recent years in promoting improvements in quality and marketing of British wool in the interest of wool producers and consumers. The board also administers on behalf of Government the wool guarantee which operates through a stabilisation fund. This element of Government involvement in the wool market is no longer appropriate since the Government believe that the industry should now be ready to accept financial responsibility for its own affairs. The Government do not intend otherwise to change the marketing arrangements for wool. The marketing of clip wool in the United Kingdom will continue to be organised by the British Wool Marketing Board operating under the British wool marketing scheme.

The Government therefore intend to introduce legislation as soon as parliamentary time permits to abolish the guarantee arrangements under which the Government fix a guaranteed price for wool each year. The precise timing of such a step will be subject to further discussions, but it seems unlikely on present indications to take effect before 1991. Thus guaranteed prices will continue to be fixed for the 1989 and 1990 wool clips. In so far as this would necessarily involve an extension of the current financial agreement between the Government and the British Wool Marketing Board beyond its expiry, when the Government are due to write off any debts outstanding in the stabilisation fund, the Government will be entering into discussions with the British Wool Marketing Board to agree appropriate arrangements.

SCOTLAND

A7 (Hawick)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what representations have been received about traffic congestion on the A7 trunk route through Hawick at the Commercial road/Mansfield road junction;

(2) what plans he has to relieve the current hold-ups on the A7 trunk route through Hawick at the Commercial road/Mansfield road junction; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Development Department has received one representation.

The sequence of the traffic signals at the junction is being looked at with a view to improving its efficiency. For the longer-term, Borders regional council, the Department's agent authority, is currently considering other ways in which traffic flows at the junction might be improved.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the specific criteria which make it advisable for electricity privatisation in Scotland to retain its vertically integrated structure.

Mr. Lang: We consider that vertical integration is the structure which is best suited to the particular needs and circumstances of Scotland, with its low population density in relation to landmass and its mix of urban and rural communities. The present structure has been a proven success in meeting the needs of all Scottish consumers and the industry privatised on these lines will continue that success and indeed improve on it as full commercial and competitive disciplines are brought to bear. Retention of the existing structure will also minimise disruption in the industry as it moves into the private sector ensuring that it is able to build on what is best in its present arrangements.

Schools (Opting out)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what parents' associations or federations he has consulted before drafting his opting-out proposals for Scottish schools.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have had discussions with a range of parents' organisations on a wide spectrum of educational issues.

There has been no formal consultation on arrangements for opting out. Legislation could do no more than confer a right on parents at individual schools to initiate moves to take their school out of education authority control.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the representatives of the Education Institute of Scotland; and if he discussed or consulted them about his plans to introduce a new education Bill with opting-out proposals.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend last met representatives of the Educational Institute of Scotland in December 1986 following publication of the Main report on the pay and conditions of teachers. There was no discussion of opting-out on that occasion.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of Scottish head teachers and teachers in order to consult them about proposals for opting-out.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have met representatives of Scottish head teachers on a number of occasions over recent months.

There has been no formal consultation on arrangements for opting out.

School Premises (Community Use)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many state (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in Scotland have their premises used by community groups (i) more than three times a year and (ii) more than 12 times a year;

(2) how many state primary schools in Scotland allow their premises to be used by community groups (a) three times a year at least, (b) between four to 12 times a year and (c) more than 13 times a year;

(3) how many state secondary schools in Scotland allow their premises to be used by community groups (a) at least three times a year, (b) between four to 12 times a year and (c) more than 13 times a year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally.

Schools (Parental Involvement)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many state primary schools in Scotland involve parents in school activities (i) occasionally and (ii) on a regular basis; and which type of activities tend to attract more parents' involvement;

(2) how many state secondary schools in Scotland involve parents in school activities (i) occasionally and (ii) on a regular basis; and which type of activities tend to attract more parents' involvement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Detailed information on individual school activities is not held centrally. There is considerable evidence that parents wish to be more closely involved with their children's education and want more and better information about their progress. Our plans for the introduction of school boards and for the review of curriculum and assessment are intended to meet these needs.

Physical Education

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many state secondary schools in Scotland provide 50 per cent. of their classes or more with physical education practice (i) more than twice a week, (ii) twice a week, (iii) once a week and (iv) none;

(2) how many state primary schools in Scotland provide 50 per cent. of their classes or more with physical education practice (i) more than twice a week, (ii) twice a week, (iii) once a week and (iv) none.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally.

The guidelines on the secondary school curriculum in Scotland issued last year by the Scottish Consultative Council on the Curriculum recommend that a minimum of 7 per cent. of available time in S1 and S2, and between 5 per cent. and 15 per cent. in S3 and S4, should be allocated to physical education.

Schools (Sports Facilities)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the percentage of state primary schools which in Scotland have (i) their own sports facilities or (ii) regular access to other schools or council sports facilities;

(2) what is the percentage of state secondary schools which in Scotland have (i) their own sports facilities or (ii) regular access to other schools or council sports facilities.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many unemployed people under 25 years of age in (a) Scotland, (b) Strathclyde, (c) Greater Glasgow and (d) Glasgow, Provan were without jobs for more than (1) 12 months, (2) between six months and 12 months, and (3) up to six months, in 1976, 1980 and 1987.

Mr. Lang: The available information is shown in the table. Parliamentary constituency figures were not compiled before June 1983. Figures for 1976 other than the Scottish totals could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many unemployed people aged under 25 years there were in August 1988 in (a) Scotland, (b) Strathclyde, (c) Greater Glasgow, and (d) Glasgow, Provan.

Mr. Lang: The number of unemployed claimants under 25 years of age in the areas requested on 14 July 1988, the latest date for which information is available, is shown in the table.

Sport and Leisure

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what was the private sector contribution to (1) sport and (2) other leisure facilities in Scotland in (a) percentage of the total expenditure in such activities and (b) actual terms at current price, for each year since 1975;

(2) what information he has as to how many people in (1) Scotland, (2) Strathclyde and (3) Glasgow used (a) private sport and other leisure facilities and (b) local authorities' sport and other leisure facilities, for each year since 1975.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to how many people in Scotland made, on a regular basis, use of sports and leisure facilities in Scotland during the period 1986-87.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Surveys of this kind are not made. Figures for average participation based on random sampling are available from the Scottish Sports Council, 1 St. Colme Street, Edinburgh.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to how many people in Scotland are working in management of local authorities' sport and other leisure facilities.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the central Government contribution to Scottish local authorities' spending on (1) sports, and (2) other leisure facilities in Scotland, for each year since 1975.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Substantial support was provided in each year through rate support grant, which was not however hypothecated to individual services. Direct grants and centrally funded agency contributions were as in the table.

[4] Includes £2,599,591 for 1985-87.

These Scottish Development Agency expenditures cannot now be disaggregated.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated central Government contribution for the (1) sports, and (2) other leisure activities in Scotland for 1989-90.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish Sports Council has been advised to plan for grant-in-aid amounting to £4·92 million in 1989-90. Other centrally funded agencies can be expected to make a further significant contribution to sports and leisure activities. Central Government will continue to support local government expenditure through revenue support grant, which will not be hypothecated to individual services.

School Meals

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the price of a school meal in (1) Aberdeen, (2) Dundee, (3) Edinburgh, and (4) Glasgow for each year since 1976 at current prices.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested was not collected centrally prior to 1981. Details from 1981 to 1988, taken from the annual school meals census carried out in January each year are as follows for the regions concerned.

NHS Beds

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the four areas in Scotland most affected by the reduction of 4,000 available staffed beds from 1981, reported in the September 1988 "Health Briefing" of the information and statistics division of the Scottish Health Service.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The provisional figure for the reduction in the average number of available staffed beds in NHS hospitals in Scotland between the years ending 31 March 1981 and 1988 was 3,663. In terms of absolute numbers the health boards most affected were Greater Glasgow (−1,836), Lanarkshire (−579), Forth Valley (−463) and Tayside (−408). The reduction in the total number of beds has to be seen in the context that Scotland still has at the latest date for which comparisons can be made 60 per cent. more beds in relation to population than England.

Hospitals (Readmissions)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many of the 871,287 in-patients discharged so far in 1988 were (a) readmitted and (b) applied for readmission suffering from the same complaints as, or complaints related to those for which they had originally been admitted.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally.

Dyslexia

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many children born, for each year since 1975, have been found suffering from dyslexia in (a) Scotland, (b) Strathclyde, (c) Greater Glasgow and (d) Glasgow, Provan.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally.

Dyslexic Children

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what educational and health facilities are provided for dyslexic children in (a) Scotland, (b) Strathclyde, (c) greater Glasgow and (d) Glasgow, Provan.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally.

Private Nursing Homes

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is, for each year since 1974, the public contribution to private nursing homes in Scotland in 1988 moneys.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information in the form requested is not held centrally. The table gives the information available centrally, which relates to payments by health boards for the care of patients in hospitals not vested in the Secretary of State. In addition, people in nursing homes may be able to get help with fees from the social security system.

Drinking Water

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last ordered a report on the state of drinking water in Scotland and particularly on the existence of toxic substances in drinking water.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Responsibility for the quality of public drinking water supplies lies with regional and islands councils as water authorities. The Scottish Development Department gathers information on water quality from the authorities from time to time as necessary. Our most recent inquiries have included the collection of information on the presence of pesticides in drinking water in late 1987 and on lead in the summer of 1988.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total cost of programmes aimed at the purification of rivers, lakes and other sources of irrigation and drinking water in Scotland in accordance with European Community directives and regulations.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I regret that information is not available in the form requested. The total cost of local authority capital programmes for water and sewerage services is over £100 million in 1988-89, but it is not possible to apportion this sum between expenditure incurred to meet EC standards and that consequent on domestic requirements.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all the sources of drinking water and irrigation in Scotland in urgent need of purification according to national and European Community regulations and directives.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There is no specific legislation governing the quality of water used for irrigation. The river purification authorities (the seven mainland river purification boards and the islands councils) are responsible for monitoring the quality of inland, estuarial and coastal waters and for securing improvements to such waters where necessary.

The quality of sources of drinking water is regulated by EC directives 75/440/EEC (quality of surface water intended for the abstraction of drinking water) and 80/68/EEC (protection of groundwater against pollution caused by certain dangerous substances). There are no such sources in Scotland which require urgent improvement.

The quality of drinking water supplies is regulated by EC directive 80/778/EEC on the quality of water intended for human consumption, which came into force in July 1985. Under article 20 of the directive an application may be made for a delay in complying with its standards provided that an action programme is submitted to the Commission with an appropriate timetable for the improvement of water quality. Some 201 such applications in respect of Scottish supplies were forwarded in 1985. Of these, 111 have since been completely withdrawn and a further 21 withdrawn in part as improvement programmes have progressed. A separate application has been made relating to concentrations of lead in a number of supplies: in this context, I would refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker) on 4 December 1987, at columns 749-50. The timetables for improvement programmes are being discussed with the Commission.

Water Fluoridation

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest information regarding water fluoridation in Scotland and the toxicity of fluorosilicic acid.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are no fluoridation schemes in operation in Scotland at present. Draft guidance on the implementation of the Water (Fluoridation) Act 1985, including a model formal agreement and a revised indemnity for water authorities, has been prepared and was recently sent to the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities for comment. Its response is awaited. There has been no change in the toxicity of fluorosilicic acid.

Free School Meals

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many school children in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Glasgow qualified for free school meals for each year since 1976;

(2) how many school children in Scotland qualified for free meals for each year since 1976.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information regarding the number of school children who would qualify for free school meals is not available. Details of the number who actually received free meals, taken from the annual school meal census carried out each January, are as follows:

Number of children in receipt of free school meals

Student Population

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the 1988-89 student population registered in state (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in Scotland; and how many of them are (i) boys and (ii) girls.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The 1988-89 student population of state schools in Scotland is not currently available. Information from 1987-88 is set out in the table.

Scottish Sports Council

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, in the light of the Scottish Sports Council report, "Sport 2000", he will give local authorities the extra £18 million needed annually until the end of this century, in order to carry out its capital investment, according to the Scottish Sports Council.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is for local authorities to determine their priorities within the resources available to them.

St. Ninian's Isle Church Site

Mr. Wallace To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any proposals to bring the St. Ninian's Isle church site, Shetland, into the guardianship of Historic Buildings and Monuments (Scotland); and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilon: We have no proposals to bring St. Ninian's Isle church site into state care.

Offensive Weapons

Mr. Wallace To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many reported crimes and convictions there were in 1987 in respect of offences involving the following weapons (a) shotguns, (b) air guns, (c) other firearms, (d) crossbows, (e) knives, (f) martial arts weapons and (g) bows and arrows.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Comprehensive information is available only on crimes and offences in which firearms were used. In 1987, 1,429 such crimes and offences were recorded in Scotland. Of these 142 involved shotguns, 1,094 involved airweapons and 193 involved other types of firearm, including imitation and unidentified firearms.

Convictions for crimes and offences involving weapons cannot generally be separately identified in the available statistics. Total figures are available, however, on convictions in 1987 for the following crimes and offences which generally involve the use of a weapon of some sort.

Crime/Offence	Convictions (1987, Scotland)
Carrying an offensive weapon	1,086
Offences under Restriction of Offensive Weapons Act	3
Possessing firearm with intent	9
Reckless conduct with firearms	129
Miscellaneous firearms offences	354

Inverclyde Royal Hospital, Greenock (Inquiry)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received a copy of the report of the committee of inquiry into the conduct of a consultant surgeon, employed at the Inverclyde royal hospital, Greenock, following the death of a patient; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No. The committee of inquiry will submit its report to Argyll and Clyde health board in accordance with the procedures in Scottish hospital memorandum 49/1968. It will be for the health board to consider the committee's findings and to decide what action, if any, is required.

Barlinnie Prison

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to announce and proposals for changing the future role of Barlinnie prison.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have no proposals to change the future role of Barlinnie prison.

Education System

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what distinctive traditions of the Scottish education system he is seeking to maintain.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Those which command the support of parents, such as breadth of study, competence in literacy and numeracy, acceptance of the need for discipline and hard work, equality of opportunity and the pursuit of excellence.

Forestry Vehicles (Road Damage)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has decided to allow the Borders region a specific grant to make good roads damaged by heavy vehicles used for forestry; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 21 October 1988]: It is for the local authority to identify its needs in the production of its transport policies and programme statement and to determine the priority to be given to forestry road schemes. Full account of such work is taken in determining capital allocations but the Government have not been persuaded of the case for extra support.

Scottish Bus Group

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has yet decided to privatise the constituent parts of the Scottish Bus Group on the basis of all the existing companies; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 21 October 1988]: My right hon. and learned Friend hopes shortly to announce the detailed pattern of privatisation in terms of the units to be offered for sale.

ENVIRONMENT

Open Spaces (Development)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what plans he has to ensure that where permission for development of green belt or urban open space land has been refused on appeal there should be a five-year moratorium within which further applications for development of that land will not be entertained;

(2) if he will take steps to ensure that when considering any planning application for development of a given site in green belt or urban open space land in respect of which an earlier permission has been given in the last five years, the planing authority should consider the application in the light of the local plan as if that earlier permission did not exist.

Mr. Chope: We have no present plans to restrict the number or nature of planning applications that may be submitted. There is, however, a general presumption against inappropriate development within green belts, as set out in "Planning Policy Guidance Note 2". An extant planning permission may be, and relevant provisions of a development plan will be, material considerations to which a local planning authority is obliged to have regard when determining a subsequent application for development of the same site.

Stop Notices

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many section 90 (Town and Country Planning Act 1971) stop notices were served by local authorities in each of the last three years;

(2) if he will list the number of prosecutions which were instigated in each of the last three years by local authorities as a result of failure to observe the requirements of section 90 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971.

(3) how many stop notices have been issued by local authorities since March 1987 following his Department's revised guidance about stop notices in DoE circular 4/87.

Mr. Chope: I regret that none of the information requested by my hon. Friend is available and it could be obtained from local planning authorities only at disproportionate cost.

Planning Enforcement Powers

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive the report by Robert Carnwath, QC reviewing planning enforcement powers.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend hopes to receive the report early next year.

North Sea Pollution

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a further statement on North sea pollution and his plans to tackle it.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The quality status report prepared by experts from all the North sea states for the second international conference on protection of the North sea chaired by my right hon. Friend, indicated that generally the North sea was in good condition, although there were some problem areas, particularly on the eastern coast for example in the Wadden sea and German Bight where the major continental rivers discharge into slow moving shallow water. At last year's conference we agreed a very wide range of measures covering all the main aspects of man's inputs to the sea including a substantial reduction of the input of dangerous substances to rivers and estuaries and an end to dumping of harmful industrial waste and waste incineration at sea.

We have taken an early lead in implementing these measures and the progress being made by all the North sea states will be reviewed as part of the third North sea conference to be held in the Hague on 7 and 8 March 1990.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review his decisions concerning environmental features of the proposed east London river crossing road, particularly relating to Oxleas wood.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend gave careful consideration to the environmental effects of the proposed road and its impact on Oxleas wood in reaching a joint decision with the Secretary of State for Transport on the inspector's report relating to the proposed east London river crossing. They see no reason to review that decision.

Joint Local Valuation Panels (Leicester)

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why his Department instructed the joint local valuation panels for Leicestershire, Northamptonshire and Nottinghamshire to close their administrative unit at Leicester and move to Nottingham; and what consideration was given to making the new central unit as readily accessible as possible.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The three panels and the Department agreed last year that the present offices at Leicester and Nottingham would be inadequate to cope with the future workload and staffing requirements arising from the non-domestic rating revaluation and the panels' new role as the appellate body for community charge appeals. In common with other panels which are jointly administered by a single clerk, it was decided that a single office should be established. Nottingham was the preferred location of the panels, as 60 per cent. of the workload of the three counties is drawn from that county and the nearby area of Loughborough.

The service to appellants will not be affected. Local valuation court hearings are held at centres throughout the three counties.

Pollution (Expenditure)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the amounts spent by his Department in each of the years 1983 to 1987 in order to combat (a) acid rain pollution, (b) ozone layer pollution, (c) motor vehicle pollution and (d) marine pollution.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has spent the following amounts on research to combat these aspects of pollution:

	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88
Acid rain	1,050	1,440	2,420	3,600	3,470
Ozone layer	70	90	50	100	120
Motor vehicle	450	380	790	750	1,000
Marine and estuarine	680	820	690	830	930

On implementation, the Government's policy is that the polluter pays.

Environmental Research (Expenditure)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the expenditure of his Department in each of the years 1979 to 1988 inclusive on research into environmental issues.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Expenditure on environmental research covering radioactive wastes, air pollution, land wastes, toxic substances, countryside, water, planning, natural resources and local government for 1978-79 to 1987-88 is as follows:

DOE expenditure on environmental research

	Outturn £ million
1978-79	19·8
1979-80	19·4
1980-81	25·4
1981-82	25·3
1982-83	23·1
1983-84	22·2
1984-85	21·6
1985-86	26·6
1986-87	27·4
1987-88	28·8

Wildlife (Codes)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the budgets, staffing and general arrangements existing within his Department for the enforcement of all national and international codes in respect of the trade and commercial exploitation of wildlife; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Enforcement is a matter for Customs and Excise or police as appropriate. This Department is responsible for the licensing of trade under the Endangered Species (Import and Export) Act 1976. Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 and EC regulation 3626/82 and issues guidance to licensing authorities administering the Zoo Licensing Act 1981 and Dangerous Wild Animals Act 1976.

There are 32 staff in the wildlife division of the Department concerned with these matters, not all of whom are engaged entirely on this work. They may be assisted, as required, by a panel of 90 fee-paid inspectors.

The cost of the full-time staff in some way involved in these matters for 1987-88 is estimated to be £578,553.

Wildlife (Imports)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to prohibit the import of all wildlife and derivative products from non-CITES countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Adequate measures are already taken in the application of CITES controls and stipulate that documentation from non-party states can be accepted provided it complies with the requirements of the convention. Imports from non-party states are accepted only if covered by such documents. These measures conform to resolution 3.8 of the third conference of the parties to the convention. In any event, the CITES regulation could be amended only by the European Community.

Building Research Establishment

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about future management arrangements for the Building Research Establishment.

Mr. Ridley: I propose that the Building Research Establishment (BRE) should be a candidate for executive agency status within my Department. I shall be drawing up more detailed proposals relating to the targets and operation of BRE on which I shall consult the trades unions representing BRE staff and would hope that the new agency would come into operation by 1 April 1990.

Important changes in the organisation and funding of BRE have been introduced recently as a result of a study undertaken by Lord Chilver and Sir Peter Harrop. The proposal to designate BRE as an executive agency is fully consistent with these developments, and will extend BRE's ability to compete for commissions from both the public and private sectors.

Rating Reform

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will show the percentage change from the anticipated levels of community charge published on 23 June for each authority in England and Wales for 1988-89 as a result of the implementation of reforms to housing finance proposed in the consultation paper, "A New Regime for Local Authority Housing in England and Wales".

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 19 October 1988]:

Because of the inevitable uncertainties entailed in predicting the detailed effects at the local level of possible changes to the powers of local authorities and other changes, our practice is to publish figures based on current responsibilities and expenditure patterns.

My right hon. Friend gave details of 1987-88 contributions from the housing revenue account to the general rate fund in response to a question from the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 22 October 1987 at column 863.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will take steps to prevent commercial agencies from setting up national databases for keeping track of community charge payers.

Mr. Ridley: The rules governing the use of information to compile and maintain community charges registers, including the sources from which such information can be requested, will be tightly controlled in regulations to be made under schedule 2 to the Local Government Finance Act 1988. Any agency offering to provide such information would also need to bear in mind the implications of the Data Protection Act 1984.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with agencies dealing with the homeless about the designation of hostels for collective community charge.

Mr. Ridley: Following discussions with such agencies, we have provided in the Local Government Finance Act 1988 that the residents of certain hostels will be exempt from the community charge. We intend to consult interested bodies shortly on our detailed proposals for identifying such hostels.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to publish advice to local authorities on the enforcement of joint and several liability for community charge.

Mr. Ridley: I hope to do so shortly. Discussions are being held with representatives of the local authority associations with a view to publishing a joint practice note on this subject.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discretion local authorities will have in the enforcement of joint and several liability for community charge against deserted spouses.

Mr. Ridley: Where a community charge remains unpaid, and a couple have separated, local authorities will be able to take enforcement action against one or other, or both spouses, as appropriate.

Urban Regeneration

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what his estimate is of the amount of derelict land in need of regeneration in order to remove urban blight in England; what his estimate is of the cost of a programme of regeneration; and what plans he has to combat such urban blight.

Mr. Trippier: The 1988 survey of derelict land in England will provide an estimate of how much derelict land in urban areas justifies reclamation. It will be published in summer 1989. As I announced in the House on 20 July, when I have the results of the survey I shall reconsider the criteria for the use of derelict land grant.

Urban Blight

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what have been the amounts spent by his Department in each of the last five years in order to combat urban blight.

Mr. Trippier: Detailed figures are not available in the form requested since "urban blight" is not a definition in official use. But the resources made available by the Department for bringing back into use derelict, unused or waste land in urban areas have increased from about £100 million in 1983-84 to a forecast £180 million in the current financial year.

Local Planning Authorities (Decisions)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals against the decisions of local planning authorities have been (a) made to him and (b) upheld by him in each of the years 1979 to 1988 inclusive.

Mr. Chope: The total numbers of appeals received against local planning authorities' decisions, or against their failure to make a decision within the statutory period, and the numbers upheld were as follows:

Year	Appeals received	Appeals allowed
1979	12,990	2,602
1980	16,208	4,044
1981	16,637	4,721
1982	13,900	4,003
1983	13,699	3,633
1984	16,192	3,773
1985	17,053	5,477
1985-86	17,839	5,581
1986-87	19,856	6,208
1987-88	22,482	6,955

Local Authority Accounts

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether any authority which had closed its accounts and had them audited by 7 July produced figures different from those held by his Department as at midnight on 6 July

Mr. Ridley: One authority's accounts for 1985-86 which were closed and audited by 7 July showed total expenditure £4,299 lower than the figures held by my Department by 7 July. Two other authorities' accounts for 1986-87 were closed and audited by 7 July, but the results have not yet been sent to my Department.

Rate Support Grant

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from authorities following his announcement on 7 July freezing the rate support grant system on the basis of data held by him at midnght on 6 July.

Mr. Ridley: I have received representations from about 60 local authorities on my proposals to introduce a Bill to Parliament to implement the policy put forward on 7 July. My officials have also had two meetings with the local authority associations at which representations were made.

Non-Domestic Property (Revaluation)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to announce the preliminary results of the revaluation of non-domestic property.

Mr. Ridley: I propose to announce shortly the results of a sample survey by the Inland Revenue of the likely outcome of the non-domestic revaluation for the main categories of properties and for individual regions.

Capital Expenditure and Finance

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish a summary of responses to the document "Capital Expenditure and Finance: A Consultation Paper", issued by him on 7 July.

Mr. Ridley: I shall consider whether this is necessary since responses are frequently published by those who submit them, and copies of almost all responses are placed in the Library.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what effect the proposal contained in the document entitled "Capital Expenditure and Finance: A Consultation Paper" for local authorities to repay debt in equal instalments of principal will have on local authorities' housing revenue accounts and general funds in 1990-91.

Mr. Ridley: The proposal that local authorities should provide for debt repayment by equal instalments of principal would ensure that from 1990-91 their housing revenue accounts and general funds reflect on a consistent basis the debt that local authorities have incurred.

Non-Domestic Rates

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce his detailed plans for phasing-in the effects of the national non-domestic rate and the revaluation of non-domestic property.

Mr. Ridley: I propose to issue a consultation paper shortly.

Local Government Finance Act

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions his Department has had with (a) the Central Office of Information, (b) commercial advertising agencies and (c) the Independent Broadcasting Authority about future publicity campaigns on the implementation of the Local Government Finance Act.

Mr. Ridley: The COI is currently producing an update of the existing booklet explaining the community charge, following Royal Assent to the Local Government Finance Act 1988. My Department has had no discussions with commercial advertising agencies or with the IBA.

Public Representations

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which subject within his Department's range of responsibilities has generated most representations from the public in the past 12 months; and if he is able to estimate the numbers by correspondence and telephone calls.

Mr. Ridley: The Department receives a large number of representations from the public on a wide range of subjects. The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate costs.

Dwellings (Unlawful Occupation)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the most recent figures he has for the number of local authority dwellings unlawfully occupied in each London borough.

Mr. Trippier: The numbers of local authority dwellings in unlicensed occupation at April 1988, as reported by London boroughs in their housing investment programme returns, are as follows:

Castleford Town Centre Redevelopment

Mr. Loftbouse: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to make a decision on Wakefield metropolitan district council's application for urban development grant in respect of the Castleford town centre redevelopment scheme.

Mr. Trippier: I expect to be able to announce a decision shortly.

Disabled People (Adapted Dwellings)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what information he has about the total number of specially adapted dwellings for the disabled built in England and Wales;

(2) what records he has relating to the number of specially adapted dwellings for the disabled built in the private sector in 1987;

(3) what information he has regarding the number of major adaptations for the disabled to council dwellings carried out by housing and social services authorities in England and Wales since 1979;

(4) if he has records relating to the number of specially adapted dwellings for the disabled built by local authorities in 1987.

Mr. Trippier: Numbers of new dwellings built in England for the chronically sick and disabled by local authorities and new towns and the private sector are published in table 6.7 of "Housing and Construction Statistics: 1977-1987". Table 7.5 of the same publication gives numbers of conversions or improvements in England and Wales carried out on local authority dwellings to provide accommodation for the disabled. Local authorities give estimates of the stock of dwellings designed or adapted for the disabled in their annual housing investment programme returns. Figures for April 1987 appear in the "Grossed HIP print for 1986-87". Copies of all these documents are in the Library.

Council Tenancies (Transfers)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy towards the voting method to be used for the transfer of council tenancies to private landlords, as proposed in the Housing Bill.

Mr. Trippier: Arrangements for voting on tenants' choice are set out in clauses 101 and 102 of the Housing Bill. Our policy, which will be given effect by the Bill itself, by regulations governing tenant consultation and through conditions which the Housing Corporation will impose when approving prospective new landlords, is as follows. Tenants should have all the information they need to register a considered view on a proposal for transfer. The proposal will include an offer which is contractually binding on the prospective new landlord, which covers tenancy terms, including rent levels and arrangements for reviewing it. The ballot itself should be run fairly and effectively by an independent teller. Appropriate safeguards are proposed for tenants whether or not they wish to transfer so that no secure tenant who does not wish to transfer need do so against his or her will. In addition, my noble Friend the Minister for Housing, Environment and Countryside has just tabled an amendment for debate in another place to make the prospective new landlord's ability to proceed following a vote dependent on achieving a minimum turnout by 50 per cent. of eligible tenants.

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the latest figures for the number of those in England and Wales who are in bed-and-breakfast accommodation paid for by a local authority; and if he will give the figures from 1978 onwards.

Mr. Trippier: Estimates of the number of households temporarily placed in bed and breakfast accommodation, by English local authorities under the homelessness provisions of Housing Acts, are as follows:

Market Rents

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate has been made by his Department of the numbers currently on local authority housing waiting lists who will have the financial means to pay market rents in the privately rented sector when the Housing Bill becomes law.

Mr. Trippier: We have made no such estimate.

Council House Starts

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council dwellings starts have occurred in England and Wales so far in the current year; and if he will give the figures for council starts in 1978 and each successive full year.

Mr. Trippier: It is provisionally estimated that in the eight months to August 1988 local authority and new town housebuilding starts amounted to 9,400 in England and 500 in Wales. Figures for 1978 to 1987 are published in tables 6*(a)* and 6*(b)*, respectively, of "Housing and Construction Statistics, 1977-1987", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Mr. Viggers: The Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland, in accordance with article 3(8) of the Agriculture (Environmental Areas) (Northern Ireland) Order 1987, will monitor and make reports on the effects of the ESA management agreements. As it will take some time for the effects of the ESA scheme to become apparent it is likely that the first report will be made in early 1990 and it will, inter alia, describe the steps taken in monitoring the effects on the wildlife and landscape in the area.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give, in respect of the Mourne mountains environmentally sensitive area (ESA) in South Down (a) the total extent, in hectares of the environmentally sensitive area (b) the extent of agricultural land within the environmentally sensitive area (c) the number of farmers eligible to enter into management agreements in the environmentally sensitive areas and (d) the total area of land covered by agreements in the environmentally sensitive areas.

Police investigations continue into all unresolved murders and a number of people have recently been charged with murders in this area.

TRANSPORT

New Roads

10. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he takes to ensure that the environment impact of new roads is kept to a minimum.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We take special measures to protect wildlife. We fit schemes into the landscape, plant trees and screen traffic. We will today place in the Library copies of the second edition of the booklet "Transport and the Environment".

Infrastructure Projects

12. Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he is taking to enourage private sector involvement in transport infrastructure projects.

Mr. Channon: We continue to encourage privately financed projects. The Dartford-Thurrock crossing, the Channel tunnel, the new rail link to Heathrow and the competition for the second Severn crossing all prove that the private sector can make a valuable contribution to providing transport infrastructure. We shall take every opportunity to encourage more schemes.

40. Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many major transport infrastructure projects have been privately financed since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: Since 1979 the transport infrastructure projects, costing over £10 million, financed fully or partly by the private sector and known to my Department are:

Channel tunnel
The construction of the tunnel—Europe's largest ever private sector civil engineering project—has been entirely financed through the international capital markets. There is no Government funding or financial guarantee; this is ruled out by the treaty and the Channel Tunnel Act. The total financial requirement is £6 billion—this has been raised through £1 billion of equity and £5 billion in credit facilities with an international group of lending banks.

Ports
The privatised Associated British Ports was formed in 1983. Total capital expenditure of the 23 major port authorities from 1980 to 1987 was £534·5 million. Including the following major port developments:

	£ million
Dover
Reclamation of camber and creation of new berths in Eastern docks (over 5 years)	20
Immingham
Deepwater LPG terminals—new dock facilities	35
Ramsgate
New linkspans, land reclamation and outer wall	17
Southampton
Container handling cranes and machinery	17

Airports
British Airports Authority, privatised in 1987, invested £182 million in capital projects in the year to March 1988 including the north terminal at Gatwick and the new terminal under construction at Stansted. In addition London City airport was built by John Mowlem and Company plc at a cost of some £32 million and is owned by them. The airport opened in October 1987.

Civil Aviation Authority and British Airports Authority

14. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority; and what was discussed.

Mr. Channon: I meet the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority and British Airports Authority plc from time to time to discuss matters of mutual interest.

Railway Development

15. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what major railway development initiatives are planned by British Rail in the next five years.

Mr. Portillo: British Rail's £3·8 billion investment programme for the next five years includes major investment in Channel tunnel rail services, completion of the electrification of the east coast main line and substantial renewals and improvements, including a major programme of rolling stock replacement in the passenger sectors.

Rail Unions

18. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the general secretary of the Transport Salaried Staffs Association; and what was discussed.

35. Ms. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the general secretary of the National Union of Railwaymen; and what was discussed.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State met leaders of the TSSA, the NUR and ASLEF on 12 July when he received a deputation to discuss a report which they had commissioned on the quality of service on British Rail.

Central Transport Consultative Committee

19. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of the Central Transport Consultative Committee; and what was discussed.

Mr. Portillo: I met the chairman of the Central Transport Consultative Committee on 18 October 1988. We discussed a wide range of issues.

Road Haulage

20. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when full liberalisation of European road haulage will be achieved.

Mr. Channon: At the end of 1992.

Highway Code

21. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any further plans to revise the contents of the Highway Code.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We last revised the Highway Code in 1987. That dealt with the main changes that were required. We expect to carry out a further, more substantive revision in the light of any legislative changes following the North report on road traffic law.

Heathrow Airport

22. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last visited Heathrow airport.

Mr. Channon: I made a formal visit to Heathrow earlier this year, and used the airport as a passenger last week.

British Rail

23. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of British Rail; and what was discussed.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State last met the chairman of British Rail on 5 October. A variety of railway matters were discussed, including the Government's approval of investment in new rolling stock.

57. Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chairman of British Rail; and what subjects will be discussed.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State plans to meet the chairman of British Rail next on 31 October, to discuss a variety of railway matters.

Heathrow-Paddington Rail Link

24. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the Heathrow-Paddington rail link to come into full operation.

Mr. Portillo: In 1993.

70 mph Speed Limit

25. Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received recently on the subject of the 70 mph maximum speed limit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Since the announcement by the Secretary of State in April of the Department's measures to improve safety on motorways, we have received few requests for any change in the motorway speed limit. Most letters press for tighter enforcement and better driving standards generally. The 70 mph national speed limit strikes a balance between the need for fast, convenient travel and safety.

East Midlands Airport

26. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last visited East Midlands airport.

Mr. Channon: I have not yet had an opportunity to visit East Midlands airport.

Road Accident Statistics

27. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the latest figures for the number of road accident victims so far in 1988; and what were the figures for the equivalent periods in 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Details are available in DTp statistics bulletin (88) 12, "Quarterly Road Casualties Great Britain: 2nd Quarter 1988", which is available in the House of Commons Library.

Traffic increased by 6 per cent. between the first half of 1986 and first half of 1987; there was a further increase of 7 per cent. between the same periods of 1987 and 1988.

The provisional estimate for the number of deaths in the first six months of 1988 is 2,282; the same period produced 2,293 deaths in 1987 and 2,393 deaths in 1986.

The number of casualties including slight injuries in the first six months of 1988 is provisionally estimated at 149,900. The casualty figures for 1986 and 1987 are 148,200 and 141,677 respectively.

Gatwick Airport

28. Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last visited Gatwick airport.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State uses the airport as a passenger from time to time. He has yet to make a formal visit.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the reasons for designating Gatwick as a hub airport; what is his assessment of the effects of the removal of such designation and of designating Stansted in its place; and what steps he intends to take to ensure that the Civil Aviation Authority, in reviewing London air traffic distribution, considers the implications of such a change.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There is no formal procedure for designating airports as "hub" airports. In July 1985, in seeking the advice of the Civil Aviation Authority on London area air traffic distribution policy my right hon. Friend, the then Secretary of State, asked the CAA to have regard to a number of policy objectives including the development of Gatwick as an effective second hub. My right hon. Friend sought fresh advice from the authority in a letter to the chairman of 22 June this year (a copy is in the Library). We expect the CAA to consider fully the effect on the civil aviation industry of various patterns of development for airports in the London area.

LRT (Driver-operated Passenger Doors)

29. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many accidents there have been on London Regional Transport buses with driver-operated passenger doors in each year since their introduction, in proportion to the number of such vehicles in service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Figures for the 24 years since such buses were introduced are not available. Listed in the table are boarding and alighting accident figures in recent years for LRT's subsidiary, London Buses Ltd. Accident rates on one-person-operated (OPO) doored buses have declined. Such buses are five times safer than open-platform crewed buses.

London Buses Ltd: Boarding and Alighting Accidents 1983-87

	Accidents	Accidents per million passenger journeys
1983
OPO bus	575	1·00
Crew bus	2,127	4·15

OPO bus	737	0·91

Autoguide Experiment

30. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the introduction of the autoguide experiment in London.

67. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the consequences of the introduction of autoguide in London.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We issued a consultation document in April setting out our proposals to invite private industry to introduce a pilot autoguide scheme in London by 1990, capable of being upgraded to a fully commercial system. We are now considering the responses and hope to invite proposals for a scheme by the end of the year.

The transport and road research laboratory has estimated that in London autoguide could help drivers to reduce their average journey times by about 10 per cent. and reduce mileage by some 6 per cent.

South London Transport Study

31. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet representatives of south London borough councils to discuss the south London transport study produced by Mott, Hay and Anderson.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There is a consultative group for each assessment study comprising departmental officials, officers of the local authorities concerned, representatives of the transport operators and police, and the study consultants. The groups meet on a quarterly basis. The last meeting of the south London consultative group was held on 20 October.

Bus Services

32. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the level of passenger transport demand for bus services since deregulation.

Mr. Portillo: Since deregulation bus mileage is up sharply and operator costs are down. Local authorities outside London are spending some £100 million less a year on subsidy. Historically there has been a steep decline in bus patronage and this trend has continued. For example, in Great Britain outside London, patronage fell by 7 per cent. between 1985-86 and 1986-87. I believe, however, that with deregulation the industry now has a chance of modifying that long-term trend.

34. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the number of passengers carried and the number of route miles operated following the deregulation of bus services in England and Wales.

Mr. Portillo: Statistics on the number of route miles operated are not compiled, but bus mileage is up sharply and the bulk of it is registered as commercial. In Great Britain (outside London) the number of passengers carried fell by 7 per cent. between 1985-86 and 1986-87, continuing a long-term trend.

Passenger Rail Services

33. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will raise at his next meeting with the chairman of British Rail the investment programme for passenger rail services.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State discusses British Rail's investment programme regularly with the chairman. British Rail plans to spend around £3·8 billion over the next five years. We recently approved investment in 200 additional electric rail units to improve the quality of commuter services north of the Thames.

Settle-Carlisle Railway

36. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further representations he has received against closure of the Settle to Carlisle section of British Rail since 11 July.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I have received many written representations since 11 July. I have also met representatives of the local authorities.

A59-M6 Link

37. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the Government's proposal for the A59-M6 link south of Preston.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We shall consider the case for adding this link to the trunk road programme as part of the next national review.

Light Rapid Transit Railways

38. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the financing of light rapid transit railway developments.

Mr. Portillo: I want to see the maximum participation by the private sector in the development of urban light railways, and I am encouraged that the private sector has taken the initiative in proposing a light rail project in Avon. Government grant will normally be paid only when the railway generates sufficient external benefits, which cannot be captured through revenues, as was explained in the Government's recent response to the report by the Transport Select Committee on the financing of rail services. I would normally expect any such grant at least to be matched by a contribution from the local authorities, who have general duties in relation to public transport in their areas.

West Midlands (Western Orbital Motorway)

39. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further representations he has received on the proposed western orbital motorway around the west midlands.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In response to the recent public consultation exercise on the proposed western orbital route, around 3,500 letters and representations have been received. In addition 9,500 completed questionnaires have been submitted.

Association of Metropolitan Authorities

41. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of the Association of Metropolitan Authorities transport committee; and what matters were discussed.

49. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the Association of Metropolitan Authorities; and what was discussed.

Mr. Portillo: My predecessor, my hon. Friend the Member for Hampshire, North-West (Sir D. Mitchell) met the chairman and other representatives of the public transport committee of the Association of Metropolitan Authorities on 2 March. The meeting discussed the Government's proposals for the future financing arrangements for the passenger transport authorities. I am due to meet the AMA on 3 November.

48. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next intends to meet the Association of Metropolitan Authorities; and what will be discussed.

Mr. Portillo: I shall be meeting the Association of Metropolitan Authorities on 3 November to discuss a range of issues.

Investment

42. Mr. Cunliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those private sector firms with which he has discussed transport investment, in the last three months.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State discussed this issue with about 40 companies at a seminar on 18 July and with others since.

Underground Rolling Stock

43. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will hold early discussions with London Regional Transport representatives on the pace of the Underground rolling stock renewal programme.

Mr. Portillo: It is for London Regional Transport to bring forward proposals for new rolling stock as and when it considers it appropriate. Sixteen new trains are currently being brought into service and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has recently approved the acquisition of 85 new trains as part of the modernisation of the Central line at a cost of over £700 million.

Private Sector Financing

44. Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many public transport projects have been financed by the private sector since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: Apart from the Channel tunnel approved in January 1986, major public transport projects involving private sector funding that have been implemented or approved in principle since 1979 include:

The Docklands light railway extension to Bank.
Greater Manchester metrolink.
The Heathrow to Paddington rail link.

There has also been a number of major improvements at British Rail and London Underground stations as part of redevelopment schemes.

King's Cross Fire

45. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive the report of the inquiry into the King's Cross fire.

Mr. Portillo: The report was received on 21 October. Arrangements are in hand for publication as soon as practicable, probably within a month.

A69 Hexham

46. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to dual the A69 west of Hexham.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The A69 west of Hexham is being improved to a high standard single carriageway with sections of dual carriageway to facilitate overtaking. The Department has no plans for dualling throughout.

Channel Tunnel (Rail Link)

47. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received regarding the rail link from London to the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: We have received a number of representations, both from those who would like to see the construction of a new line brought forward and from those who are concerned that they would be affected by the possible alignments.

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he has taken following the publication by British Rail of its capacity report on rail links to the Channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I have been working mainly on two issues —first, whether the private sector can be involved in the project, and, secondly, whether the selection of BR's preferred route can be speeded up to minimise uncertainty in Kent.

Motorway Construction

50. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much has been spent on new motorway construction in each of the last three years at constant prices.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Expenditure this year on national roads as a whole is more than £1 billion for the first time.

The balance of the road programme has changed in recent years.

The amount spent on new motorway construction and capital maintenance in each of the last three years, adjusted to 1987-88 prices, is as follows:

	£ million
1985-86	406
1987-88	305

The change in spend on motorways reflects the completion of the M25 and the priority given to other types of trunk roads, in particular to the bypass programme which brings environmental relief to residents, reduces delay to travellers and freight, and cuts casualties.

BR Board

51. Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the British Railways Board; and what was discussed.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State last met members of the British Railways Board, including the chairman, on 20 September. A variety of railway issues were discussed, including the Government's approval of investment in new rolling stock.

Underground System (Central London)

52. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what conclusions he has reached concerning the report which he commissioned from London Regional Transport and British Rail on congestion on the Underground system in central London.

Mr. Portillo: We hope to receive the report of the central London rail study and announce the main findings towards the end of the year.

Schools (No Parking Areas)

53. Mr. Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration has been given to making zig-zag no-parking lines outside schools mandatory.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A number of experiments have shown that existing advisory markings are generally effective. Mandatory restrictions would not be justified in most locations. It is better for schools to be considered individually, so that accident prevention measures and enforcement effort can be concentrated on problem sites.

Manchester Airport

54. Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last visited Manchester airport.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Minister responsible for aviation and shipping visited the airport on 25 June.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will designate Manchester airport under sections 78 and 79 of the Civil Aviation Act 1982.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are considering the metropolitan borough of Stockport's application and the many representations for and against designation.

Dual Carriageways (London)

55. Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average cost per mile of dual carriageway building in the Greater London area.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Major road improvements in London are aimed primarily at easing or eliminating severe congestion points. They often involve new junctions and structures rather than significant lengths of new carriageway. It is not possible to calculate an overall average cost per mile.

The five most recent trunk road schemes which have been completed or are currently under construction are as follows:

	Scheme cost £ million	Length miles	Cost per mile £ million
Completed schemes
A20 Sidcup by-pass (opened November 1987)	48·1	3·853	12·48
A406 South Woodford to Barking relief road (opened December 1987)	92·8	6·5	14·28
A2 Rochester Way relief road (opened April 1988—former GLC scheme)	84·6	3·4	24·75
Schemes under construction
A406/A10 Great Cambridge road junction	26·1	—	—
A40 Swakeleys road GSJ	12·5	—	—

A1-M1 Link

56. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by what date he expects the construction of the proposed A1-M1 link road to serve the Dearne Valley area to be completed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This is a local road scheme for which Barnsley borough council is responsible as highway authority. I understand that the council plans to construct the scheme in stages, with the final section due for completion in the mid-1990s.

Road Schemes (Private Sector Collaboration)

58. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many new road schemes have been financed through collaborative agreements with the private sector since 1979.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The following cost-sharing road schemes agreements have been made with private sector developers:

Number of schemes and total value of agreed contributions from developers

	Number	£ million
1986-87	17	1
1988-89[1]	10	5·7

[1] First six months

Information prior to 1986-87 is not readily available.

These schemes include access roads to private developments, provision of roundabouts, widening of junctions and installation of traffic signals. Local highway authorities also enter into agreements with the private sector to finance local road schemes. Some also receive transport supplementary grant.

From transport policy and programme submissions it appears that the following major schemes with private sector contributions (each costing over £1 million) have been started or are planned to start:

	Supported with TSG	Total
Before 1984-85	1	2
1984-85	1	3
1985-86	1	2
1986-87	1	1
1987-88	2	3
1988-89	3	9

West Drayton Air Traffic Control

59. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last visited West Drayton air traffic control.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State visited the London air traffic control centre at West Drayton on 19 February.

Aircraft Noise (Heathrow)

60. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he intends to take to reduce aircraft noise at Heathrow.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is undertaking various measures to fulfill our commitment to reduce aircraft noise around Heathrow. New restrictions on night flights at Heathrow were introduced in April, limiting the further growth of night movements. We shall be closely monitoring the effect of the new restrictions. We are reviewing with the airport the 1980 noise insulation grants scheme, so that it fully meets the criteria originally laid down, by extending the boundary slightly in one or two places. We are taking an active role in international discussions aimed at phasing out the next most noisy group of subsonic jets (the chapter 2 types), and will next year make regulations preventing the addition of any more of these aircraft to the United Kingdom fleet after 1 October 1990 in line with the ECAC recommendation.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by United Kingdom airport the steps taken to phase out the operation of noisy jets at night.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Non-noise-certificated subsonic jets have not been allowed to operate by day or night from or to United Kingdom airports since 1 January 1986 if on the United Kingdom register, or 1 January 1988 if on foreign registers. The next noisiest group of aeroplanes covers those certificated to ICAO's annex 16, volume 1 chapter 2 standards, and the Government are playing a leading role internationally in developing controls to limit their use. It is recognised that this will be a long and expensive process.

For the purposes of night restrictions at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted airports, the noise-certificated types of aircraft have been divided into three categories. Those in the noisiest category have not been allowed to make planned movements at night since 1 April 1987. From 1 April 1988 further restrictions on the middle category of aircraft have been introduced at Heathrow and Gatwick airports. Night restrictions at other airports are a matter for the airport operators.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidance his Department gives to (a) airports and (b) aircraft operators on the application by pilots of full climbing power to aircraft over residential areas; and what monitoring of the observations of that guidance is conducted.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Aircraft operators using Heathrow and Gatwick airports are required to observe climb-out procedures as follows:

Departing aircraft shall be at a height of at least 1,000 ft over the relevant noise monitor: thereafter they shall maintain a gradient of climb of at least 4 per cent. to an altitude of at least 4,000 ft (Heathrow) or 3,000 ft (Gatwick). Thrust management shall ensure that progressively reducing noise levels at points on the ground under the flight path beyond the noise monitor are achieved.

We have not yet issued such guidance to operators of aircraft using Stansted airport. At other airports guidance on climb procedures is a matter for the airport operators.

Captains of airliners do not normally refer to ground features, but instrument navigational instructions for departure routes take residential areas into account so far as is practicable.

At Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted airports, periodic radar based sample surveys show the track-keeping and altitude performances of aircraft on departure routes.

Airports do not receive guidance from us on aircraft climb procedures.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on (a) financial and (b) other penalties airports (i) can and (ii) do impose on operators of excessively noisy aircraft.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is possible for airport operators to take noise performance into account when levying charges on aircraft operators. They can also make compliance with noise control measures a condition of use of airports. At Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted airports there are no financial penalties. The Department has power to require the operators of these airports to deny use of the airports. At Heathrow and Gatwick each infringement of the night take-off noise limit results in the loss of one movement slot in the quota of permitted night movements. Detailed information on practice at other airports is not available.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will discuss with Manchester airport the inclusion on its airport consultative committee of representatives from local authorities affected by excessive aircraft noise.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. The constitution of the airport consultative committee is a matter for Manchester Airport plc which is required to consult adequately by section 35 of the Civil Aviation Act 1982.

London Regional Transport

61. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to change the funding levels of London Regional Transport.

Mr. Portillo: In common with that of other nationalised industries, the funding of London Regional Transport is reviewed annually in the Government's investment and financing review, the results of which are announced in the Chancellor's autumn statement.

British Standard Time

62. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many representations he has had on the possible reduction in road accidents that would result from a change to British standard time or a combination of British standard time and double British summer time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Twenty-three letters. Nine favoured combining British standard time and double British summer time, eight favoured harmonising the autumn end date of British summer time, one favoured both of these and five wanted to maintain the status quo.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary proposes to issue a consultation paper before deciding on future arrangements.

Air Transport Users Committee

63. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of the Air Transport Users Committee; and what was discussed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My noble Friend the Minister responsible for aviation and shipping met the chairman and members of the Air Transport Users Committee on 14 September 1988. The topics discussed included the problems of airspace congestion; capacity at the south-east airports; developments in liberalising air transport in Europe; and the prospects for new services to the United States from Manchester airport.

National Air Traffic Services

64. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the management of the National Air Traffic Services; and what was discussed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State meets the chairman and managing director of the Civil Aviation Authority and the controller of the National Air Traffic Services from time to time to discuss matters of mutual concern.

Drivers (Road Safety)

65. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies his Department has made on the road safety performance of drivers within the first year of holding their licence.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Last year the behavioural studies unit of TRRL commissioned National Opinion Polls Limited (NOP) to carry out a survey among drivers. It includes a survey of 10,000 young drivers aged between 17 and 22.

Preliminary results of the study show that 17 to 18-year-old males on average had 1·05 accidents over a three-year period, with females in that age range having 0·63 per three years—giving an average time interval between accidents of 2·9 years for males and 4·8 years for females. The TRRL is at present carrying out an in-depth analysis of the results. A full report should be ready in the spring.

This study builds on a TRRL survey in 1979 to discover more about the process of learning to drive cars, and how the drivers fared in their first year of driving after passing the driving test.

Association of County Councils

66. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next intends to meet the Association of County Councils; and what matters he intends to discuss.

Mr. Portillo: The Association of County Councils has not requested a meeting, but we stand ready to meet it as and when the need arises.

Local Pay Additions

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide the latest available figures for his Department for (a) numbers of staff in receipt of local pay additions, by grade, (b) location of those offices awarding local pay additions and (c) annual cost.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Local pay additions have been introduced as follows:

Grade	Number	Annual Cost £
1. Location: Inner London Weighting Pay Area
Secretarial	140	42,000
AA	79	42,600
AO	313	181,200
2. Location: Dorking—South East Regional Office:
Secretarial	7	4,200
AA	9	5,400
AO	36	21,600
EO	26	7,800
3. Location: Metropolitan Traffic Area
Driving Examiners	270	162,000
Senior Driving Examiners	81	48,600

Licensed Taxi Cabs

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many licensed taxi cabs are currently operating in the Greater London area; and what is the estimated cost to public funds of administering the taxi trade.

Mr. Portillo: On 1 October there were approximately 15,000 licensed taxi cabs in London. There is no call on public funds for administering the trade since its costs are covered by driver and vehicle licence fees.

Private Car Hire (Licensing)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to the licensing of private care hire firms in Greater London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The Department is reviewing existing legislation relating to taxis and private hire cars. The question whether London's private hire cars should be subject to some form of licensing is part of that review.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he has undertaken or plans to undertake with representatives of private car hire companies in Greater London about the introduction of a licensing system.

Mr. Portillo: In July, as part of our review of taxi and private hire legislation my predecessor my hon. Friend the Member for Hampshire, North-West (Sir D. Mitchell) wrote to consumer bodies, licensing authorites, local government organisations, the police and others, inviting views on both the taxi and hire car trades. Representatives of the London private hire trade were included in that consultation process.

Bus Deregulation

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what contact he has with the Association of Metropolitan Authorities regarding the effect of bus deregulation (a) in urban areas and (b) in rural areas.

Mr. Portillo: The Association of Metropolitan Authorities has sent me a copy of its recent report on bus deregulation in the metropolitan areas, and has written to me with representations on the Department's recent review of deregulated bus services. I am meeting the association on 3 November.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the specific mechanisms and instances used to monitor the working of bus deregulation, following the closure of the transport and road research laboratory.

Mr. Portillo: Bus operators provide regular returns which enable the Department's statistics directorate to monitor changes in vehicle miles, patronage, receipts, fares, unit costs, vehicle stock and staff numbers. To supplement this information in the initial period following deregulation the transport and road research laboratory constructed a data base derived from service registrations. This has now been discontinued but TRRL continues to conduct studies into specific aspects of deregulation such as passenger information, competition, operator strategies, innovation, safety and subsidies.

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest information on the number of new bus operators who have entered the market as a result of deregulation.

Mr. Portillo: By 1 May 1988 there had been a net increase of 465 operators running local bus services as a result of deregulation.

Bus Registration

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the inaccuracies found in the database which the transport and road research laboratory used in its reports regarding bus registration.

Mr. Portillo: I have no evidence of any substantial inaccuracies in the database.

Safety Audits (King's Cross)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many safety audits have been carried out at King's Cross underground station since the fire; and if he will make a statement on the outcome.

Mr. Portillo: London Underground Ltd. (LUL) appointed a safety auditor in December 1987; King's Cross is one of the stations that have since been audited. The auditor is responsible for ensuring that the necessary follow-up action is taken.

In addition, the Department of Transport's railway inspectorate has visited King's Cross since the fire. I understand that the London fire brigade has also visited King's Cross on a number of occasions.

LUL has agreed safety standards for the building and reinstatement work now in progress at King's Cross with the railway inspectorate and, I understand, the London fire brigade. The completed work will be inspected by the railway inspectorate.

A33 Chandlers Ford Bypass

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to start work on upgrading the A33 Chandlers Ford bypass to motorway standards; and when he anticipates the work will be completed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Necessary works in advance of the main contract for the Compton-Bassett section of the M3 started last month. We hope to let the main contract next spring for completion in autumn 1991.

A12 Brentwood Bypass

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has yet received the report from the consultants appointed to investigate the case for improving traffic flow on the A12 Brentwood bypass between the M25 and the Chelmsford bypass and on the A127 Southend arterial road; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The consultants' reports for the A12 and the A127 studies are both nearing completion. When received, the Department will study them urgently and consider potential improvements of the road network for inclusion in the road programme.

Air Traffic Control

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on centralising duties relating to air traffic control and control in European airspace in the hands of Eurocontrol.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We wish to see a much enhanced role for Eurocontrol, particularly in the field of flow management.

We shall be seeking agreement at Eurocontrol's permanent commission next month to the creation of a central flow management unit, to be operated by Eurocontrol in co-operation with the International Civil Aviation Organisation.

Centralising all Europe's air traffic control functions in one organisation would be an unrealistic goal.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if near miss reports made by air traffic controllers from 1 April 1989 will be made available to the public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The procedure for dealing with incident reports by air traffic control officers is the responsibility of the Civil Aviation Authority. We will ask the chairman to write to my hon. Friend.

Channel Tunnel

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will extend the opening hours of the Channel tunnel complaints commissioner's office to deal with complaints at weekends; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The Channel tunnel complaints commissioner is appointed by and is answerable to the Kent joint consultative committee, of which I am the chairman. I shall ask the committee when it next meets, in November, to consider the opening hours of the complaints commissioner's office.

Aircraft Noise

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report the noise levels registered by (a) BAC 111 and (b) Boeing 727 aircraft prior to their receipt of noise certificates; and what are the current United Kingdom and international noise limitations.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The table gives the internationally agreed noise levels (to which the United Kingdom subscribes) at the three measurement points that a selection of BAC 111 and B 727 aircraft have to meet. It also gives the measured noise levels for the aircraft before acoustic treatment (hushkitting) and their noise certificated levels.

[1]Limited trade-off between the three measured levels are permitted.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority about the move of preferred noise routings resulting from alterations in the locations of navigation beacons at Manchester airport in 1987; what reasons were given for the changes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: None. Departure routes from Manchester airport are a matter for Manchester Airport plc and the Civil Aviation Authority.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what monitoring of noise levels his Department conducts in the vicinity of Manchester airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: None. This is the responsibility of Manchester Airport plc.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the maximum permissible ground noise levels resulting from aircraft flights.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: At Heathrow and Gatwick airports the maximum permissible take-off noise levels, measured at the nearest noise monitor, are 110 PNdB by day and 102 by night. At Stansted airport we have not yet set take-off noise limits. At other airports noise limits are a matter for the airport operators.

Night Flights

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many night flights have (a) been authorised and (b) taken place in the current year and each of the last three years at (i) Gatwick, (ii) Heathrow and (iii) Manchester airports.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Quota and actual movement information for the three airports are as follows:

	Gatwick		Heathrow		Manchester
	Quota	Actual	Quota	Actual	Quota	Actual
1985 Summer	4,300	4,220	3,650	2,377	5,125	4,243

1988 Summer	4,430(60)	—(—)	2,750(60)	—(—)	6,760	—

Notes:

1. Figures in brackets are delayed noisy movements subject to special quota.
2. Figures for Manchester airport provided by Manchester Airport plc. Winter night jet operations at Manchester airport are not subject to quota restrictions.
3. The current summer season did not end until 23 October and actual movement information is not yet available.
4. At Heathrow and Gatwick the night noise restrictions permit the airport manager to exempt flights from the restrictions if they are delayed by widespread and prolonged disruption of air traffic. Gatwick Airport Ltd. approved the exemption of 612 movements in the summer season 1987. These are additional to the figures already mentioned.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will impose a ceiling on the number of night flights to and from Manchester airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. Control of night flights at Manchester Airport is the responsibility of the airport operator.

A34 Newbury Ring Road

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether responsibility for the existing A34 ring road round Newbury will remain with his Department in the event of a western bypass trunk road being built from Tot hill to the Donnington link on the current A34.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The A34 Newbury bypass proposals, currently being considered at public inquiry, provide for the detrunking of the existing A34 between the new Burghclere interchange and the Swan roundabout. We have no plans to detrunk the remainder of the A34 through Newbury as this also serves the A339 trunk route.

Staff Safety (King's Cross)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what training initiatives have been taken with respect to safety for staff serving at King's Cross station since the fire of November 1987.

Mr. Portillo: I understand that all London Underground's operations supervisory staff have received a refresher course in station fire procedures and fire fighting equipment. An on-the-job training course on fire and safety matters has been given at the stations to all station staff by the station supervisor. These courses are being repeated at regular intervals. All staff posted to stations new to them are being given familiarisation training by the station supervisor on arrival. All station supervisors are being given more simulation training in station evacuation, and additional station familiarisation training for complex stations such as King's Cross has been carried out with the emergency services.

London Underground Ltd

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the director of London Underground Ltd.; and what was discussed.

Mr. Portillo: I met the chairman of London Underground Limited on 19 October when we discussed a number of issues including the problems posed by recent and continuing growth in demand.

BAC 111 and Boeing 727 Aircraft

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will impose an early ban on the operation of (a) BAC 111 and (b) Boeing 727 aircraft at British airports.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. Aircraft of these types which are noise certificated to International Civil Aviation Organisation standards will be able to operate in the United Kingdom in accordance with our international obligations. Some of these aircraft which operate here are on foreign registers. The Government are playing a leading role in international negotiations towards the phasing out of the next noisiest ICAO category of aircraft, including the BAC 111 and the Boeing 727.

Air Traffic Congestion

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will urge his European Community counterparts at the meetings of 26 October to seek an urgent solution to air traffic congestion over Europe.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Transport Ministers of 22 countries belonging to the European civil aviation conference, including our partners in the EC, agreed a wide-ranging package of measures to tackle air traffic congestion at their special meeting held on 20 October.

The United Kingdom's proposal for a central flow management unit, to be operated by Eurocontrol in co-operation with ICAO, was endorsed.

Air traffic congestion is not on the agenda for substantive discussion at the EC Council of Ministers meeting on 26 October.

Foreign Reflaggings

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his reply of 19 October, what is the estimated cost of providing a reply to the question relating to reflagging following the introduction of the Armilla patrol.

Mr. Portillo: Approximately £2,000.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 25 October 1988

WALES

Departmental Staff

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest available figures for his Department in the London pay area of the number of vacancies by grade and the proportion this is of the grade complement in London.

Mr. Peter Walker: The comparatively small London office of my Department currently has two vacancies for typists and two vacancies for messengers. These posts are expected to be filled shortly.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide the latest available figures for his Department for (a) numbers of staff in receipt of local pay additions, by grade, (b) location of those offices awarding local pay additions and (c) annual cost.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information is as follows:

(a) 3—2 Senior Personal Secretaries and 1 Personal Secretary
(b) Whitehall
(c) £1,200

Local Government Reform

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will construct a table in the same form as figure F3 on page 106 of Cmnd. 9714, "Paying for Local Government", showing the relationship in Wales of rateable values to net household income separately for (a) single pensioner households, (b) other single adult households, (c) two adult households and (d) three adult households.

Mr. Grist: Table F3 on page 106 of Cmnd. 9714 was constructed from data obtained from the family expenditure survey. The Welsh element of this data related to only 2,000 households. It is not possible to derive reliable estimates of the details requested, by household types, from a sample of this size.

River Loughor (Bridge Crossing)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report (a) the tender price accepted and (b) the final account price for the construction of the new bridge crossing of the River Loughor.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No. The bridge has been constructed by Dyfed and West Glamorgan county councils; the cost is a matter for them.

Nurses

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of places available to state enrolled nurses to convert to registered general nurses in 1987, 1988 and 1989; what is the total number of applications received for these courses; what is the average waiting time for successful applicants; and if there are any plans to increase the number of places available for state enrolled nurses wishing to undertake the conversion courses to registered general nurses.

Mr. Grist: The number of places available to second level nurses to convert to first level nurses in Wales is as follows:

1987 — None; no courses were approved
1988 — 47
1989 — 98 (to date)

Information about the number of applications received for the conversion courses, and the average waiting time for successful applicants, is not held centrally.

The Government's response to Project 2000 stressed the need to increase the number of second level nurse conversion courses, and the UKCC is examining the provision for more flexible modes of conversion. Health authorities in Wales have been encouraged to increase opportunities for second level nurse conversion wherever possible.

Therapeutic Provision

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if, in accordance with those parts of the Education Reform Act 1988 which allow local education authorities in Wales to make therapeutic provisions, he will investigate with Her Majesty's inspector the shortfall in speech therapy, physiotherapy and occupational therapy in the county of Clwyd and other Welsh local education authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Under the provisions of section 7 of the Education Act 1981, as amended by the Education Reform Act 1988, a local education authority may arrange for non-education provision such as speech therapy but it does not lay on them a duty to do so. The primary responsibility for that remains with the district health authority. Her Majesty's Inspectorate will continue to monitor the arrangements made within Wales for pupils with special educational needs including those who benefit from speech therapy, physiotherapy and occupational therapy.

Pesticides

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what steps have been taken to ensure that the eating of fruit and vegetables treated with pesticides by growers and purchased by shoppers in Wales is safe; what steps his Department has taken to examine such fruit and vegetables to determine their freedom from injurious substances; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what steps he takes to monitor the use of pesticide residues in fruit and vegetable production in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him today by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. Monitoring for pesticide residues is carried out throughout the United Kingdom by the working party on pesticide residues (WPPR). The WPPR programme includes total diet studies incorporating fruit and vegetables. In addition targeted surveys of residues in fruit and vegetables are carried out on a routine basis. Samples from Wales are included in this monitoring.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish his findings concerning pesticide residues in fruit and vegetables in Wales and in fruit and vegetables entering Wales from other parts of the United Kingdom and from abroad; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Findings of the working party on pesticide residues which monitors United Kingdom food supplies for pesticide residues are published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office. Where appropriate the location of a particular residue problem is indicated but results are generally consistent throughout the United Kingdom. The WPPR monitors imported produce as well as home production.

Partially Sighted Society

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what moneys he gives to the Partially Sighted Society; if he will give a special ad hoc grant to the Partially Sighted Society; and if he will make a statement; (2) if he will meet the Partially Sighted Society to discuss their future plans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Welsh Office officials would be pleased to met representatives of the Partially Sighted Society if their plans relate to all-Wales activities. The society has already been advised to contact local statutory organisations for support for local initiatives. The society's national headquarters are in England and receive Government aid towards administration costs to which my Department does not contribute.

Sandycroft School

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit Sandycroft C P school to meet the staff and parents to discuss plans to rebuild the infants' department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No. This is a matter for the local education authority which is responsible for the provision and maintenance of its school buildings.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a special allocation of cash to Clwyd local education authority to enable the burnt down infants' department of Sandycroft C P school to be rebuilt in the current financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No. Capital allocations for 1988-89 have been made to Clwyd county council relating to all the services for which it is responsible, including educational building. It is for the local education authority to determine which school building project will proceed in the current financial year.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet members of the Clwyd county council, Alyn and Deeside council and Queensferry community council concerning the need to rebuild the burnt down infants' department of Sandycroft CP school; if he will also meet the parent teachers association and the school governors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No. This is a matter for the local education authority which is responsible for provision and maintenance of its school buildings.

Capitation Allowances

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet the Federation of Primary School Headteachers in Clwyd to discuss capitation allowances.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No. Capitation to schools is a matter for the local education authority.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a league table of capitation allowances for (i) primary schools, (ii) high schools in each of the local education authorities in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No. Capitation allowances for schools are a matter for local education authorities and information about them is not held centrally. Under the Education Reform Act local education authorities are required to prepare schemes to delegate budgets to individual schools. Local education authorities will also be required to publish information on their schemes and on planned and actually incurred expenditure in individual schools.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will allocate extra finance to Clwyd local education authority to enable the capitation of primary schools of Clwyd county to be increased by 75 per cent.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Local education authority spending is funded from locally raised revenue supported by mainly unhypothecated Government grants and not from cash allocations by central Government. It is for local authorities to decide how much to spend on primary schools in the light of their resources and priorities.

M4 Motorway

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report (a) the starting date and (b) the completion date for the construction of the section of the M4 motorway between Baglan and Neath; and whether the contracts for the four contracts in the scheme will be tendered for simultaneously.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The estimated start date for the Baglan-Lonlas section of the M4 is within the "Roads in Wales 1985" timeband to the end of 1990. The duration of the individual contracts varies between two and three years and letting will be phased accordingly.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Public Expenditure

Mr. David Davis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing, for the latest years now available, identifiable public expenditure by function in England, Scotland, Wales, Northern Ireland and the United Kingdom expressed (a) in cash terms, (b) as an index (United Kingdom total identifiable public expenditure = 100), (c) as an amount per capita and (d) as an amount per capita expressed as an index (United Kingdom amount per capita = 100).

Mr. Major: The term "identifiable expenditure" refers to expenditure that can be identified from official records as having been incurred in a particular country. Total identifiable expenditure accounts for around 80 per cent. of total departmental public expenditure.

The remainder, unidentifiable expenditure, includes expenditure on defence, overseas aid and other overseas services which are deemed to have been incurred on behalf of the United Kingdom as a whole. Unidentifiable expenditure also includes Government net lending to, and the market and overseas borrowing of, the public corporations (including nationalised industries), due to the difficulty of allocating this finance to expenditure in a particular country. Privatisation proceeds are also included in unidentifiable expenditure.

Tables 1 to 5 show figures of identifiable public expenditure according to main function in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. These are the only available figures comparing public expenditure by function in the four countries of the United Kingdom. The analysis covers 1983-84 to 1987-88, the only period for which data are available on a consistent basis.

Table 6 compares, for the latest year, 1987-88, expenditure in the Scottish, Welsh and Northern Ireland programmes with the total identifiable expenditure in the respective countries by function. It shows that identifiable expenditure has a wider coverage than expenditure within the responsibilities of the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales; in the case of Northern Ireland it has a slightly wider coverage than the Northern Ireland programme in the public expenditure survey. This table also shows unidentifiable expenditure by function for 1987-88. It should be noted that the unidentifiable expenditure for housing is entirely made up of Government net lending to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive which is excluded from identifiable expenditure because it is classified as a public corporation.

In some cases expenditure which cannot be separately identified for England, Scotland or Wales can be allocated to Great Britain rather than the United Kingdom; for example, the majority of the financing of expenditure by the nationalised industries can be allocated to Great Britain. Tables 7a and 7b compare Northern Ireland allocated expenditure with that allocated to Great Britain over the five-year period.

The extent to which expenditure can be identified may vary from year to year and between countries. The coverage of particular functions can also vary between countries; for example, in Northern Ireland, expenditure on arts and libraries is contained in the education category.

The tables use the terms and definitions of the last public expenditure White Paper "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1988-89 to 1990-91" (Cm. 288) but they incorporate later information.

Official Report (Price)

Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the price of the Official Report.

Mr. Lilley: Following a review by Her Majesty's Stationery Office, I have authorised an increase of 65p in the price of the daily part and Standing Committee debates with a proportionate increase in the price of the weekly part. Bound volumes will increase by £3, the volume index by 30p and the fortnightly index by 20p. Subscription rates and the scale of charges for reprints of Members' speeches appearing in the Official Report will also be raised. These increases, coupled with a reduction of 7·5 per cent. in the production costs at Hansard Press during the current Session, will enable the level of central subsidy to be further reduced.

Union Texas Petroleum Corporation v. Critchley

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he proposes to take in the light of the recent High Court decision in the case of Union Texas Petroleum Corporation v. Critchley.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Government propose bringing forward legislation in the 1989 Finance Bill to make clear the amount of United Kingdom tax that is deductible from United Kingdom tax credits to which non-residents may be entitled under the terms of a double taxation convention. The legislation follows the recent decision in the case of Union Texas Petroleum Corporation v. Critchley and its purpose would be to do no more than restore the position to what it was intended to be. It will apply so as to prevent claims to payment of additional tax credit for past years, but will not affect the decision of any commissioners or court given before today.

Fruit Machines

Miss Lestor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what revenue the Exchequer received in each of the last five years from licence fees from fruit machines.

Mr. Lilley: Revenue received from gaming machines licence duty is as follows:

1983-84	62·9
1984-85	53·2
1985-86	86·0
1986-87	74·7
1987-88	94·2

EC (Spending Controls)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement explaining the differences between the controls on European Economic Community spending agreed at the Council meetings in 1985 and 1988, respectively.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 24 October 1988]: The meeting of the European Council in February 1988 agreed to the following major improvements in the previous arrangements for controlling EC agriculture expenditure which had been set up after the European Councils in Fontainebleau and Dublin in 1984:

(i) the guideline limit on agricultural expenditure is now embodied in a legally binding Council decision which provides for expenditure to grow at no more than 74 per cent. of the rate of growth of the Community's gross national product (previously the guideline was set out in informal Council conclusions and expenditure was permitted to grow at the same rate as the Community's own resources revenues);

(ii) the provision in the 1984 conclusions which permitted the guideline limit to be exceeded in the event of "exceptional circumstances" has been deleted and replaced by a monetary reserve of 1 billion ecu designed to compensate solely for large fluctuations in the exchange rate between the US dollar and the ecu. The revenue to fund the reserve will only be called up if it is needed (there has been no such call in 1988) and the mechanism will work symmetrically (i.e. privision will be reduced if the US dollar appreciates);

(iii) the Council's decision on budget discipline provides not only that the Commission's price proposals shall be consistent with the limits laid down by the agricultural guideline but that expenditure will be managed on a sector by sector basis to ensure that the limit will not be breached;

(iv) automatic stabiliser mechanisms have been built into the regulations governing each of the major commodity regimes. For the most part these are designed to trigger price cuts whenever production exceeds maximum quantities set by the Council;

(v) a new regulation has been introduced to provide for systematic depreciation of new intervention stocks and specific sums have been set aside outside the guideline limit to provide for the costs of depreciation and disposal of existing stocks which have not been fully depreciated in the past.

As regards non-agricultural expenditure, the inter-institutional agreement (IIA) between the Council, the Commission and the Parliament provides a procedural and financial framework for implementing the conclusions of the Brussels European Council on budgetary discipline. The financial perspective attached to the IIA represent ceilings on Community expenditure between 1988 and 1992 which the signatories to the agreement have bound themselves to respect.

Interest Rates

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates he has regarding the effect of (a) a 1 per cent. rise in interest rates and (b) a 1 per cent. drop in interest rates on income to the Treasury.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 21 October 1988]: Interest rates are set at the level necessary to maintain downward pressure on inflation. Lower inflation improves Government finances in the medium term.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Major David Walker

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Attorney-General if, in the light of new information on the blowing up of the Bularos hospital, Managua, on 6 March 1985, he will now consider prosecuting Major David Walker under the Foreign Enlistment Act 1870.

The Attorney-General: No evidence of the alleged offence to which the hon. Gentleman refers has been submitted to the Director of Public Prosecutions or to the Metropolitan police. Any such evidence submitted to the Director or to the police of course will be considered carefully.

Shops Act

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Attorney-General what is the number, nature and relevant category of United Kingdom courts which have referred cases brought to them in respect of section 47 of the Shops Act 1950 to the European Court for an opinion; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The following courts in the United Kingdom have referred questions concerning section 47 of the Shops Act 1950 for preliminary rulings by the European Court of Justice in the course of criminal proceedings:

Woodbridge magistrates court
Mansfield magistrates court
Cwmbran magistrates court
Wakefield magistrates court
The Crown court at Shrewsbury
Londonderry magistrates court

The Crown court at Bodmin has stayed proceedings before it in an appeal in a criminal matter in order to make such a reference to the European Court, but notice of registration of that reference has not been received from the court.

The Government have decided to submit observations in the proceedings before the European Court in these cases. Written observations have so far been submitted in five cases.

DEFENCE

Atmospheric Nuclear Weapons Tests (Health Studies)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether, following the "Study of Health of United Kingdom Participants in the United Kingdom Atmospheric Nuclear Weapons Tests", published on 28 January, further studies of the possible effects on the risks of developing multiple myeloma and leukaemia have been made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Government have accepted the recommendations made by the authors of the National Radiological Protection Board report to conduct a follow-up study covering a period of 10 years from the end of 1983 (the end point of the published study) to the end of 1993. This further study will again cover the incidence of leukaemia (excluding chronic lymphatic) and multiple myeloma. The NRPB is therefore continuing to accumulate data on mortality and cancer incidence in both the study and control populations. If it is justified by an examination of this data, the Government have agreed to consider embarking on a full validation and analysis of the extra data leading to an interim report at an earlier date. No such interim study is, however under way at this moment.

Departmental Staff

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many personnel are employed in his Ministry; what percentage of them are disabled; how many persons have been taken on in the past year; and how many of them suffer from a disability.

Mr. Sainsbury: On 1 June 1988, the number of full-time equivalent United Kingdom-based civilian staff employed by MOD was 142,675. Of this number, some 126,300 were covered in the annual survey of registered disabled personnel at that date and, of those covered, 1,191 (0·94 per cent.) were registered as disabled. No information is available on unregistered disabled personnel. Identified intake of United Kingdom-based civilian staff during the year to 1 June 1988 totalled some 13,600. The annual survey of registered disabled personnel recorded recruitment of 14 registered disabled personnel during the year.

ENERGY

Sizewell C

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what plans he has for a public inquiry on Sizewell C proposals when they come forward formally; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: If the CEGB were to make an application for consent to construct a power station at Sizewell 'C' my right hon. Friend would be obliged to hold a public inquiry if the local planning authority objected. Even if the local planning authority did not object he could still order an inquiry if he thought it appropriate in the light of other objections received.

British Nuclear Fuels plc

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has had any meetings with British Nuclear Fuels plc senior executives following their complaints that British Nuclear Fuels plc efforts to assist the nuclear installations inspectorate investigation into alleged operator malpractice in radiological protection procedures had deflected key British Nuclear Fuels plc health staff away from genuine and important safety matters; and what implications this staff prioritisation has for safety at Sellafield.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have noted both the report of the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate (NII) and the comments made by British Nuclear Fuels plc (BNFL) in accepting the conclusions and recommendations of the report. I am confident that BNFL continues to give the highest priority to safety and that the NII will continue to provide the essential independent check on this.

Nuclear Safety

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if any recent initiatives have been taken by the United Kingdom and Soviet Union to offer mutual assistance in international nuclear safety.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 20 April 1988 at column 434. The information exchange arrangement between the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate and the USSR state commission on supervision of nuclear power safety, was signed on 21 September during the IAEA conference in Vienna.

I understand that Her Majesty's chief inspectorate of nuclear installations will be visiting the USSR early next year to continue discussions with the USSR state commission.

Piper Alpha

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his statement of 7 July, Official Report, columns 1191-98, whether the public inquiry he announced on the Piper Alpha platform disaster will review safety procedures for work in the North sea generally; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson [pursuant to his reply, 14 July 1988, c. 365-66]: I have appointed Mr. Malcolm Ford, CBE, lately managing director of Britoil plc and Professor Frank Lees, professor of plant engineering at Loughborough university of technology to be assessors to assist Lord Cullen at the public inquiry into the Piper Alpha accident.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Upper Waiting Hall

Mr. Hanley: To ask Lord President of the Council how the partial closure of the Upper Waiting Hall will affect those Members' exhibitions usually staged there; and what alternative arrangements have been made.

Mr. Wakeham: In consultation with those authorities responsible for the control of Westminster Hall, it has been agreed that those exhibitions arranged for the period to Christmas this year should be held instead in the north east corner of Westminster Hall. Thereafter, no further exhibitions will be allowed until the Upper Waiting Hall has been repaired.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Cyprus

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much official aid given by the Government to Cyprus in each of the last four years has been devoted to projects in the Turkish-controlled sector; and how much has been devoted to projects in the remainder of Cyprus.

Mr. Chris Patten: Information for the period in question could be provided only at disproportionate cost. But as I informed the hon. Member for Warley, East (Mr. Faulds) on 26 February, at column 34, arrangements have been made to ensure that in future the sums expended from aid funds on each community are recorded.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 25 October.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 25 October.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today, including one with Prince Sihanouk of Cambodia. This evening I hope to have an Audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Barr Hall, Portaferry

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether a vehicular access to the new prisoner rehabilitation centre at Barr Hall, Portaferry, has been approved in accordance with roads legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: No. Approval for such access has not been sought from the roads service of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland.

Housing Executive

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much has been spent by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in rehabilitation in each of the housing regions in Northern Ireland in each year since 1973.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, who has advised me that, prior to 1980-81, details of rehabilitation expenditure were not maintained on a regional basis. Rehabilitation expenditure (ie, expenditure on both acquired and purpose-built stock) since 1980-81 is as follows:

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much has been spent by the Housing Executive on the repair and rehabilitation of houses in the Ardoyne area of district 6 in Belfast in each of the last five years.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, who has advised me that information on the repair of dwellings in the Ardoyne area is not readily available and could only be compiled at disproportionate cost. The total amount spent on rehabilitation and planned maintenance in the area in each of the last five years is as follows:

	Rehabilitation £	Planned maintenance £
1983-84	Nil	Nil
1985-86	257,975	212,700

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much has been spent by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive on the Poleglass estate new build and maintenance in each year since 1973.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, who has advised me that expenditure on new build and planned maintenance in the Poleglass estate is as follows:

	New build £	Planning maintenance £
1972-73 to 1978-79	Nil	Nil

Carriageways and Footways (Repair Costs)

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much has been spent by the Department of the Environment on the repair of carriageways and footways in north Belfast, east Belfast, and west Belfast, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Needham: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Belfast Urban Area Plan

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the time scale for the publication of the report of the commissioners on the Belfast urban area plan has been the subject of slippage; and whether separate interim reports will be published covering the separate headings such as commercial, housing, recreation and transportation.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 24 October 1988]: The time scale for submission of the Commission's report and the manner of its presentation to the Department of the Environment (Northern Ireland) are matters for the Commission to decide after consultation with the Department. However, I am not aware of any slippage.

Debt Payments (Deductions)

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table showing the total deductions made from (a) invalidity benefit, (b) child benefit, (c) widows benefit, (d) supplementary benefit, (e) unemployment benefit, (f) sickness benefit and (g) retirement pensions in each year from 1979 to 1988 under the Payments for Debt (Emergency Provisions) Act (Northern Ireland) 1971.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 24 October 1988]: The information requested is as follows:

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland from how many people deductions were made under the Payments for Debt (Emergency Provisions) Act (Northern Ireland) 1971 in each of the years from 1979 to 1988.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 24 October 1988]: The numbers of people from whom deductions have been made is not available. The total number of debt cases recorded by the four main creditor bodies was as follows:

Year	Numbers
1979-80	175,300
1980-81	176,300

Downpatrick Race Club

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he intends introducing legislation to the Horse Racing and Betting Order 1976 in order that Downpatrick race club may be eligible for funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 24 October 1988]: It will be necessary to repeal the Horse Racing and Betting Order 1976 and seek Parliament's agreement to a new Order in Council. The Department of Agriculture has initiated the necessary legislative procedures. These could take at least two years to complete.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what level of funding will be offered to Downpatrick race club under an amended Horse Racing and Betting Order 1976.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 24 October 1988]: No decisions have been taken on the level of funding, which will only be determined following discussions with the bookmaker organisations.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether funding to Downpatrick race club will be paid retrospectively to 1976 in the event of amendment of the Horse Race and Betting Order 1976.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 24 October 1988]: No.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Tourism

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the United Kingdom's balance of payments in tourism since 1979.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is available in table 1 of the 1987 Business Monitor MA6 "Overseas travel and tourism" a copy of which can be found in the Library.

Regional Development Grants

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proportion of total regional development grants has been paid to firms in the north-west region in (a) 1986-87 and (b) 1987-88.

Mr. Forth: The north-west region's share of regional development grants expenditure in England was 45 per cent. in 1986-87 and 36 per cent. in 1987-88.

Sub-post Offices (Wales)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what initiatives he will take to retain sub-post office facilities in Wales under their current opening hours regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: This is an operational matter for the Post Office Board.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many sub-post offices have closed in Wales in the years 1979-1988 and in 1986-1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: This is a matter for the Post Office Board. Figures are not readily available for the period before 1986. However, I understand that, according to Post Office estimates, in 1979 there were 1,752 sub-post offices in Wales and the Marches. Between 1979 and October 1986 it is estimated that 119 offices were closed; and since October 1986, 28 sub-post offices in the region have been closed. A total of 1,612 sub-post offices remain, including seven offices previously closed but now reopened as community offices operating on a part time basis. Since the Post Office introduced the community office arrangements, the number of closures has reduced from an average of some 15 per year to five during the last 12 months.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many sub-post offices in the counties of Clwyd and Gwynedd are to be reclassified for the purposes of opening hours; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: This is an operational matter for the Post Office. However, I understand that in Gwynedd there are 226 sub-post offices of which 14 have been reclassified as community offices which open part-time. A further 96 full-time offices may be considered for conversion to community offices when they become vacant. In Clwyd there are 209 sub-post offices of which 17 are community offices. A further 50 full-time offices may be considered for conversion to community offices when they become vacant.

Citizens Advice Bureau (Bradford)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will arrange for extra funding to be made available to the Bradford citizens advice bureau, to enable it to cope with any additional demands arising from the closure of Bradford benefits shops.

Mr. Forth: No. My Department does not fund individual citizens advice bureaux direct. The Government grant to the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux, which this financial year amounted to £8·386 million, is intended principally to meet the costs of providing the central support services for local bureaux, such as the information service and the training of bureau workers. The running costs of local bureaux are a matter for local funding and the majority of bureaux are funded entirely by local authorities, although part of the Government grant to NACAB is made available for use in short-term partnership arrangements between NACAB and individual local authorities. The allocation of this partnership money is at the discretion of NACAB.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Departmental Staff

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the latest figures for his Ministry in the London pay area of the number of vacancies by grade and the proportion this is of the grade complement in London.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information requested for the London weighting area is as follows:

6	9	13
7 and equivalent	53½	15
SEO and equivalent	0	0
HEO and equivalent	53½	11
EO and equivalent	87	15
AO and equivalent	111½	14
AA and equivalent	101½	14
Total non-Industrials	417	12
Industrials	39	33

Notes:

1. The numbers of vacancies by grade equivalents are measured by comparing the figures for staff in post at 1 October 1988 with the authorised complement for the Department at the same date.
2. The figures include some specially complemented posts which may be filled at one of several grade levels. Complement information for these posts has been provided on a proportional basis.
3. Normal retirement, resignation and recruitment patterns mean that a proportion of the authorised complement is inevitably unfilled at any one time. Additionally cash limits on running costs restrict the number of posts the Department can fill.

Pesticides

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which pesticides his Department has examined as potentially injurious to health when used in the production of fruit and vegetables; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: All pesticides must be approved before they can be sold or used. Pesticides are by their very nature active against some living organisms and hence their use offers a potential risk to both human health and the environment. This is precisely why we take great care to ensure that only those products which have met stringent criteria on safety may be used.

Under part III of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 Ministers in six Government Departments must first be satisfied that a product can be used safely before any approval is given. In order to obtain approval pesticide manufacturers are require to provide a range of scientific data, which are then subjected to rigorous scrutiny by the independent experts of the Advisory Committee on Pesticides. This will include, where appropriate, assessment of studies on the short and long-term toxicity of the product, on its cumulative effects and on any delayed effects which might emerge after a latent period.

Only when Ministers are convinced, on the basis of expert advice, that the product can be used without risk to people—whether operators, consumers or those in the vicinity of spraying operations—livestock or domestic animals and with minimal risk to the environment, will authority to put it on the market be given.

As part of the approvals process all products may be subject to review at any time if new evidence arises suggesting the existence of a previously unevaluated risk. On this basis Ministers have sought the views of the Advisory Committee on Pesticides on a number of pesticides used on fruit and vegetables since the legislation took effect and products based on the active ingredients dinoseb and related products, and cyhexatin have been withdrawn from use. Other substances are either under review or the subject of consultation.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the size of the section within his Department which monitors the pesticide residues in fruit and vegetables in the United Kingdom; if he will list the names and positions of those civil servants with such responsibilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: Pesticides safety division has over 80 scientific and administrative staff, and carries out the greater part of the work relating to pesticides safety which falls to my Department. However for monitoring fruit and vegetables for pesticide residues the division's resource are supplemented by the working party on pesticide residues, which is chaired by the Director of the ADAS central science laboratory and benefits from a technical secretariat provided by food science division.

The working party has expert members drawn from other MAFF divisions, other Government Departments, from a number of laboratories in the Government service and from local authorities. A range of laboratories contribute to the monitoring programme including ADAS central science laboratory, ADAS central veterinary laboratory, MAFF food science laboratory, MAFF fisheries laboratory, laboratories at DAFS and DANI, the laboratory of the Government chemist and certain public analysts' laboratories. The working party reports both to the Standing Committee on Food Surveillance and the Advisory Committee on Pesticides. It is on the recommendation of the latter that any necessary changes are made to the conditions of approval of pesticides to ensure that residues remain within acceptable limits.

As can be seen, a large number of individuals are involved. The membership of the committees mentioned above is listed in their reports.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list the likely consequences to consumers who consume fruit and vegetables containing pesticides residues which are over the recommended safety limit; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what assessment he has made of the safety of customers consuming apples and pears and vegetables containing pesticides residues for sale in outlets in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: Maximum residue levels for pesticides are primarily designed to act as a check that good agricultural practice in the use of pesticides is being followed by farmers and growers. However, the approval process for pesticides ensures that the levels incorporate adequate margins of safety for consumers as well.

It is misleading to describe MRLs as "safety limits" as the hon. Member does, as that term suggests that if an MRL is exceeded the consumer's health is put at risk: in fact the safety margins which MRLs incorporate are designed to ensure that even if a person consumes extreme quantities of a particular food over a long period of time, and all that food contains residues at the MRL (which is unlikely) the overall intake of residue should cause that person no harm. It follows that the occasional consumption of food containing residues which do not greatly exceed the MRL should present no risk to health.

Sea Levels

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what contingency plans exist for combating the effects of rising sea levels; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what estimates his Department is using in considering the consequences of rising sea levels in the British Isles over the next 50 years; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will estimate the cost of improving existing sea defences and building new defences; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if he will assess the need for new defences inland to combat a rise in sea level and where such defences should be located; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Possible rises in sea level by the middle of the next century are being studied as part of a national research programme, linked with similar programmes throughout the European Community and worldwide; particular attention is being given to monitoring and prediction of sea level change and options for design of flood defences. At present, precise predictions cannot be made due to uncertainty regarding future temperature patterns. Nevertheless, the implications for coastal defences of a broad range of possible changes are being carefully studied.

The present design of defences allows for a rise in sea levels of 0·3 metres per century. This compares with a global increase over the last century of the order of 0·15 metres. An international programme of studies is investigating climate change; meanwhile research is exploring the implications for the United Kingdom in advance of firm predictions. Based on international reports, a range of temperature predictions was selected for these studies; these predictions suggest the possibility of sea level rise in the range 0·2 million to 1·65 million by the middle of the next century. With such an increase, it is estimated that the current annual expenditure of £50 million on coastal defences might need to more than double over this period.

The need for flood defences is kept under continual review by the Department. A team of engineers report regularly on flood defence needs in their area and maintain close contact with the responsible authorities.

Agricultural Land Classification

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about his review of the Agricultural Land Classification of England and Wales.

Mr. Ryder: I am pleased to announce that the revised guidelines and criteria for grading the quality of agricultural land are being published today. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

New data and technology have allowed us to develop a revised ALC system. This builds on the strengths of the existing system, but we have been able to take advantage of modern methods to make it more objective and definitive. The revised system reflects comments received during the consultation exercise earlier this year. It will come into operation on 1 January 1989.

Cereals

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will consider changing the rules for calculating cereals co-responsibility levy in cereals sold with a high moisture content.

Mr. MacGregor: I am glad to say that we have been able to modify the rules for calculating the rate of co-responsibility levy paid on cereals sold with a high moisture content. Up until now, levy has been payable on the delivered weight of the grain, regardless of the moisture level. This has meant that where grain has been delivered with a high moisture content the tonnage used to calculate the amount of levy due has sometimes been higher than the tonnage on which the grower has been paid. I was concerned when evidence came to light that as a result of a different interpretation of the Community rules different arrangements were in force in some other member states, we took steps straightaway to get Commission agreement to change our rules which has now been achieved.

In future, therefore if a grower is paid on a lower tonnage of grain than the delivered tonnage, levy will be payable only on that lower tonnage. These new rules come into effect immediately, and will apply to all transactions that have taken place since the beginning of the marketing year. The intervention board will issue details of the changes as soon as possible. Anyone who has paid too much levy under the previous system will be eligible for a refund; details of how to apply will be announced shortly.

These changes will ensure that our growers are not treated less favourably than any growers anywhere elsewhere in the Community; and as such will I hope be welcomed.

ENVIRONMENT

Departmental Staff

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest available figures for his Department in the London pay area of the number of vacancies by grade and the proportion this is of the grade complement in London.

Mr. Ridley: This information is not kept in the form requested and it would be disproportionately costly to collect it. There are no fixed complements for particular grades.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide the latest available figures for his Department for (a) numbers of staff in receipt of local pay additions, by grade, (b) location of those offices awarding local pay additions and (c) annual cost.

Mr. Ridley: Local pay additions have been introduced in my Department, excluding the PSA, as follows:

Location: Inner London weighting pay area

Grade	Number	Annual cost £
Secretarial	380	114,000
Administrative Assistant	83	39,600
Administrative Officer	505	288,600

Property Services Agency (Staff)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest available figures for the Property Services Agency in the London pay area of the number of vacancies by grade and the proportion this is of the grade complement in London.

Mr. Ridley: This information is not kept in the form requested and it would be disproportionately costly to collect it. The Property Services Agency operates under a financial running costs regime and there are no fixed complements for particular grades.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide the latest available figures for the Property Services Agency for (a) numbers of staff in receipt of local pay additions, by grade, (b) location of those offices awarding local pay additions and (c) annual cost.

Mr. Ridley: The information requested is:

(a)	Administrative Assistant (AA)		222
	Administrative Officer (AO)		628
	Executive Officer (EO)		38
	Typist	257
	Personal Secretary	87
	Senior Personal Secretary	20
	Typing Manager	11
	All typing grades	—	375

(b) Local Pay Additions (LPAs) are paid to AOs, AAs, and typing grades in the inner zone of the London Weighting Area, to typing grades in the intermediate and outer zones and to most AOs and AAs in the outer zone. EOs, AOs, AAs and typing grades are paid LPAs in District Works Offices throughout PSA's London Region. LPAS are also paid to EOs, AOs, AAs and typing grades at Reading, to AOs, AAs and typists at Daws Hill, Watford, High Wycombe, Aldershot and Farnborough and to AAs at Cambridge.

(c) The cost in a full year is £576,000.

Homelessness

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he possesses, and what action he intends to take in order to obtain further such information, showing the actual numbers of families becoming homeless consequent on default in mortgage payments and the changes in the proportion of homeless persons in this category over the last five years.

Mr. Trippier: English local authorities provide quarterly information about the number of households accepted under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Act 1985; this includes the number of households accepted where the main reason for homelessness was mortgage arrears or default.

In the 12 months to June 1988 it is estimated that 9,800 households became homeless as a result of mortgage arrears; this is some 8 per cent. of all acceptances. For corresponding information in each of the last five years, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) on 27 June at column 146.

Freehold Disposals (Westminster)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received seeking the direction of a special audit of Westminster city council in respect of the disposal by that council of the freeholds of 32 Smith Square and 67 Tufton Street, London SW1.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None, other than parliamentary questions from the hon. Members for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) and for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours).

Private Cemeteries

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on private cemeteries.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Since 1 April, besides five questions from hon. Members, we have received 46 letters from Members and 45 direct from members of the public most of which related to the three former Westminster cemeteries sold into private ownership. These included the following matters: calls for a full public inquiry, for the Secretary of State to order an extraordinary audit of the council's accounts, for him to implement a compulsory purchase order for the cemeteries, and for a licensing system for private cemetery operators, complaints about maintenance, and concern about development of unused land in the cemeteries. In addition, the Department handled 48 applications for the closure of churchyards to further burials.

EC Environment Ministers

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting of European Community Environment Ministers at Delphi, on 1 October.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My noble Friend the Minister for Housing, Environment and Countryside represented the United Kingdom at this informal meeting at which views were exchanged on the future of the Community's environmental policy, with particular reference to the question of financial resources. There was also a discussion on the implications of the Single European Act and the completion of the single European market in 1992.

Ministers underlined the importance of current environmental issues which cross national borders and require collaboration both at Community and at the wider international level, such as the ozone layer, the "greenhouse effect", the need to promote sustainable development and the safe disposal of waste.

The meeting was an opportunity for a frank and open exchange of views without the need for formal conclusions.

British Nuclear Fuels plc

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has made to the statement of the nuclear installations inspectorate on operator practices at British Nuclear Fuels plc Sellafield that some workers are avoiding proper radiological monitoring procedures at Sellafield.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The issues referred to in the nuclear installations inspectorate's report, concern worker safety and are a matter for that inspectorate. Since these working practices have no waste management implications, my Department has no regulatory responsibility.

Radioactive Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the departmental representation and what papers by departmental officials or departmental consultants were presented at (a) the 1988 European summer school on radioactive waste management held at Christ's college, Cambridge, on 11 to 14 July, (b) the international conference on disposal of radioactive waste in seabed sediments held at St. Catherine's college, Oxford, on 20 and 21 September and (c) the international conference on decommissioning of major radioactive facilities held at the Institution of Mechanical Engineers, London, on 11 and 12 October; and if he will place copies of all departmental papers from such conferences in the Library.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Departmental representation and papers presented by departmental officials or consultants were;

(a) One official and two papers:
- (i) Monitoring Radioactivity in the Environment. Dr. F. Feates, HMIP/DOE.
- (ii) The National Research Programme. Dr. F. Feates, HMIP/DOE.

(b) Three officials and eight papers:
- (i) Modelling Emplacement and the Physical Changes to the Sediment Barrier. T. Freeman, BRE/DOE.
- (ii) Migratory Pathways in Sub-seabed Sediments. Dr. Janet Gronow, HMIP/DOE.
- (iii) The HOCUS Hole Closure Experiments. T. Freeman et al, BRE/DOE.
- (iv) The Geology and Geochemistry of Madiera Abyssal Plain Sediments. Dr. P. Weaver, Institute of Oceanographic Sciences.
- (v) Studies Relating to Faulting in the Abyssal Plain Sediments. Dr. Stone and Dr. D. Muir-Wood, Cambridge University.
- (vi) Modelling of the Coupled Heat Flow and Consolidation Around Hot Cylinders Buried in Clay. Dr. Savvidou, Cambridge University.
- (vii) Centrifuge Modelling of a Free-fall Penetrator. Drs. Poorooshasb and James, Cambridge University.
- (viii) Review of Initial HGW Deep Ocean Emplacement Disposal Studies. Milloy et al, Ove Arup and Partners.

(c) One official and no papers.

Copies of these papers will be placed in the Library when the respective conference proceedings are published.

Community Liaison

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list for each urban development corporation by name the (a) establishment and (b) number currently in post by title of staff responsible for community liaison work, giving for each urban development corporation the allocated budget in the current financial year for such purposes.

Mr. Trippier: The information available for English first and second generation urban development corporations (UDCs) is given in the table. The UDCs vary in their staffing arrangements and in the size, resident population and other characteristics of their areas. Therefore, direct comparisons are misleading. No equivalent information is available for the third generation UDCs set up this year. They are still recruiting staff and developing their policies.

UDC	Establishment	Number currently in post	Titles of posts	Work/project budget	Staff costs
London Docklands	7 plus support	7 plus support	Head of Community Development Director of Community Division 4 Community Liaison Officers Schools Liaison Teacher 3 Support Staff (plus other staff in Employment Division with some involvement)	£7·9 million[1]	£208,000 for 7 plus support
Merseyside	None full time—Corporation consults community groups as necessary.
Black Country	1	1	Community Liaison Officer	£350,000	£27,000
Teesside	0·2	0·2	Assistant to Chief Executive (part of duties)	£50,000	£5,000
Trafford Park	None full time—Chief Executive or assistant liaise at regular meetings.
Tyne & Wear	1	1	Community Development Advisor (Consultant)	£100,000	£30,000

[1] NB: £7·9 million is LDDC's budget for its total community support programme, including grants and awards.

Home Improvement Grants

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he anticipates the implementation date for the means testing of home improvement grants; and if he will publish in the Official Report the sliding scale that he will use.

Mr. Trippier: We hope to reform the home improvement grant system at the earliest legislative opportunity and we expect to issue a consultation paper on the proposed test of resources later this year.

Montreal Protocol

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to press for the strengthening of the Montreal protocol on the reduction of chlorofluorocarbons in the environment; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government has decided that worldwide emission of chlorofluorocarbons must be reduced by at least 85 per cent. and we are pressing the European Community as a whole to adopt this policy with a view to greatly strengthening the Montreal protocol. This was announced on 3 October by my noble Friend the Minister for Housing, Environment and Countryside on publication of the second report of the Department's stratospheric ozone review group, a copy of which has been placed in the Library. Our first priority remains the protocol's entry into force, as planned, on 1 January 1989. This will in turn trigger implementation in the Community by means of a regulation formally adopted on 22 September.

Conservative Party Conference

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those publications or documents produced by his Department which were distributed at the 1988 Conservative party conference.

Mr. Ridley: Copies of the following documents were available on request at the local government stand at the 1988 Conservative party conference.

Government Proposals for Housing: Housing Action Trusts
Government Proposals for Housing: Private Renting
Government Proposals for Housing: Tenants' Choice
Paying for Local Government: The Need for Change
Protecting your Environment: A Guide
Towards a Cleaner North Sea: Restoring Estuaries

All these documents are available free of charge to members of the public.

No. 1 Cannon Row

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about progress on work to convert No. 1 Cannon Row.

Mr. Chope: I am pleased to report that the contract to convert the former Cannon Row police station to temporary office accommodation has been let and work started last month. Completion is forecast for summer 1989. The Parliamentary Works Office is discussing with the Serjeant at Arms the arrangements for taking over and furnishing the building.

English House Condition Survey

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now publish the results of the English house condition survey 1986.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 24 October 1988]: I hope to publish the results of the 1986 English house condition survey next month.

Rent Arrears

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to help local authorities cope with the increase in rent arrears since the changes made in the housing benefit scheme.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 24 October 1988]: As my hon. Friend the Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe) told the hon. Member on 14 July, Official Report, columns 301-2, it is for individual authorities to take timely and appropriate steps to control and reduce rent arrears. The assistance available from auditors and from officials of my Department was set out in circular 18/87.

Young People (Homelessness)

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for assisting in the housing of young people in Halifax who are facing homelessness as a result of the changes in the law in April relating to housing benefits.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 24 October 1988]: The Government do not accept that the changes in housing benefit announced in April have resulted in homelessness among young people either in Halifax or elsewhere. The statutory responsibility for assisting or advising young homeless people in Halifax rests entirely with the local authority, under the provisions of part III of the Housing Act 1985.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received relating to the decision of the Stoneham housing association and the local authority in Halifax to abandon a scheme providing furnished flats because changes in housing benefits would prevent young people, for whom the scheme was designed, from meeting the rents.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 24 October 1988]: None.

London Borough of Westminster and Conservative Central Office (Transactions)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will exercise his powers under section 22(2) of the Local Government Finance Act 1982 to require the Audit Commission to order an extraordinary audit into the property transaction undertaken between the London borough of Westminster and Conservative Central Office.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 24 October 1988]: No.

Storm Damage Claims

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by local authority the claims from the storm damage of October 1987 he has received and the relevant grant allocations.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 24 October 1988]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) on 14 June 1988, Official Report columns 138-42. The information in that reply for certain authorities requires updating in the light of more recent information as follows.

	Total eligible expenditure net of receipts	Threshold	Eligible expenditure attracting grant
Non Metropolitan Counties
Essex	2,723,000	2,458,000	265,000
Isle of Wight	187,073	146,250	40,823
London Boroughs
Hammersmith and Fulham	241,000	199,000	42,000
Waltham Forest	696,200	312,000	384,200
Non Metropolitan Districts
Harlow	113,000	21,000	92,000
Welwyn Hatfield	49,000	29,000	20,000

The Isle of Wight figures are now based on a final audited claim.

Disabled Persons (Adapted Dwellings)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what information he has regarding the current average cost to a local authority for (a) installing a ramp, (b) a stair lift and (c) widening doorways to provide for wheelchair access to council homes;

(2) what information he has regarding the average waiting time for households containing a disabled person seeking adaptations to their council property;

(3) what information he has regarding the number of households containing a disabled person and awaiting adaptations for ramps, stairlifts and widening of doorways.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 24 October 1988]: Information about households awaiting adaptations, and about the average cost to local authorities of adaptations, is not held centrally. The Department's new guidance manual "Home Adaptations for People with Physical Disabilities", a copy of which is in the Library, gives details of the cost of specific adaptations in 22 case studies in England and Wales.

HEALTH

Departmental Staff

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide the latest available figures for his Department for (a) numbers of staff in receipt of local pay additions, by grade, (b) location of those offices awarding local pay additions and (c) annual cost.

Mrs. Currie: We do not yet have accurate statistics for the Department of Health alone, following the split of the Department of Health and Social Security on 5 July. The information given is for DHSS headquarters and covers staff in the Department of Health and the Department of Social Security.

The following is the table:

(a) Numbers of staff in receipt of local pay additions by grade as at 1 July 1988 (DHSS HQ):

Grade	Number of staff in receipt
Administrative Assistant	106
Administrative Officer	577
Personal Secretary	271
Senior Personal Secretary	21
Executive Officer	30
Higher Executive Officer	14
Others	8

(b) Location of DHSS HQ offices awarding local pay additions:
Alexander Fleming House
Avon House
Brittania House
Eileen House
Friars House
Hannibal House
St. Christophers House
Almack House
Great Titchfield Street
Hepburn House
New Court
Richmond House
Euston Tower
Russell Square
State House
Canons Park
Hinchley Wood
Thames Ditton
Market Towers
Ray House

(c) The scheme has not been operating long enough for accurate annual cost projections to be made. The cost for the first month, July, was £42,001·77.

Dentists

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of the following sanctions were applied to general dental practitioners in the calendar years 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987: (a) withholding of money and (b) compliance warnings.

Mrs. Currie: Information on the number of warnings issued is not readily available but a warning is generally issued when a practitioner has been found in breach of the terms of service. Details of the number of general dental practitioners found in breach and those where my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State directed a withholding are shown below:

General dental practitioners	1984	1985	1986	1987
Found in breach	196	343	298	209
Withholding directed	145	255	220	136

The figures for 1985 and 1986 are artificially high because a backlog of cases was being cleared in those years.

Tranquillisers

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated cost of tranquillisers supplied under the National Health Service in each of the past four years for which records are available.

Mr. Mellor: Tranquillisers form part of the therapeutic group sedatives and tranquillisers and the cost of individual drugs cannot be identified within the group. For the years 1984 to 1987 the net ingredient cost of drugs in this group dispensed by pharmacists in England was:

	£ million
1984	22·3
1985	16·9
1987	14·3

Information is not collected by therapeutic group as to the cost of drugs supplied in hospitals or by dispensing doctors.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the number of beds for each regional health authority in (a) 1986 and (b) 1987.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the data for 1987-88 are not yet available. I will let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Walsgrave Hospital

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much will be provided by the West Midlands regional health authority or Coventry health authority in the form of a capital grant or capital loan towards the cost of day surgery, endoscopy and in-patient facilities being established at Walsgrave hospital by Bioplan Holdings plc.

Mr. Mellor: The capital cost of the total scheme, currently estimated at £1·1 million, is to be met 60 per cent. by Coventry health authority and 40 per cent. by Bioplan, in accordance with the proposed percentage use of the facilities.

The contribution to the scheme by Coventry health authority is to be met by an annual rental contribution from Bioplan; this will effectively service the capital contribution which Coventry health authority will make.

The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of Coventry health authority if he would like any further information.

Children's Homes

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has completed revision of the regulations governing the conduct of private children's homes and local authority community homes; and whether corporal punishment has now been prohibited in these establishments and in homes registered under the Registered Homes Act 1984.

Mrs. Currie: The Residential Care Homes (Amendment) Regulations 1988 prohibited corporal punishment in homes registered under part 1 of the Registered Homes Act, 1984. A wider revision of regulations governing the conduct of local authority community homes and voluntary homes provided under the Child Care Act, 1980 and the prohibition of corporal punishment in them has not been completed. Private children's homes are the subject of the Children's Homes Act, 1982, which is unimplemented.

We are committed to introduce legislation on the law on child care and family services as soon as Parliamentary time can be found. We intend to seek through that legislation a common regulation making power covering local authority community homes and voluntary and private children's homes. Full revision of regulations will be made when that power is available.

Action to produce revised control and discipline regulations to apply to local authority community homes and voluntary homes, which will specifically prohibit the use of corporal punishment, is in hand and we plan to issue draft regulations for consultation very shortly. It remains the Department's policy that corporal punishment has no place in the management of children's homes. The authorised use of corporal punishment in children's homes is thought to be virtually extinct.

Abortion

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of abortions performed in 1987 at (a) under 12, (b) 12 to 18, (c) 18 to 24 and (d) over 24 weeks' gestation by health authority area in England and Wales; and if he will give the numbers performed by National Health Service and private facilities by the same time limit categories.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to the reply, 1 July 1988, c. 395-96]: I regret that there were errors in the statistics provided.

The correct information is shown in the following table.

Number of notifications of abortions to residents of England and Wales—1987[2]

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits

137. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what number and proportion of the work force are ineligible for national insurance benefits.

138. Mrs. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what number and proportion of the work force are ineligible for national insurance benefits.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This information is not available. Entitlement to National Insurance benefits depends on meeting certain conditions applicable to the benefit involved, and these are tested only when a claim is made.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the latest figures available for his Department in the London pay area of the number of vacancies by grade and the proportion this is of the grade complement in London.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of vacancies by grade, and the proportion this is of the grade complement, is set out in the table for local and regional offices in the social security regional organisation. The figures give the overall position as at 1 October 1988. Individual offices are provided with a manpower budget and flexibilities in operating this budget mean that there can be surpluses in other grades and management may not be seeking to fill all these vacancies.

	SEO	HEO	EO	Typist	Security guard
Number of vacancies	4	22·5	42	14·5	6
Proportion of complement (Per cent.)	5·9	8·9	1·5	7·2	3·3

The headquarters organisation of the Department controls manpower by running costs budgets. The following table gives the number of staff headquarters divisions are seeking to recruit externally and the proportion this is of the staff in post and recruitment vacancies for that grade. The figures give the position as at 1 October 1988 and, because the process of splitting the Department of Health and Social Security is not yet complete, are an estimate of those staff who will form the headquarters of the Department of Social Security.

	Number of vacancies	Proportion of staff-in-post/vacancies (per cent.)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide the latest available figures for his Department for (a) numbers of staff in receipt of local pay additions, by grade, (b) location of those offices awarding local pay additions and (c) annual cost.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We do not yet have accurate statistics for the Department of Social Security alone, following the split of the Department of Health and Social Security on 25 July. The information given is for the Department's local offices. Information for DHSS Headquarters which covers staff in the Department of Social Security and the Department of Health are being provided today in reply to the hon. Member's similar question to the Secretary of State for Health.

(c) The scheme has not been operating long enough for accurate annual cost projections to be made. The cost for the first month, July, was £294,534.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the complement of staff at his Department's Stanmore office.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Department does not have a Stanmore office. The area is covered by the office at Harrow. Its present complement is 142.

Grants and Loans

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of applications for (a) community care grants, (b) budget loans and (c) crisis loans have been turned down in (i) the Burnley constituency, (ii) the Rossendale and Darwen constituency and (iii) the Hyndburn constituency.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Burnley constituency is covered by Burnley local office, Rossendale and Darwen constituency is covered by Rossendale local office and Hyndburn constituency is covered by Blackburn local office but their boundaries and not conterminous.

Information on social fund grants and loans processed and awarded, listed by local office, is available in the Library.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will state for each of the last five years for which figures are available for mobility allowance applications (a) the number of applications, (b) the number of approvals, (c) the number of appeals and (d) the number of successful appeals.

Mr. Scott: The available information is as follows. It relates to decisions given in the relevant years, not to the results of claims made in those years.

1. Claims

1983	126,300	86,300

Rents and Rates

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what payments were made by his Department for (a) rate rebates, (b) rent rebates and (c) rent allowances in 1986-87, and what are his latest estimates for those figures in 1987-88, for (i) Burnley borough council, (ii) Pendle borough council, (iii) Hyndburn borough council and (iv) Rossendale borough council.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is given in the table.

Housing Rental Purchase

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if his Department has plans to bring forward any measures with regard to housing rental purchase.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My predecessor announced on 28 January at columns 382-3 that the benefit arrangements for providing help with payments under rental purchase agreements were under review. That review is not yet completed.

Family Credit

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide an estimate of the latest figure of the number of people claiming family credit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: At the end of September, about 242,000 families were receiving family credit, and a further 62,000 claims were awaiting determination.

Benefit Shops (Bradford)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received about the closure of Bradford council's benefits shops; and what assessment he has made of the impact of such closures on his Department's local offices in Bradford.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Representations have been made by two hon. Members to the managers of the social security offices in Bradford about the closures. Local management have said they expect to be able to absorb any increase in traffic in inquiries without affecting standards of service.

Income Support

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security under what statutory powers his Department acts in seeking to recover from fuel boards overpayments of income support made under schedule 9, paragraph 6, of the Social Security (Claims and Payments) Regulations 1987, in cases where responsibility for the overpayment lies with his Department as a result of an office error.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: These over-payments are not income support. They occur as a result of a mistake of fact when, for example, a claimant has ceased to be entitled to benefit although payment has continued to be made to the fuel board. In these cases, the Department's right of recovery rests in common law.

Social Fund

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to review the social fund budget for the Liverpool Edgehill local office.

Mr. Scott: I regret there was an error in my reply of 15 April at column 267. The social fund loans budget for Liverpool (Edgehill) local office should be £614,013 rather than £714,113. As some six months had passed before this error was discovered, this year's budget has been reduced by £50,000. The revised letter of allocation sets the revised loans budget at £664,113.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Malaysia

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Malaysia on violations of human rights in that country; and if he has specifically taken up the cases of Lim Kit Siang and other leading members of the opposition.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend raised the issue of detentions during a visit to Malaysia in April this year. The Twelve have also made known to the Malaysian authorities our collective concern.

Corporal Punishment

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any agreement has yet been achieved between Her Majesty's Government and the European Commission of Human Rights on the complaint lodged by the parents of 15 children caned at state schools prior to the implementation of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: There were 16 applications to the European Commission of Human Rights concerning corporal punishment in state schools prior to the implementation of the 1986 Act. These were discontinued in May 1988 following the Government's offer to make ex gratia payments to the applicants. Settlements had earlier been reached in three other cases.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mrs. Chalker [pursuant to her oral reply, 19 October 1988, column 876]: The Foreign Affairs Council met on 26 September. I represented the United Kingdom, accompanied by my hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development.

The Council discussed the Community's negotiating mandate for the renegotiation of the ACP/EEC convention—Lomé IV. The mandate was subsequently finalised, and negotiations with the ACP countries formally opened on 12 October. My hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development represented the United Kingdom.

The Presidency gave a progress report on the negotiations on the implementing regulations for the structural funds. There was no discussion.

The French Minister made a statement on audiovisual co-operation among member states, arguing for adoption of a directive on broadcasting; progress in developing high definition television; and an industry-led programme jointly funded by Governments, similar to the present EUREKA arrangements for joint projects in industrial development.

A conference of the representatives of the member states considered the order of rotation of the 13th judge of the European Court of Justice, and concluded that Spain should take the next place followed by Italy and the United Kingdom. Other ECJ appointments, including those of Sir Gordon Slynn as judge and Professor Francis Jacobs as advocate-general, were approved, and took effect from 6 October.

SCOTLAND

Local Government Finance

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will construct a table in the same form as figure F3 on page 106 of Cmnd. 9714, "Paying for Local Government", showing the relationship in Scotland of rateable values to net household income separately for (a) single pensioner households, (b) other single adult households, (c) two adult households and (d) three adult households.

Mr. Lang: Because of the sample size an analysis in this form for Scotland is not available.

Vacancies (London)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the latest available figures for his Department in the London pay area of the number of vacancies by grade and the proportion this is of the grade complement in London.

Mr. Rifkind: My Department has only a small number of posts in London. There is a vacancy for an administrative officer representing rather more than 10 per cent. of the posts in that grade in the Scottish Office in London.

Local Pay Additions

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide the latest figures for his Department for (a) numbers of staff in receipt of local pay additions, by grade, (b) location of those offices awarding local pay additions and (c) annual cost.

Mr. Rifkind: My Department has not introduced local pay additions.

Rating Reform

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list in the Official Report the number of complaints made against community charge registration officers in Scotland by persons who consider that the enforcement of registration officers' powers have been carried out in a manner which has caused offence or distress:

(2) if he will publish figures for the current cost of pursuing persons who are refusing or delaying to supply information required by registration officers drawing up the community charge register, showing the costs for Scotland broken down by local authority area.

Mr. Lang: This information is not available.

Personal Accident Insurance

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy in regard to the policy of education departments encouraging parents to take out extra personal accident insurance for their children; and what assessment has been made of the effects on those school pupils whose parents are unable to pay.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: All education authorities have public liability insurance cover for the extent of their own legal liability. It is for authorities to decide whether to advise parents to take out personal accident insurance to cover instances where no such liability arises; and it is entirely for parents to decide whether to take such advice. I understand that the premiums for an individual pupil are of the order of £1·50 to £2 per school term.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many of the unemployed people in Scotland who found new jobs in 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1988 are again unemployed.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 24 October 1988]: This information is not collected.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide figures on regional selective assistance for (a) the total number of applications received since 1 April, (b) the number of the above applications that have been processed and (c) the total amount of money paid out since 1 April.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 24 October 1988]: In the period 1 April to 30 September, 118 applications for regional selective assistance were received in Scotland. Of these, 88 have been fully processed. The remaining 30 are being processed. Total payments of regional selective assistance in Scotland in the same period have amounted to £14·4 million.

Regional Development Grant

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide figures on regional development grants for (a) the number of applications outstanding on 31 March, (b) the number of those outstanding applications that have subsequently been processed, (c) the number of those applications that are still outstanding and (d) the total amount of money paid out since 31 March in regional development grants to those applications.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 24 October 1988]: The figures requested for applications in Scotland under the revised regional development grant scheme are as follows:

	Number
Number of applications outstanding at 31 March	5,117
Number of these processed by 19 October	2,499
Number still outstanding at 19 October	2,618
	Payment £ million
Payment authorisations made by 19 October on these applications	5·1

HOME DEPARTMENT

Data Protection Act

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to extend the Data Protection Act to cover the handling of personal information by local authorities for the purpose of the collection of poll tax.

Mr. Renton: No. We do not consider that the community charge proposals raise issues which require amendment of the Data Protection Act.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to amend the Data Protection Act to prevent the disclosure by banks of confidential information about customers without the customers' knowledge.

Mr. Renton: None. Banking confidentiality is a matter of banking law and the question of disclosure is one that is currently being examined by the review of banking services law under the chairmanship of Professor Robert Jack. The Government expect the review committee to complete its report by the end of the year and will issue its response shortly thereafter.

Naturalisation and Registration

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time now being taken in dealing with an application for (a) naturalisation and (b) registration.

Mr. Renton: The average time taken to complete applications for naturalisation and registration in September 1988 was 21 months and 13 months respectively.

Untried Prisoners

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average number of days spent in custody by untried prisoners in 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The estimated average number of days spent in prison service custody by untried prisoners in 1987 was 56 for males and 45 for females. These figures will be published in table 2.1 of "Prison Statistics England and Wales 1987".

Women Police Officers

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the number of women police officers in the Lancashire constabulary area and the ranks held, showing the appropriate percentage in each case.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information based on force strength at 31 July is as follows:

Rank	Number	Percentage of strength in rank
Superintendent	1	2·4
Chief Inspector	1	1·4
Inspector	2	1·2
Sergeant	16	3·1
Constable	271	11·4
Total	291

Fresh Start

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why the middle-management grades 6 and 7 are staffed below the Fresh Start 87 levels at Blundeston prison, Suffolk.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 21 October, HMP Blundeston was staffed to complement in grade VI officers. There is a general shortage of grade VII officers, but one is shortly to be posted to the prison. More officers will become available for posting in spring 1989, after the next promotion board. Meanwhile, in common with all establishments, Blundeston is working to ensure that the best use is made of its staff resources under Fresh Start.

Bramshill Police College

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers from each force have attended command courses at Bramshill police college in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The police staff college at Bramshill runs four command courses—the senior command course, the intermediate command course, the junior command course and the overseas command course. The tables below give the figures requested.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers have been selected to attend the command courses at Bramshill police college in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Police officers attending the junior command course, the intermediate command course and the overseas command course at the police staff college are nominated by the chief officers of the forces in which they are serving. The numbers of officers selected to attend the senior command course are as follows:

	Number
1978	23
1979	25
1980	23

	Number
1981	23
1982	15
1983	14
1984	14
1985	20

The selection for the senior command course normally takes place in November, and the courses themselves run from April to September. Officers selected in one year do not invariably take their place on the following year's course, but may attend one in a later year. The figures given relate to the year of selection, not the year of eventual attendance.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the positions of those serving senior police officers and the forces from which they came who were involved in each of the last 10 years in the selection of officers chosen to attend command courses at the police college, Bramshill.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The senior police officers involved in the selection of officers to attend the senior command centre at the police staff college were:

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Chiropody Students

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the cost to public funds of students from (a) Northern Ireland and (b) the Irish Republic attending courses at the school of chiropody, New College, Durham.

Mr. Jackson: The cost to public funds of providing a place at New college, Durham, for a student from Northern Ireland or elsewhere in the United Kingdom to study ancillary health in the current academic year is approximately £2,600. The cost will be the same for a student from the Irish Republic or any other European Community country, provided he or she qualifies for reimbursement of tuition fees.

College Mergers

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what is his policy on increasing the unit of resource for a public sector college to match that of the university with which it is merging as a result of the Education Reform Bill;

(2) what is his policy, in the wake of the Education Reform Bill, on mergers between universities and public sector colleges;

(3) what is his policy on mergers between universities and small public sector colleges.

Mr. Jackson: There is no new policy on inter-sectoral mergers. Any case proposed by the institutions concerned would be considered on its merits. The Government would not apply any additional public funds in respect of such a merged institution which should, in any case, yield efficiency gains.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will set out in the Official Report a table showing teachers' salaries in 1978-79 and those in 1988-89 in real terms.

Mrs. Rumbold: The table gives the information requested for selected points on the teachers' pay scales:

Category[1]	April 1988 salary, cash prices £	April 1978 salary at constant (April 1988) prices[2] £	Real terms increase per cent.
Good Honours Graduate entrant	8,859	7,862	13
Scale 3—Incentive "B" Teacher	15,063	12,777	18
Scale 4—Incentive "D" Teacher	17,064	14,199	20
Senior—Incentive "E" Teacher	18,264	15,189	20
Deputy Head School Group 4	15,636	11,876	32
Head School Group 4	17,721	13,961	27
Deputy Head School Group 11	20,586	16,779	23
Head School Group 11	27,102	21,391	27

[1] All teachers, with the exception of good honours graduate entrants, are assumed to be at their salary maximum.
[2] Constant price figures are derived using the retail price index.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the total cost of teachers' salaries in 1978-79; what it is now; and what is the increase in real terms.

Mrs. Rumbold: In 1978-79, the total cost of salaries [1]of teachers in maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special schools in England was £2,710 million. The estimate of expenditure on teachers' salaries in the same sectors for 1988-89 is approximately £6,950 million. This represents an increase in real terms [2]of nearly 20 per cent.

1. The cost of salaries includes allowances and employers' contributions towards national insurance and superannuation.

2. The 1978-79 cash terms have been converted into 1988-89 real terms using the gross domestic product (market prices) deflator.

Teachers

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many teachers were employed in England and Wales in 1978-79 and in 1988-89.

Mr. Butcher: There were 440,800 teachers employed for service in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in England at January 1979. The corresponding figure for January 1988 (the latest date for which data are available) is 401,500. Comparable figures for Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Pupil Numbers

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children were being taught in England and Wales in 1978-79 and 1988-89.

Mr. Butcher: Information for the academic year 1988-89 is not yet available. The total number of pupils on roll in all maintained and non-maintained schools in England in January 1979 and January 1988 were 9·094 million and 7·610 million respectively. Information for Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Teacher Training

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list, by each initial training institute, the number and percentage of students on initial teacher training courses who had discontinued their training by the end of (a) the first year, and (b) the second year, in 1978 and 1987, together with the number and percentage at each institute in these years who completed the course but failed their final examinations.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information in the form requested is not collected centrally. The patterns of wastage and other movements within initial teacher training are complex; some students repeat years of their course while others may join courses part way through. The Department calculates that on average about 25 per cent. of those who enter an undergraduate course of initial teacher training do not complete that course successfully, for whatever reason.

Ecology Research

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, during his recent visit to the Soviet Union, he concluded any agreement with the Soviet Academy of Sciences to develop joint ecology research programmes.

Mr. Jackson: During my right hon. Friend's visit to the Academy of Sciences in Moscow, he discussed possible collaboration in ecology research with the deputy director, Dr. Frolov. The Government believe it may be possible to intensify working relationships between USSR and United Kingdom institutions in this area, and Dr. Frolov undertook to provide a list of institutions with whom links could be developed. We would be happy to continue, and enhance, scientific collaboration with the USSR provided it is practical, effective, well directed and with clear objectives.

Greenhouse Effect

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress has been made in the research study conducted by the Natural Environment Research Council Plymouth marine laboratory into the use of the phytoplankton coccolithophores to mitigate the greenhouse effect in the atmosphere.

Mr. Jackson: Progress has been made on determining from satellite images the distribution and abundance of coccolithophores. Further studies are planned on their importance in removing carbon dioxide from the atmosphere. Research at the Plymouth marine laboratory is not specifically directed at using coccolithophores to influence the global climate.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he has taken to give schools which are subject to reorganisation proposals under sections 12 and 13 of the Education Act 1980 an opportunity to apply for grant-maintained status.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: On 4 August this year, I determined under section 73 of the Education Act 1988 that all section 12 and 13 proposals in respect of schools eligible for grant-maintained status which were undecided at that date were suspended until 30 November. On 12 October I made a similar determination in respect of section 12 and 13 proposals published in the period 4 August to 30 September 1988. These determinations apply both to proposals which fall to me to decide and those determinable by local education authorities.

Youth Service

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what the National Advisory Council for the Youth Service has achieved over its last three-year term; what arrangements he intends to make for future consultation with the youth service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I appointed the National Advisory Council for the Youth Service in 1985 to serve for three years. The council's term comes to an end in December this year, having completed a body of useful work, up-dating and taking forward that of the previous national committee. Building on this work, new arrangements will be introduced next year for periodic consultations between Ministers and the youth service in England about selected major issues of common concern. These will take the form of national conferences to which representatives from local authorities and from national voluntary youth organisations will be invited. The detailed arrangements will be announced early next year.

The existing arrangements in Wales whereby representatives of the statutory and voluntary sectors have regular meetings with the Welsh Office will continue and will build on the work of the council.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Training Scheme

13. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received from Bristol city council on the employment training scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: We have received no representations from Bristol city council. Its decision not to move forward into employment training is regrettable, but employment training is nevertheless operating fully in Bristol, so the job prospects of unemployed people in Bristol will not be harmed by the city council's negative attitude.

19. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on implementation of the employment training scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: Employment training got off to a good start on 5 September. More than 1,000 training managers and over 150 training agents are now in operation, and there has already been tremendous interest amongst unemployed people. So far more than 133,000 people have been referred to training agents and 60,000 people have started their training with training managers.

43. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently participating in employment training.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has received no representations from Liverpool city council. My right hon. Skill Shortages (London)

20. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action his Department is taking to tackle skill shortages in south and east London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The continuing strength of the economy is leading to increasing demand for skills. It is primarily the responsibility of employers to meet their needs. The Government have increased its investment in training massively since 1979 both generally and in areas like the south and east of London. In January this year simplified administrative procedures for loans up to £15,000 were introduced. As part of the Action for Cities initiative an increase in the guarantee from 70 to 85 per cent. was introduced in June 1988 for businesses based in, or moving into, inner cities task force areas. Partly as a result of these measures, the rate of applications has doubled to nearly 200 a month by comparison with the same period in 1987.

Mr. Lee: We do not have precise information for 1987. However, I would expect the total to be broadly similar to the 29 million enquiries recorded in 1985-86, the last year for which comprehensive information is available.

Job Vacancies

29. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the level of job vacancies in the United Kingdom.

The service continues to increase its links with, and support for, other agencies in the small firms support network. Its database of national information is now available to agencies and others for their own use in advising clients.

The service has opened six new inner city offices and is appointing inner city business advisers, to promote self-employment and small business development in inner city areas. In December 1987, as part of a European Commission initiative, the service opened a centre for European business information.

Further details of the service's achievements are contained in the small firms service 1987-88 annual report, which was circulated to all hon. Members and placed in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Lee: The completion of the Channel tunnel in 1993 represents a major opportunity for the tourism industry in Great Britain. Estimates suggest that about 15 million people will use the tunnel in its first year of operation. It is important that the United Kingdom tourism industry now considers what needs to be done to ensure that the full potential of the tunnel to bring visitors to Britain is realised.

Hourly Rates

37. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average hourly rate of (a) part-time and (b) full-time workers.

85. Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average hourly rate of (a) part-time and (b) full-time workers.

Mr. Lee: Average gross hourly earnings excluding overtime in April 1988 were £3·25 for part-time employees and £5·26 for full-time employees. These data relate to employees on adult rates whose pay was not affected by absence.

Business Women (Cornwall)

38. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to receive the study funded by the Training Commission on problems facing women in business in Cornwall.

Mr. Cope: This project should be completed by the end of December 1988.

Small Businesses (Loans)

39. Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to discuss with the European Investment Bank global loans to small business; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: European Investment Bank loans are generally available to small and medium-sized enterprises only through financial intermediaries such as the clearing banks. It is for the banks to decide whether there is advantage in borrowing global loans from the EIB to lend on to small firms.

Industrial Tourism

42. Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what further plans he has to promote industrial tourism; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I am pleased to say that the CBI-Department of Employment-English tourist board conference on industrial tourism which I attended on 15 September aroused considerable interest. I hope that, as a result, many more companies will seriously consider opening their doors to more visitors; and I shall continue to take every opportunity to highlight the benefits that this can bring.

84. Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the CBI-ETB industrial tourism conference.

Mr. Lee: The conference held on 15 September attracted almost 200 delegates, representing some 140 public and private sector organisations. It received considerable publicity and has, I am certain, resulted in raising the awareness of the advantages to companies of opening their doors to visitors. The English tourist board is compiling a database of firms involved in industrial tourism as part of future marketing initiatives.

Hotel and Catering (Training)

44. Mr. Bevan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what further plans he has to promote training opportunities in the hotel and catering trade; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The hotel and catering training board has the leading role in promoting training provision in the industry, particularly through its 8,000-place YTS managing agency and the development of Caterbase, a modular testing and certification system for all occupations in the sector. I also welcome the board's recent involvment in employment training, which has a significant contribution to make to the supply of skilled workers in a growing industry.

West Midlands

46. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the level of unemployment in the west midlands.

Mr. Lee: In September 1988 seasonally adjusted unemployment excluding school leavers in the west midlands was 224,700, compared with 284,200 in September 1987, a fall of 59,000 or 20·9 per cent. over the last 12 months. The September 1988 figure includes some temporary over recording due to the postal strike.

Earnings

52. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the increase in earnings since 1979 of the highest paid and lowest paid 10 per cent. of the work force.

119. Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the increase in earnings since 1979 of the highest paid and lowest paid 10 per cent. of the work force.

132. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the increase in earnings since 1979 of the highest paid and lowest paid 10 per cent. of the work force.

Mr. Lee: Between April 1979 and April 1988 the highest decile of the gross weekly earnings distribution for full-time adult employees increased by 164 per cent. for males and by 178 per cent. for females. Over the same period the lowest decile increased by 113 per cent. for males and 125 per cent. for females.

88. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of the adult work force earn less than £3·30 per hour.

130. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of the adult work force earn less than £3·30 per hour.

Mr. Lee: It is estimated from the new earnings survey that about 30 per cent. of the adult work force, including both full-time and part-time employees, earned less than £3·30 per hour in April 1988.

British Venture Capital Association

56. Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet the chairman of the British Venture Capital Association to discuss the expansion of small businesses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: I have accepted an invitation from Mr. John Nash, chairman of the British Venture Capital Association to open the British Venture Capital Association financial forum on 1 December.

Enterprise Allowance

58. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement on the enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Cope: Since the enterprise allowance scheme began in 1982 a total of 384,000 unemployed people have been helped to start their own businesses. These businesses have also created jobs for others: for every 100 businesses operating after three years, an additional 114 jobs have been created.

Equal Pay

59. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to introduce further changes in the field of equal pay legislation.

Mr. Nicholls: Certain changes to this legislation will be necessary to implement our obligations under the EC directive on equal treatment in occupational social security schemes. The proposed changes were set out in a consultation document issued by the Department of Social Security on 22 July 1988.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will continue to keep the working of the Equal Pay Act under review.

European Single Market

61. Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what further plans he has to promote the completion of the European single market in 1992 to small firms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The Government's "Europe Open For Business" campaign, is aimed at small and large firms. This Department, with the Department of Trade and Industry which is responsible for the overall campaign, is in contact with organisations representing small firms about ways of bringing the importance of the single market to their attention. We are also considering ways of extending the training available to cover this issue. Ministers and officials from both Departments have addressed many conferences about the importance for small and larger firms of the completion of the single market.

I have recently agreed that the contract with the European Commission for the London Centre for European Business Information should be renewed. The centre provides information and advice to small firms on developments and opportunities in the European Community particularly in relation to the completion of the single market.

78. Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give an estimate of the number of new jobs likely to be created on completion of the single European market in 1992.

Mr. Cope: The freeing of trade and the increased competitiveness that will result from the single European market will generate economic growth which will benefit the economy of the Community including that of the United Kingdom. It is extremely difficult to translate this into numbers of new jobs.

The Cecchini report on the likely impact of the single market suggested that 1·25 to 2·25 million jobs might be created in the Community as a whole after 1992.

The numbers of extra jobs in the United Kingdom will depend on the response of our industry and commerce to the opportunities that the single market will provide for business in the community and in the rest of the world.

School Leavers

79. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many school leavers seeking jobs there will be in 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993, 1994 and 1995; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Projected numbers of school leavers in Great Britain available for employment for academic years from 1989-90 to 1994-95 are as follows:

Academic year of leaving school (ending August 31)	Projected number of school leavers in Great Britain available for employment[1] (thousands)
1989-90	480
1990-91	460
1991-92	440
1992-93	420
1993-94	440
1994-95	450

[1] Rounded to the nearest 10,000.

Mental Health Services

68. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will meet the national officer of MIND to discuss the impact of the new employment training scheme upon community-based mental health services.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no present plans to meet representatives of MIND, but would be happy to consider doing so if asked.

Tourism (Inner Cities)

70. Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what his Department has done to promote tourism in the inner cities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The network of city action teams (CATS) have supported a significant number of initiatives and projects designed to develop inner city tourism potential. In addition my Department's regional enterprise units, working with the English tourist board and the regional tourist boards, have continued to give priority to inner city areas in promoting and developing tourism in this country.

Unemployment Benefit Offices

71. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people consulted the unemployment benefit offices in 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: No records are kept for the number of people who consult unempoloyment benefit offices; however during 1987 there were a total of 4,777,575 claims made to unemployment benefit.

Restart

74. Mr. Neale: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of the restart interview programme.

Mr. Lee: Since July 1986 almost 4·5 million interviews have been carried out under the restart programme, of which just under 90 per cent. have resulted in an offer of positive help being made.

The restart programme now offers interviews at six-monthly intervals to everyone who has been out of work for six months or more. In addition, certain clients are now offered follow-up interviews to discuss the outcome of their main interviews in order to provide further guidance and support.

From September 1988, the programme is delivering the Government's guarantee to people aged between 18-24 who have been unemployed for between six and 12 months, of the offer of a place on employment training, in a jobclub or on the enterprise allowance scheme.

77. Mr. Hurt: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many long-term unemployed have been offered help under the restart programme to date.

Mr. Lee: Since 1 July 1986, almost 4·5 million interviews have taken place under the restart programme, of which just under 90 per cent. have resulted in an offer of postive help being made. There is no record of the actual number of individuals interviewed.

Youth Training Scheme

75. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many 16 to 18-year-olds are undertaking training on the youth training scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: At the end of September 435,500 young people were in training on the youth training scheme, of whom only a small number (about 1·4 per cent.) were aged 19 or over. I am delighted that so many young people are taking the opportunity to acquire through YTS the skills they will need for their future working lives.

91. Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people are currently training on the two-year YTS.

Mr. Cope: At the end of September 1988, YTS records show 435,500 young people in training on YTS. Of these 411,900 were on a two-year training programme and 23,600 were on a one-year training programme.

117. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement on the progress of two-year YTS.

Mr. Cope: Since the launch of two-year YTS in 1986, the programme has become firmly established as the normal route from school to work for 16-year-olds and some 17-year-olds in much of the country. The attractiveness of the programme to young people is demonstrated by the fact that the two millionth trainee will enter YTS by the end of October 1988. The demographic drop in the numbers of young people and employer's growing demands for higher level skills underline the vital role which YTS should play in securing a well-trained and flexible work force.

Women Workers

89. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of part-time workers are women; and what proportion have statutory maternity rights, at the latest available date.

Mr. Nicholls: Estimates from the 1987 labour force survey show that in spring 1987, a total of 86·3 per cent. of part-time workers were women, of whom 48·4 per cent. met the qualifying conditions for the right to return to work after maternity absence and protection against dismissal because of pregnancy. The right not to be unreasonably refused time off work for ante-natal care is available equally to part-time and full-time employees, irrespective of length of service and hours worked.

Temporary Work

92. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of the work force were in temporary, seasonal or casual work (a) in 1979 and (b) at the latest available date.

Mr. Lee: It is estimated from the Labour Force Survey that 3·6 per cent. of the economically active in Great Britain were in seasonal, temporary or casual jobs in spring 1983 (the earliest year for which data is available). An equivalent figure for the spring of 1987 was 4 per cent.

Lost Days

94. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many days were lost in industrial disputes (a) in the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available and (b) in 1978.

Mr. Lee: The number of working days lost through stoppages of work due to industrial disputes is provisionally estimated at 2,591,000 for the 12-month period ending August 1988. In 1978, 9,405,000 working days were lost.

Job Creation

98. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate the number of new jobs created in the service industries in the last 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Lee: There are no figures for job gains and job losses. Between June 1987 and June 1988, the latest date for which figures are available, there was a net increase of 446,000 in the numbers of employees in employment and self-employed people in the service industries of Great Britain. The figures have been adjusted for the effects of seasonal variations.

100. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of the new jobs created since 1980 has been (a) part-time, and (b) full-time.

114. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of the new jobs created since 1980 have been (a) part-time and (b) full-time.

116. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of the new jobs created since 1980 has been (a) part-time and (b) full-time.

Mr. Lee: There are no figures for job gains and job losses. Between June 1980 and June 1988, the latest date for which figures are available, there was a net increase of 469,000 in the size of the workforce in employment in Great Britain. This was attributable to a net increase of 1,239,000 in part-time employment (of which 337,000 were participants on work-related Government training programmes), offset by a net decrease of 824,000 in full-time employment.

The work force in employment is the sum of employees in employment, the self-employed, members of HM forces and participants in work-related Government training programmes.

Enterprise Agencies

99. Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement on the number of enterprise agencies operating in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Cope: There are currently 425 local enterprise agencies operating throughout the United Kingdom. Of these, 385 are approved under the terms of the Finance Act 1982, which allows business sector sponsors tax relief on their contributions to such bodies.

Skill Shortages

102. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action his Department is taking to deal with skill shortages in the south-east of England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The continuing strength of the economy is leading to increasing demand for skills. But it is primarily the responsibility of employers to meet their skill needs. The Government has increased their investment in training massively since 1979, particularly for young people with YTS and for the unemployed with employment training.

National Dock Labour Scheme

107. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet representatives of the National Association of Port Employers to discuss the future of the national dock labour scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has no present plans for such a meeting.

Part-time Work

109. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to implement the 1982 European Economic Community draft directive on part-time work.

Mr. Nicholls: No.

School Compacts

112. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement on school compacts.

Mr. Cope: The number and quality of applications for development funding from potential compact partners in the urban programme areas has exceeded initial expectations. The Government therefore announced on 17 August that 30 partnerships, double the number originally planned, would receive up to £50,000 each to develop their compact proposals. Bids for full operational funding of up to £100,000 a year for four years will be submitted by these partnerships in early 1989.

Inner Cities

115. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to review the policies of Her Majesty's Government to reduce the level of unemployment in the inner cities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The Government's Action for Cities programme aims to develop a climate in which businesses can flourish and new jobs can be created. It includes a wide range of employment, training and enterprise measures provided by this Department. The new employment training programme helps unemployed people obtain the skills they need to get jobs; the employment service, through its network of over 500 inner city offices and nearly 500 inner city jobclubs, helps unemployed people find jobs; the enterprise allowance scheme, helps unemployed people start a business. The small firms service is opening new offices and engaging new counsellors to serve the inner cities. The measures we are taking to achieve these aims are constantly under review to ensure that they bring maximum benefit to inner city residents.

Single Union Agreements

120. Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what recent representations he has received about single union agreements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has received no such representations. The Government's view is that single union agreements can have a valuable part to play in improving future industrial relations. It is for the parties directly concerned to decide what arrangements best suit their own circumstances.

European Community Employment Ministers

121. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he will next meet the European Community Employment Ministers; what he expects to be discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The next formal meeting of the Council of Employment Ministers will be on 16 December. The agenda has not yet been decided; but we will be continuing our efforts to ensure that job creation and training remain the key issues.

TRANSPORT

Vacancies (London)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the latest available figures for his Department in the London pay area of the number of vacancies by grade and the proportion this is of the grade complement in London.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This information is not kept in the form requested and it would be disproportionately costly to collect it.

Vale of Rheidd Railway

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the price that Brecon Mountain Railway Ltd. proposes to pay British Rail upon its acquisition of the Vale of Rheidd railway.

Mr. Portillo: This information is commercially confidential.

Merchant Shipping

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the United Kingdom's balance of payments in merchant shipping since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the publication "United Kingdom Balance of Payments 1988 Edition—the CSO Pink Book" published by HMSO for the Government Statistical Service, a copy of which is in the Library.

Table 3.3 is the sea transport account.

Motorways

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much was spent in constant 1983-84 prices on motorway construction in (a) 1985-86, (b) 1986-87 and (c) 1987-88; and what will be provisional spending for 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Expenditure this year on national roads as a whole is more than £1 billion for the first time. The balance of the road programme has changed in recent years.

The amount spent on new motorway construction and capital maintenance in each of the last three years, adjusted to 1983-84 prices, is as follows:

	£ million
1985-86	338
1986-87	267

Provisional spending for 1988-89, also at 1983-84 prices, is £244 million.

The change in spend on motorways reflects the completion of the M25 and the priority given to other types of trunk road improvements, in particular to the bypass programme which brings environmental relief, reduces delay to travellers and freight, and cuts casualties.

Motor-cycle Couriers (Accidents)

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give figures for each year for the last five years, of how many accidents have been reported involving motor-cycle couriers who have not passed their driving test.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information collected by the Department on road injury accidents does not record whether the rider of a motor cycle was a courier or whether the rider had passed the driving test.

The number of accidents involving motor cycles in 1987 was 46,059. In 3 per cent. of these, the motor cycle was recorded as having L plates. Similar figures for 1983 were 64,175 accidents, in 7 per cent. of which the presence of L plates was recorded.

The fact that a vehicle has L plates attached does not always necessarily mean the rider is a learner. Also, the non-recording of L plates does not mean the rider has passed the test.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects work to start on the construction of the east London river crossing; and when the road is expected to be open for use.

Mr. Channon: I hope it will be possible to start construction in 1991 and open the road in 1994.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the most recent estimate of the cost of the east London river crossing, broken down between (a) property acquisition, (b) road construction, (c) bridge building and (d) other structures.

Mr. Channon: The estimated costs at average 1984 prices, as presented at the inquiries, are:

	£ million
1. Land and property acquisition	25·2
2. Road construction	38·4
3. Thames bridge	56·0
4. Other structures	48·7

The figures exclude site preparation and supervision, estimated at £14·7 million.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the additional cost of building the east London river crossing in cut and cover through Oxleas Wood as recommended by the inspector who conducted the public inquiry into the scheme.

Mr. Channon: I am satisfied that the additional cost would be at least the £10 million estimated by the inspector.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the number of families needing alternative rented housing as a result of the construction of the east London river crossing; and who will be responsible for providing the necessary accommodation.

Mr. Channon: At present it is estimated that some 70 households will have to be rehoused. The responsibility for rehousing the majority will lie with the London borough of Greenwich.

Plutonium (Air Transport)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will seek to obtain (a) a transcript and (b) a video cassette for his departmental library of the Thames Television "This Week" programme on the dangers of air transport of plutonium, broadcast on 29 September.

Mr. Portillo: This has been done.

Airport Property (Transfer)

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to ensure that property at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted proposed to be transferred by British Airports Authority plc to Lynton plc for development on a commercial basis will not be developed in such a way as to limit his options for increasing passenger capacity at these airports.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. Development of land surplus to operational requirements is primarily a matter for the airport operator.

European Clearway (Fire)

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he ordered an investigation into the fire on the ferry European Clearway; under what regulation it is being conducted; when he expects to receive the report; and if he will make it publicly available.

Mr. Portillo: We ordered an investigation into this accident on 18 July 1988. One of the Department's marine surveyors was appointed under section 728 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1894 to conduct the investigation, which is now complete. We are now considering the findings. But since there may be a question of prosecution, it would not be proper to comment on the content of the report at this stage.

Drink-driving Offences

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of the number of drink-driving offences committed in each of the areas of the United Kingdom for each of the past 36 months.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 25 July 1988]: I have been asked to reply.

The available information relates to convictions for drink-driving offences, which for England and Wales is published annually, by police force area, in "Offences Relating to Motor Vehicles, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables", at table 16 of the issue for 1986, copies of which are in the Library. Information is not collected centrally on the date on which the offences occurred and a breakdown of these figures by month of court appearance would involve disproportionate cost. Information for 1987 will be published later this year.

I understand from my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland that the corresponding information on convictions in Scotland and Northern Ireland is as shown in the following table.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 26 October 1988

PRIME MINISTER

European Community and National Parliaments

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the nature of the development of the Community in relation to the powers of national Parliaments; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No. I am satisfied with the procedure for ensuring that the views of this House are taken into account in the formulation of Her Majesty's Government's policy on Community measures.

NATO (Spanish Airbase Facilities)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if, during her visit to Spain in September, she discussed with the Spanish Prime Minister the implications for the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation of Spain's withdrawal of airbase facilities for F-111 aircraft of the United States air force.

The Prime Minister: No.

Southern Africa

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to launch any initiatives on economic development and political stabilisation for Southern Africa.

The Prime Minister: Our objective remains the replacement of apartheid by a non-racial, representative system of government in South Africa. We take every opportunity to encourage progress in that direction. We shall also continue our programme of practical assistance to black South Africans.

Australia (Visit)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if, during her visit to Australia in August, she discussed with members of the Australian Government and Parliament the prospects for nuclear co-operation in the fields of uranium provision, uranium processing, nuclear waste disposal and nuclear materials transport.

The Prime Minister: No.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if, during her visit to Australia in August, she discussed with Ministers of the Australian Government outstanding compensation claims from (a) British and Australian service men and (b) Aboriginal peoples following radiation fallout from British atmospheric atomic weapons tests on Australian territories in the 1950s.

The Prime Minister: No.

Nuclear Emergencies (Planning)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received any communication during the summer recess from the County Emergency Planning Officers' Society requesting the establishment of a permanent advisory committee chaired by the Cabinet Office to co-ordinate the development of planning for nuclear emergencies.

The Prime Minister: As far as I am aware no such communication has been received.

Environment and Development

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister whether Her Majesty's Government have any further plans to take international initiatives on environmental and development issues following the response to the World Commission on Environment and Development in the report "Our Common Future" provided in July.

The Prime Minister: As I said in my foreword to the Government's response, all relevant Departments of State have been invited to examine their policies in the light of the recommendations of the World Commission's report. The Government are also considering what further environmental initiatives should be taken on a wider, international basis.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister what information she has received from the United States Government on conclusions reached at the review conference of the anti-ballistic missile (ABM) treaty of 1972, which began on 24 August in Geneva between the United States of America and Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, in relation to agreements reached in Washington DC in December 1984, at her meeting with the United States President on the Anglo-American interpretation of development of the strategic defence initiative in the context of existing treaties.

The Prime Minister: The United States Administration has given a full briefing to its NATO Allies on the results of the ABM treaty review. The meeting concentrated on issues of compliance with the ABM treaty, notably the Soviet large phased-array radar at Krasnoyarsk on which the Soviet Union did not resolve United States concerns. The four points that I agreed with President Reagan at Camp David in December 1984 did not bear directly on issues raised at the review.

European Community

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list the occasions she has attended the European Community summit since 1979; and on how many of these occasions she has been accompanied by the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Advertising Contracts

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if she will publish a list of all advertising contracts awarded by the Government in the years 1986, 1987 and 1988, indicating (a) whom the contract was awarded to, (b) in which media the advertising appeared and (c) the value of each contract;

The Prime Minister: Information on publicity, including advertising, is not held centrally except where the expenditure incurred was through the Central Office of Information and can be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Details of departmental expenditure on publicity for the financial years 1979-80 to 1987-88 were supplied by Ministers in response to questions from the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) and published in the Official Report November-December 1986, July 1987 and December 1987-January 1988.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list all advertising campaigns commissioned by the Government since 1980 which have involved, in whole or in part, the distribution of unsolicited material to the public.

The Prime Minister: Information on publicity, including advertising is not held centrally, except where the expenditure incurred was through the Central Office of Information.

The advertising campaigns carried out by COI on behalf of other Government Departments since 1980 which have involved, in whole or in part, the distribution of unsolicited material to the public are as follows:

SOCIAL SECURITY

Residential Homes

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has on the extent to which the levels of charges in private residential and nursing homes require current Departments of Health and Social Security allowances to be topped up by social services departments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Local authorities are not required to top up income support payments for people in independent residential care homes. Where the charge for someone in a home exceeds the amount of the appropriate income support limit for help with fees, local authorities have discretionary powers to top up the balance of the charge for people under pension age. These powers do not extend to people in nursing homes. Information is not therefore available in the form requested.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a breakdown by sex and standard age cohorts of recipients of invalidity benefit at the last date for which figures are available.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a breakdown by sex and standard age cohorts of recipients of invalid care allowance at the last date for which figures are available.

Housing Benefit

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list in the Official Report the number of applicants, in each of the Scottish local authority housing areas, who have received payments from the transitional payments unit, Glasgow; and what is the average weekly payment which is to be made to those applicants.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested could be obtained only by a special computer run which would be very lengthy and would divert machine resources from the top priority task of processing payments. In any event the data change daily and at this stage would not provide a comprehensive picture. In due course, once the majority of payments have been made, we will publish national figures showing a breakdown of the numbers of payments made to people in each local authority area.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) Asian bilingual counter staff are employed and (b) staff Asian language interpreters are available, at local offices of his Department in Bradford.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Five Asian bilingual staff are currently employed as counter staff in the Department's local offices in Bradford, and two full time and one part-time Asian language interpreters are available in the Department's local offices in Bradford.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what training in welfare rights advice staff engaged in answering personal inquiries in local offices of his Department in Bradford possess; and what proportion of such staff are bilingual in an Asian language.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: All benefits staff in the Department's local offices receive a minimum of 13 weeks training before being allowed to deal with personal inquiries from members of the public.

In the Bradford offices, 12 per cent. of staff who regularly deal with personal inquiries are bilingual in an Asian language.

Social Security Appeals

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many staff in local offices of his Department in Bradford are available to represent claimants at appeals.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Department does not represent claimants at social security appeal tribunal hearings. It is normal for claimants to arrange their own representation.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many appeals have been upheld in Bradford since the social security changes introduced last April; and in how many successful appeals the claimant was represented.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The office of the president of social security appeal tribunals advises that the latest available administrative statistics for the north-eastern region, which covers the Bradford area, show that for the period 5 April 1988 to 20 September 1988, 17,751 appeals were heard, of which 4,383, or 24·7 per cent., were decided in the claimants' favour.

Information on the number of successful appeals where the claimant was represented is not readily available for the period in question, and could be extracted only at disproportionate cost.

Contingency Arrangements (Bradford)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether any contingency arrangements are being made to assist people who became voluntarily or compulsorily redundant from Bradford council.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Department has well established contingency plans for dealing with large numbers of claims to benefit. These will be introduced quickly if the need arises.

Family Credit

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he is able to provide an estimate of the latest figure of the number of people claiming family credit, broken down into (i) two-parent and one-parent families, (ii) regions and (iii) income bands.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply on 25 October to my right hon. Friend the Member for Chesham and Amersham (Sir I. Gilmour). A breakdown of the figures in the way requested is not available.

Benefits (Take-up)

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects the take-up figures of means-tested benefits from the family expenditure survey 1985 to be available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We expect to publish 1985 take-up estimates for the main income-related benefits around the end of the year.

Child Benefit

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much it costs to raise child benefit for every 10p increase in gross and net terms.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The annual cost of raising child benefit by 10p per week from April 1989 would be £63 million gross and about £45 million net.

Child Abuse

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Attorney-General if he will take steps to ensure that when a court establishes during wardship or child care hearings that a child has been abused, the child's alleged abuser will be subsequently prosecuted and denied access to the abused child and other children in the family.

The Attorney-General: In all wardship and child care hearings the best interests of the child or children shall be the paramount concern, and the courts will consider carefully in each case whether the child's abuser should be permitted to have access to the child or children. The Crown Prosecution Service will, when considering a possible prosecution, give careful consideration to the findings of any court that a child has been abused.

Matrimonial Proceedings

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General whether, in the light of the case of Board v Checkland (1987) 17 Family Law 236, he will introduce legislation to validate orders made in matrimonial proceedings where in error the order for a lump sum or transfer of property pre-dates the date of the decree nisi.

The Attorney-General: No. The provisions of section 23 of the Matrimonial Causes Act 1973 are satisfactory and necessary. The invalidity of the order in the case of Board v Checkland was the result of a failure to comply with those provisions.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Table Office (Computer)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Lord President of the Council what further progress has been made in purchasing a computer to assist with the processing of early-day motions and questions in the Table Office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: The computer facilities were installed during the summer recess and are now being run in. It is hoped that they will be in full operation for early-day motions on the first day of next Session.

Parliamentary Papers

Mr. Amess: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will seek to ensure that embargoed Parliamentary Papers are made available in the Norman Shaw North Issue Office at the same time as in the basement Vote Office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: No. It is a long-standing custom of this House that embargoed documents remain in the custody of the Deliverer of the Vote in the Main Vote Office until the time specified for release by the Minister responsible for the document's production, so as to ensure that such documents receive the secure handling they require.

Documents which are not embargoed but have a special release time on them are normally available simultaneously in both the Norman Shaw North and the Main Vote Office.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will seek to ensure that Her Majesty's Stationery Office deliver Parliamentary Papers direct to the Norman Shaw North Issue Office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: A direct delivery service from Her Majesty's Stationery Office to Norman Shaw North has been instituted from 19 October 1988.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Lord President of the Council what was the cost of suppiying the Norman Shaw North Issue Office with Parliamentary Papers in 1987 and to date; and how this compares with each year since 1979.

Mr. Wakeham: No breakdown of costs for individual issue points in the Vote Office is available.

The total cost of providing stationery and printing supplies to the House is contained in the Supply Estimates Class XIX Vote 6.

Procedure Committee

Mr. Amess: To ask the Lord President of the Council when he expects to reply to the Second Report from the Procedure Committee on the Use of Time on the Floor of the House (HC 350 1986-87); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: This report covered a wide range of important recommendations dealing with many complex aspects of our procedures for primary and delegated legislation. I have held a number of discussions through the usual channels and with individual hon. Members with the aim of arriving at as broad a measure of agreement as possible about the best way ahead. I hope that these can soon be concluded.

Private Members' Bills

Mr. Amess: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will move to refer the procedure for private Members' Bills to the Select Committee on Procedure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: The procedure for private Members' Bills is already within the terms of reference of the Select Committee on Procedure.

Norman Shaw North

Mr. Amess: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, as representing the House of Commons

Commission, if he will list, by grade, the total number of officials currently employed in the Norman Shaw North Issue Office; and how this compares with each year since 1979.

Mr. Beith: The total number of permanent staff of the Norman Shaw North Issue Office is one Vote Office Assistant and one Senior Office Clerk. This number has remained the same since 1979.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much public money has been earmarked over the next three years for city technology colleges.

Mrs. Rumbold: Total planned public expenditure including recurrent and capital grant is £86 million over the three financial years 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many officers within his Department have been reserved to deal with city technology colleges.

Mrs. Rumbold: There are currently 14 officials in Schools Branch, 4 working on the city technology programme. Of those, six have other responsibilities unconnected with CTCs. Additionally eight officials in architects and buildings branch undertake some work on the design and refurbishment of buildings for CTCs.

Student Unions

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress of his Department's review of student union membership.

Mr. Jackson: As foreshadowed in my reply of 28 July to my hon. Friend at column 405, a questionnaire was issued to 70 institutions on 29 July. Questionnaires are due for return by 31 October.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations his Department has received concerning membership of student unions; how many supported abolition of automatic membership; how many were opposed; and what percentage the latter is of the former.

Mr. Jackson: Since the end of July we have received seven letters from hon. Members and members of the public about membership of local unions and a further two letters which touched on membership of the National Union of Students. Of the former two (29 per cent.) supported and five (71 per cent.) opposed automatic membership while of the latter one (50 per cent.) supported and one (50 per cent.) opposed current arrangements for NUS membership.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last discussed membership of student unions with the National Union of Students; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has not discussed the matter recently with the NUS but I did so on 29 February.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will publish in the Official Report a list of individuals and organisations who gave oral evidence to his review of membership of student unions; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many student unions submitted (a) oral evidence and (b) written evidence to his Department's review on student unions; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will place in the Library the evidence submitted to his Department's review on student unions if the author consents to it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: We have received a small number of contributions from individuals and one non-union organisation which may be regarded as prompted by the invitation to submit views made by my right hon. Friend in his reply of 18 April to my hon. Friend the Member for Thurrock (Mr. Janman). I can see no reason to distinguish these from the more general representations which we continue to receive and which, in my reply of 10 June to my hon. Friend (c. 690-91), I said I did not consider it appropriate to make public.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects the results of his review on student unions will be announced; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: We shall analyse responses to the questionnaire issued on 29 July when these are received. Thereafter, as indicated by my right hon. Friend in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Thurrock (Mr. Janman) on 18 April at column 292, we shall reach conclusions on the best action to take and consult all concerned about those conclusions. I cannot at present predict how long this will take.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information his Department has provided to members of the public about his review of student unions; how many members of the public have requested information about his proposed review of student unions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My Department issued press notices when we announced our intention to conduct a survey on 18 April and when the questionnaire was sent to institutions on 29 July. In addition to inquiries from a small number of individuals who have subsequently submitted views, we have received four letters requesting information about our survey.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many petitions his Department has received from individuals and organisations concerning membership of student unions; how many supported abolition of automatic membership and how many were opposed; and what percentage the latter is of the former.

Mr. Jackson: No petitions have been submitted but since the general election we have received four letters written on behalf of a group. Of those one (25 per cent.) was opposed to and three (75 per cent.) supported the current arrangements for NUS membership.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy to send a copy of his Department's questionnaire on student membership to the National Secretary of the National Union of Students; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: A copy was sent to the National Union of Students on 29 July when it was issued.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations his Department has received suggesting (a) increasing and (b) limiting the amount paid to the National Union of Students; what proportional relationship the latter bears to the former; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: This information is not readily available.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his Department's estimate of the current total student membership of the National Union of Students, and in each of the last five years.

Mr. Jackson: The NUS is a confederation of affiliated local student unions. Members of local unions are not directly members of the NUS.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) why he considers it inappropriate to list those organisations which have made representations to his Department concerning his review of student unions; and if he will make a statement;

(2) why he considers it inappropriate to place in the Library details of representations he has received concerning automatic membership of student unions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I consider it inappropriate because the correspondence was not submitted in the expectation that it would be made public.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assistance he has requested from outside bodies during his Department's review of student unions; if he will list those concerned and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Before issuing the questionnaire on 29 July my right hon. Friend arranged for it to be shown to the Chairmen of the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals and of the Committee of Directors of Polytechnics.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions he has held with institutions of higher and further education concerning automatic student union membership and his Department's review of student unions; which institutions expressed support for abolition of automatic membership of student unions; which were opposed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has held no such discussions with institutions.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many institutions of higher and further education have expressed their (a) support of or (b) opposition to automatic membership of student unions, expressing the latter as a proportion of the former.

Mr. Jackson: None.

Student Finance

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if his Department proposes any new initiatives on student loans; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he now expects to announce the results of his review on student finance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The Government are considering the introduction of top-up loans for student maintenance. They will publish their proposals for the future of student support in due course.

Vandalism and Arson

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice or guidance his Department is providing to assist local education authorities to reduce the incidence of vandalism and arson in schools and colleges in England and Wales.

Mr. Butcher: Advice and guidance to reduce the incidence of vandalism and arson is provided in building bulletins which are distributed to local education authorities. These publications describe measures for improved management, design, fire safety and risk analysis.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps his Department is taking to establish the extent of vandalism and arson in schools and colleges in England and Wales; and what is his estimate of the annual cost of such damage.

Mr. Butcher: The Department obtained data from local education authorities, the insurance industry, and the Home Office in 1986 concerning vandalism and arson in maintained schools. It was estimated that the total annual cost in England and Wales was £26 million for vandalism and £23 million for arson. Data for colleges of further and higher education were not available. This level of damage and cost is unacceptable. I plan to meet representatives of local education authorities shortly to consider further joint action to reduce this unnecessary outflow of expenditure. In addition the Department will be initiating a further study to monitor the extent of vandalism and arson in schools and colleges in 1988 and in successive years.

Ozone Layer

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his policy on the share of publicly funded research on the ozone layer and its depletion allocated respectively to the Science and Engineering Research Council and the Natural Environment Research Council.

Mr. Jackson: Basic research into the scientific issues arising from stratospheric ozone and its properties is conducted both by the Natural Environment Research Council and the Science and Engineering Research Council. It is for each of them to determine the level of resources to be allocated to this topic within their respective shares of the science budget and in the present financial year, the two councils each expect to spend about £700,000.

The seasonal depletion in ozone over Antarctica was first discovered by scientists at the British antarctic survey, a NERC establishment, and BAS based research continues to be a major component of the council's funding of work on this topic. The majority of the SERC expenditure is in respect of an improved atmospheric and mesospheric sounder instrument, costing about £7·5 million in total over 10 years, which will fly on the NASA upper atmosphere research satellite due for launch in 1991. Both research councils also support other work at universities and polytechnics. There is cross representation on committees on the two councils to co-ordinate activities and to ensure that the field is adequately covered.

School Inspections

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Gedling (Mr. Mitchell) of 26 July, Official Report, column 154-55, he will publish in the Official Report the number of years it would take Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools to undertake a thorough formal inspection leading to the publication of a report, for each school in the maintained system.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is not possible to provide an answer in exactly the form requested since many factors, some of which are impossible to quantify, come into play. As explained to the hon. Member for Gedling (Mr. Mitchell), the inspectorate does not in any case set out to inspect and produce a report on every school on a regular basis, as there are some 23,000 schools and only about 50 schools inspectors.

However, using a simple mathematical model incorporating the new streamlined inspection procedures which Her Majesty's inspectorate has recently introduced, it would theoretically take around 100 years to produce a report on every school in the maintained sector with present manpower levels. But that figure is based on the artificial assumption that schools are available for inspection for 52 weeks in the year, and takes no account of the many priorities that determine Her Majesty's inspectorate inspection programme, mainly to do with Government policy needs, that are in no way based on a presumption that every school in the land will be formally and regularly inspected.

Realistically, Her Majesty's inspectorate seeks to inspect fully a sufficiently wide and representative sample of schools in order that sound and cost-efficient judgments may be made about the state of education nationally, and that professional advice based on the findings of these inspections may be provided to the Secretary of State and others who need to know.

In addition, as has been made clear, those full inspections are supplemented by thousands of visits to schools each year which do not result in issued reports. On average, each primary school in England receives an Her Majesty's inspectorate visit every six years and each secondary school every two years. These visits are just as important a part of the inspectorate's intelligence gathering functions as are those inspections which lead to published reports.

Testing and Assessment

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he intends to establish any independent evaluation of the impact upon educational standards of the progressive introduction of the system of national testing and assessment at seven, 11, 14, and 16 years.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have invited the School Examinations and Assessment council, as part of its remit, to advise on an evaluation strategy and associated policy on research and development to enable it to assess the efficacy of the national curriculum assessment arrangements.

GCSE Results

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list by general certificate secondary education examination group and subject the number of 1988 GCSE results outstanding at 1 October; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: This information is not held centrally. GCSE examination results are the responsibility of the independent GCSE examining groups. I will write to my hon. Friend on this matter when information is available from the groups.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Nuclear Facilities (South Africa)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions have been held between officials of his Department, their counterparts in the United States of America and the Soviet Union, and Government Ministers and officials of the Republic of South Africa concerning (a) South African membership of the International Atomic Energy Agency; (b) conditions of South African membership of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty and (c) application of International Atomic Energy Agency nuclear safeguards to South African nuclear facilities and materials.

Mrs. Chalker: In Vienna on 12 August the United Kingdom with the United States and the Soviet Union held talks with South Africa at which they urged South Africa to accede to the non-proliferation treaty and to place all her nuclear facilities under full scope safeguards. The United Kingdom has always opposed moves to suspend South African membership of the International Atomic Energy Agency because of the importance we attach to the principle of universality for United Nations technical agencies.

Nuclear Test

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonweath Affairs what information he has on the United States nuclear test exploded on 17 August monitored by Soviet military verification experts near the Nevada test site.

Mr. Waldegrave: An underground nuclear explosion took place on 17 August at the Nevada test site. It was the first leg of a United States/Soviet joint verification experiment, the second element of which was an explosion at the Semipalatinsk test site on 14 September. Each explosion was monitored by both United States and Soviet experts. The purpose of the experiment was to demonstrate hydrodynamic and seismic methods of verification as an aid to the conclusion of a verification protocol to the 1974 threshold test ban treaty. The results of the joint verification experiment are being analysed by each side.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a table showing, from the date of United Kingdom entry into the European Economic Community, the member states which have occupied the Presidency of the Council of Ministers and that of the European summit, indicating periods and dates for the occupancy of each.

Mrs. Chalker: The information requested is as follows:

Presidency of the Council of Ministers of the European Community

1973	1981
Belgium	Netherlands
Denmark	United Kingdom
1974	1982
Federal Republic of Germany	Belgium
France	Denmark

Denmark	Netherlands
Federal Republic of Germany	United Kingdom
1979	1987
France	Belgium
Ireland	Denmark
1980	1988
Italy	Federal Republic of Germany
Luxembourg	Greece

The first Presidency of each year is from 1 January to 30 June, and the second from 1 July to 31 December. The President of the Council of Ministers chairs the European Council.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the number of times the Republic of Ireland, Luxembourg, Belgium and Denmark have chaired the Council of Ministers and the European summit since 1972; and if he will indicate for each period the issues addressed and conclusions reached by the Community.

Mrs. Chalker: Since 1972 Belgium, Denmark and Luxembourg have each held the office of President of the Council of Ministers on four different occasions: Ireland has held it on three. The member state holding this office chairs the European Council. The issues addressed and the conclusions reached at the European Council are contained in Prime Ministers' statements to the House and in the European Communities series of White Papers on developments in the European Community.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government on according to small member states of the European Community similar rights to large member states to act as President of the Community and to chair the Council of Ministers and European summits.

Mrs. Chalker: On acceding to the treaty of Rome the United Kingdom fully accepted its provisions. The treaty states that the office of President of the Council shall be held for a term of six months by each member in turn.

SCOTLAND

Housing

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) whether he will consider exempting council houses held for the specific purpose of decanting existing tenants during rehabilitation of public sector houses from payment of the standard community charge for a period greater than three months;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report the present number of holiday homes and the present number of houses empty for a period in excess of three months in each local government housing authority in Scotland;

(3) if he will estimate the amounts each local government housing authority will require to pay in financial year 1988-89 in standard community charges for empty public sector houses in their area, assuming the level for the personal community charge is that already estimated by Her Majesty's Government as the level necessary in such area to raise the revenue currently raised by domestic rates and also assuming the multiplier in each area is set at a rate of two times the personal community charge.

Mr. Lang: Figures are not available in the form requested. An estimate of the numbers of second homes and of local authority houses empty for a period in excess of three months is set out, for each district and islands council area, in the table. The estimates of second homes are as at 30 June 1986, and those of empty local authority houses are as at 31 March 1987. In both cases they derive from information supplied by local authorities.

Under section 10(8)(b) of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987, levying authorities (regional and islands councils) have discretion to extend the three-month period during which the standard community charges not payable in respect of unoccupied and unfurnished premises. The amounts of standard community charge which will be payable in respect of empty public sector houses will therefore depend on how levying authorities exercise their discretion. My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to make special arrangements for council houses held for decanting. Houses which are uninhabitable because they are undergoing reconstruction already give rise to an exemption from standard community charge liability under the Standard and Collective Community Charges (Scotland) Regulations 1988.

Cleaning and Catering Contracts

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each health board the number of staff monitoring cleaning and catering contracts.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally.

Nurses

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many nurses in Scotland will be on a lower level of salary than they are at present as a result of the new grading structure.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None. All nurses will receive a pay award of at least 4 per cent. as from 1 April this year and the range of increase, following implementation of the new clinical grading structure, will be up to 33·6 per cent. or even higher in some cases. Where, exceptionally, an individual's post is regraded to a level which attracts a salary lower than that formerly earned, his or her salary will be protected at the 1 April level, including the 4 per cent. pay rise.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the health boards asked to revise their nurses' clinical grading profiles; and if he will give the reasons why such revisions were asked for.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No health board has been asked to revise its nurses' clinical grading profile.

Solicitors

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what conclusions he has reached on the responses to his discussion paper on the solicitor profession in Scotland, issued in November 1987.

Mr. Rifkind: Some of the proposals published in my discussion paper, "The Practice of the Solicitor Profession in Scotland," have already been given effect in the Solicitors (Scotland) Act 1988. I am considering responses to the other proposals and I also intend to seek views early in 1989 on further proposals on the future work and organisation of the legal profession in Scotland.

Prisons (Reports)

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has received from Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons for Scotland his reports on Friarton prison and Penninghame prison.

Mr. Rifkind: I have received from Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons for Scotland his reports on his inspections of Friarton prison and Penninghame prison. I have today placed copies of the reports, including my responses, in the Library, and I have sent a copy to the Members in whose constituencies the establishments are located, to the chairman of the Scottish parliamentary all-party penal affairs group, and to other interested bodies. Copies may also be purchased from my Department.

Urban Policy

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made by the partnerships in taking forward the Government's initiative in the four peripheral estates referred to in his statement on 29 March, Official Report, column 903.

Mr. Rifkind: Partnerships have been established in each of the four estates chosen under the initiative. Work on the production of strategies for the regeneration of each estate is now under way. In order to further the work of the partnerships, I propose to make provision of £300,000 this year to pump-prime desirable local projects, to give information about the initiative to residents in the four estates, and to meet the costs of studies which will enable the strategies to be monitored and evaluated. Parliamentary approval to these payments will be sought in a Supplementary Supply Estimate for the new towns and the urban programme, Scotland Vote (XVI 9). Pending its approval, expenditure estimated at £150,000 is being met by a repayable advance already issued from the contingencies fund. For future years, further funding will be sought in the normal course of Supply Estimates.

WALES

Physically Handicapped Persons

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to launch an all-Wales strategy for the physically handicapped.

Mr. Grist: Our officials are currently considering provision for the physically handicapped in Wales.

Bathing Waters

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library (a) a list of all bathing beaches in Wales that complied in 1988 with the EEC directive on bathing waters and (b) a list of those that did not.

Mr. Grist: The data collected by the water authorities during the 1988 bathing season are not due to be submitted to the Department until the end of November. In due course I shall, in conjunction with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, arrange for a copy of the results to be placed in the Library.

Pont Abraham—Carmarthen Link

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the expected starting date for the construction of the dual carriageway link between Pont Abraham and Carmarthen.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: All but three miles of the A48 between Pont Abraham and Carmarthen is already dual carriageway. The starting date for the remaining Nant-y-Caws-Coed Hirion section is under review.

University Hospital of Wales, Cardiff

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the number and categories of posts deemed to be required to staff the new paediatric cardiology department at the University Hospital of Wales, Cardiff.

Mr. Grist: The Department has approved in principle the proposals of South Glamorgan health authority for the development of a paediatric cardiac unit at the University Hospital of Wales, Cardiff. The numbers and categories of staff posts are currently being assessed by the authority and will be reviewed by the Department in the light of the report of the cardiology committee of the Royal College of Physicians and other developments.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library details of the advertisements that have been placed in seeking to fill the newly created posts for paediatric cardiology at the University Hospital of Wales, Cardiff, together with the responses received and appointments made.

Mr. Grist: Advertisements for the post of consultant paediatric cardiologist at the University Hospital of Wales were placed by South Glamorgan health authority with the British Medical Journal and the Lancet and appeared in those journals on 4 April 1987 and 13 February 1988. No appointment was made.

The information requested as to responses received is not held centrally.

Housing for Senior Management

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to amend circular 30/86, "Housing for Senior Management", in line with the contents of circular 44/87.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to amend circular 30/86, "Housing for Senior Management", which continues in force.

Gipsy Sites

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects his decision to be made regarding the proposed gipsy site on Fairwood Common, Gower, Swansea.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend expects to be in a position to announce his decision by the end of November.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit the proposed Clwyd county council permanent site for itinerants at Queensferry and Rockcliffe in the district of Alyn and Deeside; if he will meet the town councils of Queensferry and Connah's Quay and the district council of Alyn and Deeside to receive responses on the reaction of residents and councillors concerning the proposed sites; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: No.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the future organisation of the Welsh Development Agency; what is his policy towards maintaining the free standing and unmerged status of the Welsh Development Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have no plans to change the present status of the Welsh Development Agency. The Agency's enterprise promotion activities will be further co-ordinated with industrial training in Wales as part of the longer term arrangements being developed following the withdrawal of the Training Commission's responsibilities in that area.

Advance Factories

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will sanction the building of six 15,000 sq. ft. advance factories at Deeside industrial park; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will meet the Deeside Enterprise Trust, Clwyd to discuss with the trust members and the Alyn-Deeside council the case for more advance factories on Deeside industrial park; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Within the framework of a property development programme agreed annually by me, the Welsh Development Agency has operational responsibility for determining the number and size of advance factories built in individual locations in Wales. In dong so it takes account of the views of interested bodies. The case for more advance factories on Deeside industrial park should therefore be made direct to the agency.

Toxic Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what advice was sought by his Department from Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution over plans by the owners of the Karin B cargo vessel to offload its cargo of 2,000 tonnes of toxic waste at Neath.

Mr. Grist: My Department was in touch with Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution from the time it was informed of the plans.

Homes for the Elderly (Leasing)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy regarding the leasing out by county authorities of county council homes for the elderly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: It is for local authorities in making provision for the residential care of elderly people to make such arrangements with private and voluntary agencies as seem to them best to meet local needs and circumstances.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has been notified by Clwyd county council of plans to lease to private companies some of the Clwyd county council homes for the elderly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: No.

HEALTH

Dental Services

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what are the current calculations of his Department as to future dental manpower needs in the United Kingdom;

(2) how many registered dentists there are currently practising in the general dental service in England and Wales; and how many are on the dental register.

Mrs. Currie: The total number of general dental practitioners providing general dental services in England and Wales as at 30 September 1988 was 15,868. The number of dentists on the United Kingdom dental register at 31 January 1988 was 25,286. Many dentists remain on the register after retirement while others are taking career breaks.

The Department published in 1987 its projections of supply and demand for dental manpower in the report "Dental Manpower". A copy is available in the Library. The report recommended that in order to achieve a desirable level of supply it is necessary to reduce the intake to United Kingdom dental schools by 10 per cent. The Government have accepted that recommendation.

Nurses

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of places available to state enrolled nurses to convert to registered general nurses in 1987, 1988 and 1989; what is the total number of applications received for these courses; what is the average waiting time for successful applicants; and if there are any plans to increase the number of places available for state enrolled nurses wishing to undertake the conversion courses to registered general nurses.

Mr. Mellor: Not all the information required is available centrally.

Since April 1986, the number of schools of nursing approved by the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting to run the 52-week enrolled nurse to registered general nurse conversion course has increased from three to 83. We understand from regional health authorities that, as at the end of August, a further 26 courses were in the planning stage. In addition, there is a smaller number of courses enabling enrolled nurses to convert to registered mental nurse or registered nurse for the mentally handicapped.

The United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting has recently published consultative proposals for more flexible modes of conversion, which we welcome. In addition, as part of their initial implementation plans for the Project 2000 proposals for the reform of nurse education and training, health authorities have been asked to produce plans and targets for further enrolled nurse conversion.

Lithotripters

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the number and location of lithotripters in use in the National Health Service, the capital and revenue costs of a lithotripter, the number of patients each lithotripter can treat in the course of a year, and the cost per patient of the alternative surgical and other treatments to lithotripsy.

Mrs. Currie: I am aware of six extra corporeal shock wave lithotripters in use within the National Health Service in England. These are located at:

The General Infirmary, Leeds
The Royal Hallamshire Hospital, Sheffield
St. Peter's Hospital, London
St. Thomas's Hospital, London
Southmead Hospital, Bristol
Withington Hospital, Manchester

There are also facilities in Scotland, which are the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, and in the private sector.

The detailed information requested is not available centrally.

Nuclear Plants

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies have been undertaken by his Department to ascertain if there are any causal links between the discharge of toxic wastes containing the micro-organisms desulfovibrios from the nuclear fuel reprocessing plants at Sellafield and Dounreay, and the incidences of unusually high childhood leukaemias found in the vicinity of those plants.

Mrs. Currie: The Department has not undertaken or funded studies in this area. Any specific research proposals eligible for funding by the Department would be considered on their merits.

Nurses Pay

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements are being made to handle appeals over post allocations in the new nurses' pay structure.

Mr. Mellor: Appeals against grading decisions will be determined under the terms of the agreement set out in section 32 of the "General Whitley Council Conditions of Service Handbook," a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish his definition of the term "continued responsibility" in relation to sisters in charge of hospital wards in the new nurses' pay structure.

Mr. Mellor: The term "continuing responsibility" is defined in annex D of the management guidance on implementation of the new grading structure for nurses and midwives (EL(88)P67) which the Department issued to health authorities in May. A copy of the guidance is in the Library.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide health authorities with additional funds to meet the cost of any successful appeals against post allocations in the new nurses pay structure.

Mr. Mellor: The funds allocated to health authorities are intended to cover all pay costs arising in the current financial year, including any costs arising from successful appeals about pay or grading.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for health if nurses will be graded in the new pay structure by the job they were doing on 1 April.

Mr. Mellor: Nurses will be assimilated to the new structure on the basis of their duties and responsibilities at 1 April 1988.

Clinical Grading

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the clinical grading profile for each district health authority.

Mr. Mellor: Yes. I will do so as soon as possible.

Private Residential Care

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to transfer the monitoring of private residential care to social services departments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Local social services authorities are already responsible for registering and inspecting private and voluntary residential care homes under part I of the Registered Homes Act 1984.

Children

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish estimates of the number of families with dependent children, distinguishing between (a) married couples, (b) unmarried couples and (c) lone parents, and also showing the number of families where one parent is not the natural parent.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that not all the information requested is available. The estimated numbers of families with dependent children in Great Britain in 1985 were as follows:

Type of family with dependent children[1]	Estimated Number (millions)
Married Couples (including those stating they were living as a married couple)	6·3
Lone Parents (including any who were cohabiting but did not state they were living as a married couple)	1·0
TOTAL	7·3

Source: 1985 Labour Force Survey

[1] Dependent children are those aged under 19 years, never married and either in full time education or else on a Government scheme.

ENVIRONMENT

Industrial Development (Rural Areas)

61. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his plans for the development of industry in rural areas.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government's aim is to encourage growth and diversification in the rural economy in ways that will enhance the quality of life in rural communities and conserve our heritage. Various forms of assistance are available for that purpose, in particular from the Rural Development Commission.

Asbestos Fibres (Commons Court)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make an assessment of the level of asbestos fibres in the air of Commons Court.

Mr. Chope: After completion of work to remove the asbestos in this part of the House, air sampling test were undertaken in over 40 locations on five separate dates between 26 August and 9 September 1988. On each occasion the reading was below the minimum safety level, that is less than 0·01 fibres/ml.

Water Supplies

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the proportion of sampled water supplies in England which are found to be unfit.

Mr. Moynihan: All public supplies of drinking water in the United Kingdom are safe to drink. A number of supplies regularly exceed limits set by the EC drinking water directive for certain parameters, but medical advisers consider that these supplies do not constitute a danger to public health.

Water Privatisation

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans the Northumbria water authority has to take over the statutory water companies in the northern region; and what assessment he has made of the implications of this for the Government's privatisation proposals.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend is not aware of any plans for such a takeover.

Local Structure Plans

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which local structure plans were approved since May 1986; and what was (a) the number of homes proposed by the local authority and (b) the number of homes finally approved.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave), the then Minister for Housing and Planning on 14 July this year, Official Report, columns 297-98. Since that date, no further structure plans or alterations have been approved by my right hon. Friend.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which local structure plans were approved between May 1979 and January 1983; and what was (a) the number of homes proposed by the local authority and (b) the number of homes finally approved.

Mr. Trippier: The structure plans, including alterations and replacement plans, that were approved between May 1979 and January 1983 are listed in the table. Details of the submitted and approved housing provisions for those plans could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Drugs Testing

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will meet the chairman of the Sports Council to discuss the compulsory drugs testing of all athletes before the next world games, Commonwealth games and Olympic games.

Mr. Moynihan: I meet the chairman of the Sports Council regularly to discuss all matters of mutual interest, including drug abuse in athletics and other sports; and my Department and the Sports Council keep in close contact on this issue.

The Government attach great importance to combating drug abuse in sport. The United Kingdom now has a comprehensive and independent drug testing regime, administered by the Sports Council, and we are encouraging other countries to adopt equally effective measures. Among other initiatives, the United Kingdom is taking the lead in promoting a European convention on drug abuse in sport.

London Docklands

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information is available to the London Docklands development corporation as to how many workers are currently employed on-site at Canary wharf; and how many of these are residents of the three docklands boroughs.

Mr. Trippier: As of 17 October, 831 workers were employed on-site at Canary wharf. Of these, around 160 were residents of the three docklands boroughs.

River Pollution

Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress of contracts to eliminate pollutants from the River Tyne, Wear and Tees.

Mr. Moynihan: The Northumbrian water authority is engaged in schemes for the Tyne and Tees aimed at securing improvements in water quality both through investment in new sewerage and sewage treatment facilities and by action to reduce the amounts of industrial and trade effluents discharged to rivers and sewers. As a result of recent improvements, the Tyne has now become one of our best salmon rivers. The authority is on course to meet its short term objectives for the river Tees by 1990—involving the elimination of visual nuisance and smell—although further major investment by the water authority and private industry will be needed to achieve longer-term aims related to the passage of migratory fish. The Wear estuary already meets its long term objectives although the authority plans further investment to replace unsatisfactory outfalls. However contractural arrangements on work for all three rivers are matters for the authority.

Building Industry Contracts

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the recommendations of the working party on building industry contracts.

Mr. Trippier: I refer my hon. Friend to my Department's news release of 28 July, in which I announced the Government's detailed response to the report of the Beat the Cowboys working party. A copy of the news release is in the Library of the House.

Childhood Leukaemias

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has evaluated the research work done by Professor Derek Ellwood at the University of Durham and Dr. Jim Watson of Southampton university on the relationship between the discharge of the desulfovibrios micro-organism in toxic waste streams at the nuclear plants at Dounreay and Sellafield, the uptake of radiotoxic nucleides such as plutonium by the gut wall, and incidences of childhood leukaemias above the statistical norm in the vicinities of the two nuclear plants.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We understand that Professor Ellwood and Dr. Watson have not, in the course of their work, considered the uptake of plutonium or any other radionuclide.

Nuclear Waste Disposal

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his departmental research programme into nuclear waste disposal includes evaluation of the laser photo-acoustic spectroscopy technique under development at United States Department of Energy laboratories at Argonne.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The development and application of laser induced photoacoustic spectroscopy has formed part of the radioactive waste management research programme of the Department of the Environment since 1985.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has made to the criticisms of the current nucelar waste disposal strategy in the latest annual report from the radioactive waste management advisory committee.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We take careful note of views expressed in the annual reports of the radioactive waste management advisory committee and discuss significant issues with the chairman of the committee as appropriate. The ninth annual report was published on 28 July and copies were placed in the Library of the House.

European Commission (Environmental Research)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current annual level of financial commitment by the European Commission to research on (a) ozone layer depletion, (b) the greenhouse effect and its relation to power plant development, (c) nuclear waste and nuclear plant decommissioning and (d) liquid pollution of the North sea by toxic wastes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The European Commission does not publish a breakdown of all European Community research expenditure at this level of detail. Research on ozone layer depletion, the greenhouse effect, and marine pollution are all covered in the environment programme.

Expenditure figures (payment appropriations) published in the European Community budget for 1988 for relevant research programmes are as follows (converted to £ sterling at the rate 1 European unit of account = £0·66p):

	£ million
Environment	22·98
Radioactive Waste Management	[1]23·48
Decommissioning of Nuclear Power Stations	1·78

[1] Includes expenditure at the Communities' own Joint Research Centre on Nuclear Fission research, only part of which is concerned with radioactive waste management.

Karin B

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department first learned of the intention of the owners of the German registered Karin B cargo ship to dock and unload its 2,000 tonnes of chemical waste at Neath; what was his Department's response; and how many meetings have been subsequently held with (a) the Institute of Wastes Management (b) the National Association of Waste Disposal Contractors and (c) officials of the environment directorate of the European Commission with regard to the destination of the toxic cargo on the Karin B.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My Department learnt of the proposal for Karin B to dock at Neath on 26 August. There have been subsequent meetings with IWM and NAWDC as part of the normal round of business in waste management and the Karin B incident was among the topics discussed. There have been no meetings with the EC Commission on this matter.

Hazardous Wastes

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what input has been made by United Kingdom officials into the United Nations environment programme meetings in February, June and September to discuss the formulation of an international convention to control the movement of 44 types of hazardous wastes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: United Kingdom officials are participating fully in the development of an effective international convention by UNEP, which takes into account related work already done in the EC and OECD.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to obtain a copy of the transcript of the comments made by the European Economic Community Environment Commissioner on BBC Radio 4's "The World At One" on 30 August concerning the non-implementation of the European Community directive on transfrontier shipment of hazardous waste; and if he will make a statement on the criticisms of Her Majesty's Government by the commissioner.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have not yet seen the transcript of the Commissioner's comments concerning directive 84/631/EEC but the necessary regulations were laid in Parliament on 14 September. The majority of other member states have yet to implement the directive.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish his Department's consultation paper on special hazardous wastes; and to whom he expects to circulate the paper.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We plan to issue a consultation paper reviewing the special waste regulations early in 1989 and to consult the widest possible range of organisations with interests in this matter.

Pollution Inspectors

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he has any plans to increase the resources available to Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution in response to the increase in the amount of hazardous waste being imported into the United Kingdom for disposal;

(2) if he has any plans to increase the number of hazardous waste inspectors employed by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution;

(3) by what criteria the establishment level of inspectors employed by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to cover England and Wales is determined.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The manpower and other resources allocated to Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution are kept under continual review in the light of current circumstances and priorities.

Organic and Chlorinated Solvents

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what international regulations and recommendations exist to cover the transfrontier transport and disposal of organic and chlorinated solvents.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Transfrontier transport of organic and chlorinated solvents which are dangerous goods is subject to regulation under international transport conventions covering carriage by road, rail, sea and air and the United Nations recommendations on the transport of dangerous goods. Disposal of these materials which are toxic and dangerous waste is covered by the provisions of EC directive 78/319/EEC. They are not subject to the prenotification and acknowledgement procedures contained in the EC directives on the transfrontier shipment of hazardous waste but, in the United Kingdom, movement is controlled under the Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations 1980.

Aquatic Environment (Pollution)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report a list of the organisations to which the "Red List" consultation paper on pollution control for the aquatic environment, published on 28 July has been sent and the full list of 26 substances and their comparative toxicity, persistence and capacity for bio-accumulation.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The "Red List" consultation paper was sent to some 250 organisations in the water, environmental, agricultural and industrial sectors as well as other Government Departments and foreign Governments. Since then, approximately 250 other organisations and individuals have been sent copies on request.

The table sets out the comparative toxicity, persistence and capacity for bio-accumulation of the 26 provisional "Red List" substances:

[1] These figures are the lowest acute toxic values found for the substances, in milligrammes per litre. They give an indication of the order of the acute toxicity of the substances under laboratory conditions and may not reflect the substances' toxicity in the water environment.
[2] These figures, quoted in days, give an idea of the substances' persistence in water. They are often derived from a number of reports and so constitute the "best single figure estimate".
[3] The figures marked * are log octanal/water partition coefficient (Log P) values and have been quoted where there is not a bioconcentration factor available. A Log P of 3 corresponds very roughly to a bioconcentration factor of 1,000.

Ravens (North Cumbria)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has made any evaluation of the effects on the breeding cycle of ravens in North Cumbria from their consumption of carrion from flocks of sheep with high uptake of radioactivity from the Chernobyl fallout.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No specific evaluation of the effects on ravens of sheep carrion has been made. We are advised that the declining population of this species is thought to be primarily caused by loss of habitat and food supply resulting from changing agricultural practices and improved livestock management.

Darenth Park Inquiry

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate when he is likely to publish his decision on the Darenth Park hospital site planning inquiry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend hopes to issue his decision shortly.

Swan Farm, Ash-cum-Ridley

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate when he is likely to publish his decision on the Swan Farm, Ash-cum-Ridley planning inquiry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend hopes to issue his decision shortly.

Kent Structure Plan

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has now received the revised structure plan, as amended by Kent county council; and if he will indicate when he is likely to issue his decision upon the proposed revision.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend received the second review and alterations to the Kent structure plan on 15 January 1988. An examination in public was held in July and August by an independent panel under the chairmanship of Professor Gerald Smart. Their report is expected before the end of the year. My right hon. Friend's response to the proposed alterations will be issued as soon as possible after that.

Planning Appeals (Chelmsford)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the amount of money awarded to appellants arising from successful planning appeals to his Department, against Chelmsford borough council, in each of the last five financial years and during the current financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: In making awards of costs to parties in planning proceedings, my right hon. Friend and planning inspectors are concerned with whether another party's behaviour has caused the applicant for an award to incur costs unreasonably. Determinations are not given in cash amounts and it is for the parties to negotiate about the sum payable after any award has been made. Consequently, I regret that although the council should have the information requested, it is not available to the Department.

Bradford Council (Staff Conditions)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about arrangements outlined in the document entitled, "Bradford metropolitan district council—A Model for the 1990s" to vary national pay and conditions agreements of local government staff.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None.

Planning Permission

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward an amendment to planning law to provide that failure to obtain planning permission should be an offence.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend is aware of some support for such an amendment to the Town and Country Planning Act 1971. This is one of the matters to be considered by Mr. Robert Carnwath QC, in his current review of planning authorities' enforcement powers, and my right hon. Friend therefore prefers to await any recommendation Mr. Carnwath may make in his report early in the new year.

Planning Authorities (Enforcement Powers)

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce the result of his review of planning authorities' enforcement powers.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend hopes to receive Mr. Robert Carnwath's report on his review of enforcement powers early in the new year; and to announce his response to it shortly afterwards.

Acid Pollution

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to publish the report on strategies to reduce acid pollution, prepared for his Department by Technica; and whether that report will be placed in the Library.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The report to which the hon. Member refers was prepared by the Fellowship of Engineering as a commentary on its manual of acidic emission abatement technologies, a copy of which was placed in the Library last year. The commentary was supplied by the Fellowship of Engineering on a commercial, in confidence basis and there are no plans to publish it.

Water Privatisation

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what arrangements will be made, in the light of the proposed water privatisation, to ensure the continuation of rights of access to reservoirs for those wishing to pursue passive leisure activities;

(2) what measures he intends to take, in the light of the proposed water privatisation, to protect the interests of those wishing to use the water-gathering grounds as a leisure area.

Mr. Moynihan: The private water companies will inherit the statutory duties of the water authorities in respect of public access to, and recreational use of their lands and waters. They will also be subject to a new code of practice on recreation and access, which will give guidance on discharging this duty.

Inner Area Programme

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those local authorities that supplied information to his Department too late to qualify for inner area programme funding.

Mr. Trippier: Following a review in 1986, a total of 57 local authorities with the highest levels of urban deprivation were each invited to submit annual inner area programmes. All 57 authorities submitted programmes for 1988-89, and all have now been approved.

Bathing Beaches

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received from regional water authorities with regard to the implications of upgrading bathing beaches.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 21 October 1988]: The financial implications of upgrading bathing waters have been considered in this year's round of corporate plan discussions with water authorities. These discussions took place against the background of a request to the industry to examine the feasibility of accelerating investment programmes to achieve compliance with the EC bathing water directive.

Water Supply Costs

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the average increases in the cost to (a) domestic and (b) commercial consumers of water supplies in percentages in (i) Belgium, (ii) Denmark, (iii) France, (iv) the Federal Republic of Germany, (v) The Netherlands, (vi) Norway, (vii) Spain, (viii) Sweden and (ix) the United Kingdom for each year since 1974.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 24 October 1988]: The increases in domestic water charges in England and Wales are shown in the table.

Mersey Basin

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he has taken to assist the cleaning-up of the environment of the Mersey basin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 24 October 1988]: In 1983 the Department set up the Mersey basin campaign to co-ordinate a multi-million pound regeneration of the Mersey basin involving the North West water authority, central and local government and business and voluntary organisations.

The long-term aims of the campaign are to improve the worst parts of the river system to fair condition (Class 2 in the national classification scheme) and to upgrade the existing class 2 waters to class 1 (good quality). The campaign also seeks to improve the landward environment of the Mersey.

The project is expected to take some 25 years to complete with estimated capital expenditure around £4 billion in total—£2·5 billion on water quality improvements and £1·5 billion for landward improvements. The campaign has been underpinned with aid from the European regional development fund. A range of resources is being brought to bear on the landward side, and in particular the Department's urban programme and derelict land grant. The Department is also giving direct assistance, along with industry, to the very worthwhile efforts of the voluntary sector in carrying out a series of waterside projects.

In these ways, substantial progress is being made in what is the largest clean-up programme of its kind in the country.

Water Contamination (Report)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Halcrow report on water contamination will be published.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 24 October 1988]: We expect to publish the report shortly.

Drinking Water

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the sources of drinking water supply in Britain with nitrate content exceeding the European Community limit.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 24 October 1988]: A number of sources that feed public supplies regularly exceed the EC drinking water directive limit for nitrate. However, many of these are blended with water of lower nitrate content before being put into supply. Detailed information on them is not held by the Department.

The following public supplies regularly exceed the nitrate limit:

Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many hon. Members are currently provided with (a) Commons weekly Hansard, (b) Commons bound volumes, (c) Commons Weekly Hansard Index, (d) Commons daily Hansard, (e) Lords daily Hansard, (f) Lords weekly Hansard and (g) Lords bound volumes by Her Majesty's Stationery Office; and what were the figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Lilley: Some hon. Members receive copies of Hansard direct from Her Majesty's Stationery Office and copies are also made available via the Vote Office. The current figures are as follows:

	Number of copies supplied
	Direct	To the Vote Office	Total
(a) Commons Weekly	395	35	430
(b) Commons Volume	391	—	391
(c) Commons Weekly Index	377	35	412

(e) Lords Daily	19	[1]270	289
(f) Lords Weekly	11	15	26
(g) Lords Volume	15	—	15

[1] Average.

I regret that comparable details for earlier years could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is the current cost of each single bound volume of Commons Hansard; what is the amount of subsidy per volume; and what were the figures for each year since 1970;

(2) what is the current cost of each single bound volume of Lords Hansard; what is the amount of subsidy per volume; and what were the figures for each year since 1970;

(3) what is the current price per copy of Commons weekly Hansard; and what were the figures for each year since 1970;

(4) what is the current price per copy of Lords weekly Hansard; and what were the figures for each year since 1970.

Mr. Lilley: The prices agreed in each of the years concerned are given in the table. Figures for the amount of subsidy per issue could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, since the estabishment of the trading fund in 1980 the total Government subsidy has reduced in real terms by 66 per cent.

ENERGY

Pit Closures

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list in the Official Report the pits closed by British Coal since 1 January and the date of closure of each.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The information requested is as follows:

Colliery	Date of closure
Arkwright	22 January 1988
Seafield/Frances	22 January 1988
Ashington	29 January 1988
Lady Windsor/Abercynon	8 February 1988

Mansfield	25 March 1988
Cadley Hill	25 March 1988
Manvers	25 March 1988

Wave Energy

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) on 10 May, Official Report, column 75, if he will place in the Library copies of the reviews of the costs of offshore wave energy which have been conducted by his Department since the beginning of 1982.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Copies of the reviews are already in the Library of the House.

Nuclear Safety

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what policy considerations underlie the decision to bring United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority reactors under safety and licensing regulations administered by the nuclear installations Inspectorate under the Nuclear Installations and Health and Safety Acts, respectively; and what implications this decision has for manning levels at the nuclear installations inspectorate.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The UKAEA has been and will continue to be fully subject to the powers which Health and Safety Executive (HSE) inspectors, including the nuclear installations inspectorate (NII), have under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. The decision to licence the authority under the Nuclear Installations Act 1965 and 1969 reflects the fact that the authority has now operated for over two years as a trading fund; it is appropriate that its nuclear sites should become subject to licensing in the same way as other commercial sites.

Licensing will be administered by the NII; planning of the future resource needs of the NII is already taking into account the work load which licensing will impose.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has ordered any evaluation within his Department of the implications of papers on the Chernobyl accident presented at the British Association for the Advancement of Science annual conference in Oxford, held in September, for the safety of nuclear plants in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) was represented at senior level at that part of the British Association for the Advancement of Science annual conference to which the hon. Member refers. None of the papers on the Chernobyl accident contained (new) information of significance for nuclear safety in the United Kingdom, beyond that already known to the HSE's nuclear installations inspectorate and the United Kingdom nuclear industry. Any new information that becomes available about the Chernobyl accident continues to be assessed; should any points arise that have implications for the safety of United Kingdom nuclear plant, appropriate action will be taken.

Nuclear Materials Exports

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, Official Report column 289, 27 July, on nuclear materials exports he will set out the security considerations to which he makes reference.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No.

CEGB Magnox Plant, Oldbury

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when his Department first learnt of the incident at the Central Electricity Generating Board magnox nuclear plant at Oldbury on 13 June 1987, involving the partial loss of electricity supplies to the control systems governing the supply of coolant to the reactor core; what departmental evaluation has been made of the implications for the continued operation of the plant; if he has requested the nuclear installations inspectorate to study the cause of the incident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate was informed at 11.30 on Saturday, 13 June 1987, that reactor 1 had tripped following the failure of one of three phases of the electrical supply to part of the instrumentation. It was subsequently reported in the Oldbury site newsletter of 19 June 1987.

An independent assessment was carried out by the inspectorate and it was concluded that although the fault resulted in a loss of forced coolant circulation for a short period following the reactor shut-down, the reactor's behaviour was entirely as predicted and presented no on or off site hazard. Nevertheless, the fault revealed that improvements in the instrument supply system protection would be prudent and suitable modifications were developed. I understand that those have now been implemented on both reactors at Oldbury which have continued to operate in a satisfactory manner.

A statement on the incident was published by the Health and Safety Executive in its "Statement on Incidents at Nuclear Installations—Second Quarter 1987" on 29 January 1988.

Three Mile Island Nuclear Reactor

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he possesses, and what assessment he has made of its relevance for the United Kingdom nuclear energy programme, concerning the discovery of micro-organisms in the degraded core of the Three Mile Island II nuclear reactor.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Micro-organism growth in stagnant water is a well-known phenomenon. The example of micro-organisms in the degraded core of Three Mile Island II reactor (TMI) is of interest in relation to long-term severe accident management and clean-up. The United Kingdom is kept up to date on this and other aspects of TMI through information exchange agreements with the United States of America.

South African Uranium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if any uranium ore of South African origin was delivered to the United Kingdom for civil use in the period from 1977 to 1984.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No uranium of South African origin has been delivered to the United Kingdom for use in the civil nuclear programme since 1973.

Nuclear Reactors

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on representations made by (a) the Government of the Republic of Ireland and (b) non-governmental organisations in the Republic of Ireland to the European Commission on the continued operation, or new siting, of respectively (a) the British Nuclear Fuels Sellafield reprocessing site, (b) British Nuclear Fuel's Calder Hall military reactors, (c) Central Electricity Generating Board magnox reactors at Hinkley A Transfynydd and Wylfa, (d) Central Generating Board advanced gas cooled reactors at Heysham and Hinkley 'B' and (e) Central Generating Board planned pressurised water reactors at Hinkley C.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Any representation to the European Commission is a matter between those making the representation and the Commission. I have not been informed by the Commission of any such representations.

I am, of course, aware of the general concerns which have been expressed by the Government of the Republic of Ireland and other non-governmental Irish organisations on these questions.

Departmental Safety Inspectorate

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the establishment of his Department's safety inspectorate; and how many posts have been filled in each of the last eight years.

Mr. Parkinson: The information has already been provided in my reply to the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East (Mr. Prescott) on 25 July 1988 at columns 83-84.

Since then one vacant post has been filled while four newly recruited inspectors are due to join the Department in the next six weeks.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy to report regularly on the status of part-time workers in the statistics printed in the Employment Gazette.

Mr. Lee: Part time workers are included in the employment statistics published in the Employment Gazette.

In June 1988, the latest date for which figures are available, 25 per cent. of the workforce in employment in Great Britain (9 per cent. of males and 45 per cent. of females) were working part time.

The workforce in employment is the sum of employees in employment, the self employed, members of Her Majesty's Forces and participants in work-related Government training programmes. In classifying the workforce between full and part time all programme participants are counted as in part time employment.

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the estimated net change in the United Kingdom labour force for each year between 1989 and 2003.

Mr. Lee: The following information was published in an article in the March 1988 edition of the Employment Gazette (pages 117-129), a copy of which is in the Library. The table includes projections of the net change in the Great Britain labour force for each year between 1987 and 1995. Projections beyond 1995, or for the United Kingdom, are not available.

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the parliamentary contituencies in which the number of people out of work and claiming benefit declined by more than 40 per cent. between August 1984 and August 1988, including in the table for each constituency the total for (a) August 1984, (b) August 1988 and (c) the percentage reduction.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. The table shows the parliamentary constituencies in Great Britain where the number of unemployed claimants has fallen by 40 per cent. or more between August 1984 and August 1988, together with the number of unemployed in each constituency at the requested dates. The figures are affected by the change in compilation of the count in March 1986 to reduce over recording.

Relocation of Staff

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he intends to relocate any of his staff in Runcorn.

Mr. Lee: The Employment Department already has about 900 of its headquarter staff located in Runcorn. But in common with other Government Departments, the Department is currently reviewing the potential for moving more of its headquarter work from London and the south-east. A number of alternative locations are under consideration, of which Runcorn is one, but it will be some time yet before final decisions are taken.

Pendulum Arbitration

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the number of disputes in the United Kingdom settled by pendulum arbitration, giving the number settled in favour of the employers.

Mr. Nicholls: Such information is not collected by my Department.

Tourism

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether his review of the Government's role in supporting the tourism industry will include consultations with (a) the Association of District Councils and (b) regional tourist boards; and whether he has yet received any representations from those two bodies on the nature and scope of the review.

Mr. Lee: Members of the review team have seen representatives of both bodies. Written submissions have not yet been received.

"Prompt Payment Please"

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what responses he has received following the publication of the booklet "Prompt Payment Please"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The booklet has been welcomed by many large and small firms and their representative organisations as a well written source of practical advice which will help businesses to reduce payment delays. Since its publication in July, demand has resulted in over 125,000 copies being distributed.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many inspectors have joined or left the Health and Safety Executive in the last eight years; from where they were recruited; and what was their destination on leaving.

Mr. Nicholls: Between 1 January 1979 and 31 December 1987, 454 inspectors joined the Health and Safety Executive from a wide variety of backgrounds. During the same period 564 inspectors left, of whom 234 resigned, 302 retired and 28 left for other reasons.

Comprehensive information on the destination of those who resign from HSE is not available as staff are under no obligation to disclose their reasons for leaving.

Health and Safety Executive (Visits)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how is the frequency of visits to installations by Health and Safety Executive inspectors, other than the annual visit, determined.

Mr. Nicholls: Each of the Health and Safety Executive's inspectorates determines its own priorities for planned visits. The frequency of visits depends on a number of factors. The factory and agricultural inspectorates' programme of preventive visits to fixed premises are planned on the basis of an inspection rating system and this is reviewed at each visit to the premises. In addition, each inspection rating is reviewed at the start of every inspection year, when a rating is amended upwards to take into account the period since the last preventive inspection.

HSE's explosives inspectorate operates an inspection rating system similar in principle to that used by the factory and agricultural inspectorates.

Major nuclear sites are generally visited at least ten times a year on the basis that regular visits are needed to maintain a close monitoring of the site and to complete given regulatory requirements.

Visits made by HSE's mines and quarries inspectors are made in accordance with work plans drawn up by inspectors in charge of local districts weighted in line with local circumstances and knowledge.

In addition, all inspectorates make reactive visits required, for example, to investigate accidents and dangerous occurrences.

Health and Safety Representatives

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether inspectors are informed of the identity of the health and safety representatives on the installations they visit.

Mr. Nicholls: HSE inspectors are instructed to identify and contact as far as possible appointed health and safety representatives during inspections.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether Health and Safety Executive inspectors seek private contact with company-appointed health and safety representatives during their visits to installations.

Mr. Nicholls: Inspectors of the Health and Safety Executive offer appointed health and safety representatives the opportunity for private discussion during visits.

Welfare Rights Claimant Advisers

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what qualifications and experience in welfare rights claimant advisers in unemployment benefit offices and jobcentres in Bradford are required to possess; how many are bi-lingual in an Asian language; what access they have to staff Asian language interpreters; and to what independent advice agencies claimants are referred.

Mr. Lee: Claimant advisers are specialist staff, trained in interviewing skills, with an extensive knowledge of the labour market and the help available to unemployed people, which they continuously update.

In particular this includes comprehensive information about benefits that can be claimed by people both in and out of work.

Although none of the claimant advisers in Bradford are bilingual in an Asian language they each have access to a member of staff in their local office on whom they can call to act as an interpreter.

The claimant advisers in Bradford refer claimants to the following independent advice agencies:

The Al Falah Community Centre
The Citizens Advice Bureau
The Bradford Corporation Benefit Shop
The Centre for Unemployment

Integrated Offices

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many integrated unemployment benefit offices/jobcentres and pilot offices have been established; where they are located; and when their evaluation is expected to be completed.

Mr. Lee: A total of 83 jobcentres and 102 unemployment benefit offices are operating an integrated employment service in the following 79 locations:

Bradford Council

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether any contingency arrangements are being made to assist people who become voluntarily or compulsorily redundant from Bradford council.

Mr. Lee: No contingency arrangements have been made. Suitable arrangements will be made once there is a clearer idea of the numbers who may become voluntarily or compulsorily redundant from Bradford council.

Benefit Shops (Bradford)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received about the closure of Bradford council's benefits shops; and what assessment he has made of the impact of such closures on the unemployment benefit offices and job centres in Bradford.

Mr. Lee [holding answer Tuesday 25 October]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received some representations about the closure of benefit shops in Bradford. Employment service staff are aware of the situation, which is being kept under close review.

Repetitive Strain Injury

Mr. Ron Leighton (Newham North-East): To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, whether he has received copies of the studies into repetitive strain injury at the University of Birmingham and the Institute of Occupational Health in Edinburgh; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Patrick Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member on Friday 22 July 1988 at column 631.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisons (Night Sanitation)

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many prisons built before 1901 night sanitation has been provided during the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available; how many cells have been taken out of service to provide such facilities; and what was the cost to public funds of the conversions during this period.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: During the past 12 months, essential refurbishment involving the closure of wings at Liverpool and Stafford prisons has been used as an opportunity to install integral sanitation for 141 prisoners at Liverpool and 100 at Stafford. The cells concerned will be out of service for about 21 months at Liverpool and about 18 months at Stafford until the total refurbishment is completed early in 1989. The installation of the integral sanitation has not been costed separately from the total refurbishment because there are so many elements common to both.

During the same period, different methods of installing integral sanitation have been tested in a number of old prisons without major refurbishment and without taking cells out of service for longer than a few weeks. The number of prisoners accommodated has not been reduced because working on only a few cells at a time makes it acceptable for the number in others to be temporarily increased. The schemes concerned are as follows:

Prison	Number of cells converted	Cost per cell £
Camp Hill (built 1910)	4	800
Northallerton	6	1,200
Nottingham	4	2,000
Pentonville	[1]8	1,400
Preston	8	800
Shepton Mallett	[2]6	1,000
Wandsworth	8	1,100

[1] Four already converted, four due to complete in two weeks.
[2] Due to complete in six weeks.

These and other similar schemes where installation has not yet been completed will be assessed during the next few months to determine which are the most suitable for extensive use.

Seat Belts

Mr. Amess To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many persons convicted of failure to wear a seat belt were (a) male and (b) female; and what is the percentage of the latter to the former, in each month since 1983;

(2) how many persons convicted of failure to wear a seat belt in the Basildon area were (a) male and (b) female; and what is the percentage of the latter to the former, in each month since 1983;

(3) how many persons were convicted of failure to wear a seat belt in each month since 1983;

(4) what is the average fine in England and Wales for failure to wear a seat belt;

(5) how many persons were convicted of failure to wear a seat belt in the Basildon area since 1983.

Mr. Douglas Hogg The information which could be provided without disproportionate cost is given in the table. Total findings of guilt for all seat belt offences are published annually in table 5 of "Offences relating to motor vehicles, England and Wales, supplementary tables", the latest issue of which relates to 1986; the issue for 1987 will be published soon. In 1986, the average fine imposed by magistrates' courts for seat belt offences was £15.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of alleged shop-lifting offences were for goods to the value of (a) under £5, (b) between £5 and £10 and (c) over £10 for each of the last six years for which statistics are available; and what was the percentage of acquittals in magistrates' courts and Crown courts, in each of the three categories, for the years concerned in (i) England and Wales and (ii) the Basildon area.

Mr. John Patten: Information about the value of goods stolen from shops for offences recorded by the police is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" (in table 2.13 of the issue for 1987, Cm. 498). It is not possible, however, from the records of court proceedings held centrally to distinguish the value of goods stolen for offences of theft from shops. Details of proceedings for such offences can be found in volumes 1 and 2 of the supplementary tables to the criminal statistics, under offence classification 46.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of shoplifting cases brought before the courts in each of the last 10 years; what were the numbers for each year of those acquitted and convicted respectively; and how many of those acquitted and convicted were facing their first criminal charge.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my hon. Friend to a question from the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner) on 4 December 1987 at columns 749-50. The supplementary tables for 1987 will be placed in the Library in about one week's time. Information about the previous court appearances, if any, of defendants proceeded against for theft from shops is not available.

Public Order

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many persons were (a) charged and (b) convicted of (i) public order offences and (ii) offences against the person in each of the last five years;

(2) how many persons were (a) charged and (b) convicted of (i) offences against the person and (ii) public order offences in the Basildon area for each of the last five years.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested in respect of England and Wales is published annually in volumes 1 and 2 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales Supplementary Tables."

Details for the Basildon area are not available, but the following table gives information for Billericay petty sessional division and Chelmsford Crown court for 1986 and 1987. Comparable data for earlier years could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will obtain and list in the Official Report the dates and places of crimes using bombs or other explosive devices that have taken place in England and Wales resulting in death or personal injury; and if he will list the casualties and the number of convictions that have been secured for each year since 1974;

(2) if he will obtain and list in the Official Report the names of organisations and individuals who claimed responsibility for crimes using bombs or other explosive devices that have taken place in England and Wales resulting in death or personal injury for each year since 1974.

Mr. John Patten: Information is not available in the form requested. Information on offences of homicide involving the use of bombs or other explosive devices is given in the following table. Information on the number of personal injuries sustained as a result of offences involving explosive devices is not readily available and could be

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the number of convictions for murder, attempted murder and manslaughter respectively, for each year since 1958.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 29 July at columns 200-201. In 1987, 166 persons were found guilty of murder, 50 of manslaughter due to diminished responsibility and 214 of other manslaughter. Information in respect of the number of persons convicted of attempted murder is given in the following table.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were convicted of crimes of violence in 1987; by what percentage this figure exceeds or is less than the comparable figure for each year since 1962; and if he has any indication of the trend of crimes of violence in the current year.

Mr. John Patten: 58,500 persons were found guilty of offences of violence in 1987. The table gives comparisons for the period 1979 to 1986. Figures for earlier years are not shown as they are not directly comparable owing to changes in counting procedures for courts proceedings which occurred at the beginning of 1979.

Statistics of notifiable offences recorded by the police, including offences of violence, are published quarterly; the most recent figures—for the year ending June 1988—were published in Home Office statistical bulletin issue 26/88, which is available in the Library.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many (a) males and (b) females have been (i) charged with and (ii) convicted of arson in each year from 1982 to the latest convenient date in (aa) England and Wales and (bb) the Basildon area;

(2) how many (a) males and (b) females have been (i) charged with and (ii) convicted of cruelty or neglect of children in each year since 1982 to the latest convenient date in (aa) England and Wales and (bb) the Basildon area;

(4) how many (a) males and (b) females have been (i) charged with and (ii) convicted of cruelty to horses, ponies or donkeys in each year since 1982 in (aa) England and Wales and (bb) the Basildon area.

Mr. John Patten: The readily available information is published annually in Volumes 1 and 2 of the supplementary tables to the "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", under offence classifications 56 (arson), 11 and 109 (cruelty to or neglect of children), and 108 (cruelty to animals). Particulars of the animals involved in offences of cruelty are not collected centrally.

Details in respect of the Basildon area are not available, but the following table gives information for, Billericay petty sessional divison and Chelmsford Crown court for 1986 and 1987. Comparable data for earlier years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

[3] Offences of arson may be tried at the magistrates' courts or the Crown Court, and the figures for persons proceeded against at magistrates' courts are not precisely comparable with the figures for those found guilty at all courts. For the Basildon area the found guilty figures also include cases proceeded against at magistrates' courts other than Billericay from which Chelmsford Crown Court tries cases.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many motoring offences were heard in magistrates' courts in (a) England and Wales and (b) the Basildon area in each of the past six years; and what proportion of all cases heard these figures represented.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information that could be provided without disproportionate cost is given in the table. From 1986, it has been published in table 13 of Volume 5 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables". The fall in proceedings for motoring offences in 1987 reflects the extension of fixed penalties in October 1986.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many mugging offences were reported in 1987; and what was the comparable figure for each year since 1980.

Mr. John Patten: The term "mugging" has no legal definition; the majority of offences of the type frequently referred to as "mugging" are recorded as offences of robbery. Information on offences of robbery recorded by the police is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" (table 2.10 of the issue for 1987, Cm. 498).

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the murder rate per million of the population in England and Wales between 1982 and 1987; what it was for the period from 1958 to 1963 on an annual basis; and if he will give similar figures for manslaughter;

(2) what was the murder rate per thousand of the population in (a) England and Wales and (b) the Basildon area between 1982 and 1987; what it was in the period from 1958 to 1963 on an annual basis; and if he will give similar figures for manslaughter.

Mr. John Patten: Information is not available in the form requested. The number of offences decided by the court to be murder or manslaughter are published annually in table 4·2 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales," copies of which are available in the Library; the figures for 1958 to 1963 and 1982 to 1987 are given in the following table. Information on homicides in the Basildon area are not available but for 1982 to 1987 figures for the Essex police force area are included; corresponding figures for the years 1958 to 1963 can only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Vandalism

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what studies have been made concerning the motivation of persons convicted of vandalism; what assessment he has made as to how far such studies are representative of the problem; and what advice he has taken from outside Her Majesty's Government of such studies.

Mr. John Patten: Early studies focusing on the psychology of those convicted of vandalism were supplanted by research which investigated the acts of vandalism committed by "normal" children and young people, because convicted vandals were judged to be unrepresentative. Lately the Home Office, in seeking to foster crime prevention activities by agencies other than central Government and the police, has taken note of work by British Telecom plc. which involved interviewing young people about telephone box vandalism. The Home Office crime prevention unit has advised London Underground Ltd. in conducting a study of those convicted of putting graffiti on the outside of trains. In deriving advice for policy and practice from studies of the motivation of vandals, due regard is taken of the biases introduced by a focus on convicted offenders, where practical reasons make such a focus unavoidable.

Unpaid Appointments

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report a list of the bodies, both official and non official, to which he has the right to make unpaid appointments.

Mr. Hurd: I refer my hon. Friend to the Home Office entry in "Public Bodies", published annually by the Cabinet Office, which lists both paid and unpaid appointments. Copies are in the Library of the House. I make no other unpaid appointments.

Prison Sentences

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the average sentences served by persons serving life sentences released in each year since 1958;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the average sentences served by persons serving life sentences for murder, released in each year since 1958.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Reliable information for 1958 to 1975 is not readily available and the readily available information is given in the following table. The average figures do not take account of the longest periods being served by some of those given life sentences following the abolition of capital punishment in 1965 who have not yet been released. They also exclude persons who have died in custody or been discharged for other reasons.

My right hon. Friend has made it clear that those convicted of the most heinous murders can normally expect to serve at least 20 years in prison and in some cases even longer; and no life sentence prisoner is released no matter how long he or she has served unless my right hon. Friend is personally as satisfied as it is reasonably possible to be that there is no risk to the community.

Abortion

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many men and women, respectively, have been proceeded against for procuring abortions under section 58 or 59 of the Offences Against the Person Act 1861, in each year since 1958;

(2) what was the percentage of those charged with procuring abortion under section 58 or 59 of the Offences Against the Person Act 1861 who pleaded guilty or not guilty in (a) a magistrates' courts, (b) Crown courts and in (i) England and Wales and (ii) the Basildon area in each year since 1958;

(3) what percentage of cases were heard in (a) magistrates' courts and (b) Crown courts in (i) England and Wales and (ii) the Basildon area concerning people on charges of procuring abortion under section 58 or 59 of the Offences Against the Person Act 1861; and what percentage, for each court, was found guilty or not guilty for each year since 1958.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) on 6 November 1987 at column 904. Reliable information on plea is not available.

Details in respect of the Basildon area are not available, but the following table gives information available to the Home Department for Billericay petty sessional division and Chelmsford Crown court for 1986 and 1987. Dangerous Driving

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many convictions there were for dangerous driving in the United Kingdom in each of the past five years;

(2) how many convictions there were for dangerous driving in the Basildon area in each of the past five years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information which could be provided without disproportionate cost is given in the table. The offence of dangerous driving was repealed in 1978.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, according to grade, the total number of people who are employed in his Department, and the equivalent figures for each year since 1982.

Mr. Hurd: Historical information on Home Office staff numbers by reference to grade is held only for a limited period. The available information is as follows

Departmental Papers

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) Green and (b) White papers his Department has produced since 1979; if he will list these in date order; in each case, whether the responses to the papers were deposited in the Library; and what was the percentage of such papers for each year which have not had their responses placed in the Library since 1980.

Mr. Hurd: The following is a list in date order of six Green and 48 White papers produced by the Home Office which have been laid before parliament since 1 January 1979. The list includes White Papers prepared in response to the reports of Select Committees but excludes Home Office annual statistical reports published as Command papers.

The Department does not hold centrally records of whether responses have been deposited in the Library.

Cosmos 1900

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps have been taken by the civil planning unit of his Department to issue guidance of radiological safety and protection measures against Cosmos 1900 or other malfunctioning nuclear powered satellites that could crash land on United Kingdom territory having lost control of their orbit.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Guidance on procedures to be followed by the emergency services in relation to a nuclear-powered satellite accident are set out in chapter 25, annex C, of the "Emergency Planning Guidance to Local Authorities", a copy of which is in the Library. This was supplemented, for Cosmos 1900, by detailed advice on operational points and communications for use if the United Kingdom were to be affected by radioactive debris. As the nuclear reactor was ejected from Cosmos 1900, there was no call for specific advice on radiological protection, although precautionary guidance was given through the media about avoiding contact with any debris and alerting the emergency services. Guidance for any future incident would depend on the composition and state of the reactor, the effectiveness of automatic safety systems, and the extent of any threat posed to the United Kingdom.

Nuclear Accidents

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received any representations in the past few months from the President of the County Emergency Planning Officer's Society regarding the setting up by his Department of an interdisciplinary working party to provide a forum for exchange of ideas and information on nuclear accident emergencies.

Mr. Hurd: Yes, the proposal is being considered in consultation with other Departments.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to provide a review by his departmental scientists of the recent report by the Royal Institute of British Architects on nuclear disasters and the built environment, with regard to evaluating its utility for improving current emergency planning arrangements for nuclear accidents.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have been asked to reply.

Emergency plans for civil nuclear installations are prescribed by the licensing procedures. The licensing authority, the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate, takes account of relevant information available to it. I understand that the report referred to has not yet been published.

DEFENCE

Crown Proceedings Act

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many successful claims have been made against the Crown by service men under the Crown Proceedings Act since its amendment in 1986; how many such cases went to court; how many such cases were settled out of court; and what was the average legal costs to his Department for (a) cases taken to court, and (b) cases settled out of court.

Mr. Freeman: Since the passage into law on 15 May 1987 of the Crown Proceedings (Armed Forces) Act 1987, a total of 12 claims have so far been concluded resulting in payments being made by the Ministry of Defence. All 12 cases were settled out of court, involving legal costs totalling £127. A further 10 claims have been settled on an ex-gratia basis arising from incidents during the period between 8 December 1986, when the Government announced their intention to repeal section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947, and 15 May 1987; and legal costs totalling £1,474 were incurred in respect of these 10 claims.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide the latest available figures for his Department for (a) numbers of staff in receipt of local pay additions, by grade, (b) location of those offices awarding local pay additions and (c) annual cost.

Mr. Sainsbury: Local pay additions in the Ministry of Defence are given to 1,278 executive officers, 26 typing managers, 65 senior personal secretaries, 427 personal secretaries, 2,784 administrative officers, 1,650 administrative assistants and 675 typists. Officers in all these grades in inner London receive the payment as do administrative officers, administrative assistants, personal secretaries and typists at Aldershot military town, Farnborough, High Wycombe, Northwood, Pyestock, Stanmore, Wandsworth and West Byfleet. The annual cost is estimated to be £3,420,000.

Departmental Contractors

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list in the Official Report the contractors, foreign or otherwise, which were paid £5 million or more by his Department in 1986-87 and which are not included in the list on page 15 of "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988 (Volume 2)".

Mr. Sainsbury: The table on page 15 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988 (Volume 2)" lists United Kingdom-based contractors which were paid £5 million or more by the MoD in 1986-87. Foreign-based contractors which were paid £5 million or more are as listed:

Aerospatiale SNI (France)
McDonnell Douglas Corporation (USA)

Hollandse Signaalapparaten BV (Netherlands)
Aral Aktiengesellschaft (Germany)
Hagglund & Soner AB (Sweden)
The Singer Company (USA)

In accordance with the practice of successive Governments not all United Kingdom-based contractors would qualify for appearance in the published list for security reasons.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list in the Official Report the precise amounts paid to each of the following contractors by his Department in 1986-87 (a) The General Electric Co. plc., (b) Rolls-Royce Ltd., (c) British Telecommunications plc., (d) Lucas Industries plc., (e) BTR plc., (f) Austin Rover Group Ltd., (g) United Scientific Holdings plc., (h) Courtaulds plc. and (i) Massey Ferguson Holdings Ltd.

Mr. Sainsbury: The payments made to each of these companies in the year ended 31 March 1987 in respect of headquarter contracts were as follows:

	£ million
The General Electric Co. plc.	850·0
Rolls-Royce Ltd.	425·0
British Telecommunications plc.	56·0
Lucas Industries plc.	61·0
BTR plc.	27·0
Austin Rover Group Ltd.	47·0
United Scientific Holdings plc.	38·0
Courtaulds plc.	7·5
Massey Ferguson Holdings Ltd.	7·5

Nuclear Materials

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, Official Report, column 351, 27 July, on nuclear materials requirements, in each case, a-e, mentioned, it would not be in the national interest to publish the details of the various nuclear materials requirements.

Mr. Sainsbury: It would not be in the national interest to publish the details of the various nuclear materials requirements because the information would be of value to a potential enemy.

Franco-British Nuclear Missile

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if discussions with France over the joint Franco-British development of a new air-launched stand-off nuclear missile system are still continuing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: We are continuing to study a number of options for the replacement of the United Kingdom's free-fall nuclear bomb. A collaborative approach to the development of a successor system remains highly attractive and we are keeping closely in touch with both the United States and French Governments. We expect our continuing discussions with the French Government to concentrate on the future potential of and developments in the technology associated with current systems.

European Strategy Group (Studies)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the study by the European strategy group, "The Gorbachev Challenge" and "European Security," published by Nomos in Baden-Baden.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence library already possesses a copy of this publication.

Nuclear Test Ban Treaty

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out a list of serious verification problems remaining to be resolved before a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty could be concluded, to which general reference is made in paragraph 210, on page 11 of the Statement on the Defence Estimates, 1988, volume 1, Cm. 344-1.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government's approach to the seismic verification of treaties constraining nuclear testing was set out in their paper submitted to the conference on disarmament in 1985 (CD 610), a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment has been made by scientists at the Blacknest research centre into the implications for verification of a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty of the United States-Union of Soviet Socialist Republics joint verification experiment test, conducted at the Nevada test site on 17 August.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The joint verification experiment carried out at the Nevada test site in August was designed to assess verification techniques to enable the ratification of the threshold test ban treaty. The test was neither designed nor intended to make progress towards the verification of a comprehensive test ban.

Aircraft Accidents

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many aircraft have been destroyed as a result of accidents by (a) Royal Air Force and (b) Royal Navy since the figures of total numbers allocated were published in the Annual Statement on the Defence Estimates, 1988; if he will list the accidents by date and aircraft type; and what is the estimated replacement cost for these aircraft.

Mr. Freeman: Accidents which have resulted in the loss or destruction of Royal Navy and Royal Air Force aircraft from 1 January 1988 to 25 October are as follows:

Date	Service	Aircraft
22 January 1988	RAF	Hawk
3 February 1988	RN	Sea King
2 March 1988	RAF	Bulldog
10 March 1988	RN	Lynx

Date	Service	Aircraft
23 September 1988	RAF	Phantom
13 October 1988	RN	Sea King

It is not our practice to publish unit production costs of equipments. For information on the costs of major equipment projects I refer the hon. Member to table 32 of volume 2 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates" (Cm. 344-II).

Nuclear Strategic Forces

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the allocation of funds for nuclear strategic forces, as listed in table 2.3 in the Analysis of the Defence Budget on page 10 of volume 2 of the Statement on the Defence Estimates has risen from the 1982-83 figure of £327 million to the 1988-89 figure of £1,072 million.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The increased expenditure on nuclear strategic forces reflects the build up of Trident expenditure.

Budget (Funds Allocation)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out in the Official Report the specific areas of the allocation of funds in the defence budget covered by the phrases "other vessels", "other areas", "other aircraft", "other electronics", "other research and development", "other repair and maintenance" and "other support services" in table 2.3 of the analysis of the defence budget by programme section of the finance and trade chapter in the Statement on the Defence Estimates, 1988, volume 2, Cm. 344-II.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Table 2.3 of volume 2 of the statement attributes expenditure between the main elements of the defence programme. Expenditure which cannot readily be attributed in this way is included under general headings such as "other vessels", which includes, for example, survey ships and HMY Britannia; "other areas" which includes Belize; "other aircraft" which includes Andovers and Devons; "other electronics" which includes navigation and avionic systems; "other R and D" which includes management of R and D, and work undertaken for other Government Departments; "other repair and maintenance" which includes REME work, and repairs to Her Majesty's ships other than at Devonport or Rosyth; and "other support services" which includes defence attaches, and NATO infrastructure costs.

Warsaw Pact Central Front Forces

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the source of the data on the Warsaw pact central front forces as listed in figure 15, on page 61 of volume 1 of the Statement on the Defence Estimates, 1988, Cm. 344-I.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have long been pressing the Warsaw pact in the mutual and balanced force reductions talks to publish proper data on its conventional forces in central Europe. In view of its continuing failure to do this, the figures for the Warsaw pact forces in Poland, Czechoslovakia and the German Democratic Republic, listed in figure 15 of volume 1 on the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988" (Cm. 344-I) are based on internal estimates produced by the Ministry of Defence.

Defence Estimates

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the source of information on which the statements on pages 56-59 of the annual Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988 that the Soviet Union is probably ahead of the West in specific charged-particle devices, some areas of high energy physics, the use of titanium for submarine construction and the development of mobile ground-based long-range ballistic missiles;

(2) what is the latest information he possesses on the location and site of the production and storage facilities in the Soviet Union of (a) chemical and toxic agents, (b) nuclear warheads, (c) ballistic missile delivery vehicles, (d) terrain contour guided missile vehicles and (e) strategic defence technologies.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not the policy of Her Majesty's Government to give details of such information.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what considerations underlie his policy on publication of line by line costings in the annual Statement on the Defence Estimates.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The costings in the "Statement on the Defence Estimates" are intended, within the constraints of cost and security, to provide Parliament and the public with information relevant to the Government's defence policies.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the sources of information on which figures for Warsaw pact capability are produced in figures 16, 17, 18 and 19 of the Statement on the Defence Estimates, 1988, Cm. 344-1.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Warsaw pact does not for the most part produce reliable figures for its military forces. The figures for Warsaw pact capabilities provided in figures 16, 17, 18 and 19 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988" (Cm. 344-I) are therefore based principally on internal estimates produced by the Ministry of Defence. The Soviet Union did, however, provide data in connection with the INF treaty and this has been incorporated into figures 18 and 19.

Mr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what basis the 50 per cent. real term growth in Soviet expenditure since 1970 has been calculated, to which reference is made in paragraph 623, page 68 of volume 1 of the Statement on Defence Estimates 1988, Cm.344-1.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The statement on Soviet defence expenditure in paragraph 623 on page 68 of volume 1 "Statement on Defence Estimates 1988" (Cm. 344-1) is based on estimates produced by the Ministry of Defence of total Soviet defence outlays in roubles. In addition, the NATO definition of defence expenditure is used, since the published Soviet defence budget excludes expenditure on items such as the research, development and procurement of equipment.

NATO (Defence Budgets)

Mr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to which Governments of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation member states currently have a policy of publishing line by line costing of their annual defence budgets.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: NATO member states provide each other with classified information in a standard format on the details of their annual defence budgets. Published information, on the other hand, varies considerably beween countries, and my Department does not have a comprehensive knowledge of the policy of each country towards publication.

Chemical Weapons

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the basis of the information for the statement on page 69 of volume 1 of the Statement on the Defence Estimates, 1988, Cm. 344-1, that the Soviet Union commands the world's largest, most comprehensive and advanced capability for chemical and toxic agent warfare;

(2) if he will set out the basis on which Her Majesty's Government have judged the Soviet Union to have a substantial chemical weapons advance over the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no chemical weapons declared to NATO although the United States has a limited national retaliatory capability. By contrast, we assess that the Soviet Union has a massive offensive CW capability. It is not the policy of Her Majesty's Government to give details of such information.

Radiation (Leukaemia)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what evidence was presented by his Department to the Committee on the Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment (COMARE) study on the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment, Aldermaston and Royal Ordnance Burghfield; what evaluation has been made of extant evidence linking leukaemias to the operation at these two plants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information supplied by my Department to COMARE to assist its examination of the evidence available into the incidence of cancer in the west Berkshire and north Hampshire area in which AWRE and ROF (Burghfield) are situated, (now known respectively as AWE Aldermaston and AWE Burghfield) has included data on liquid and airborne radioactive discharges as well as other detailed information on aspects of the operations involving radioactive and toxic materials conducted at the two sites, covering the whole period of their use as nuclear facilities. COMARE has been asked to evaluate the available epidemiological evidence on the incidence of childhood cancer, including leukaemia, in the area and comment on possible causes.

Once COMARE has completed its report, it will be published. I do not know what it will contain and in any event would not wish to pre-empt its findings.

South Africa (Uranium)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications of full membership by the Republic of South Africa of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty (NPT) for the procurement of non-safeguarded uranium from South Africa for defence purposes.

Mr. Sainsbury: None.

Nuclear Tests (Verification)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if departmental scientists or scientific consultants to his Department have made any assessment of the report published in May by the United States Congress Office of Technology assessment on the comparative merits of using seismological verification techniques at distances many hundreds of miles from a nuclear test, against near-explosion use of the corrtex hydrodynamic measuring instrument.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department has studied the report with interest. However, the continuous reflectometry for radius versus time experiments (CORRTEX) verification technique is designed to obtain accurate yield assessments of known and notified nuclear tests through the co-operation of both parties to any treaty in which the use of CORRTEX is permitted. The technique is of no value in monitoring unnotified tests, particularly if conducted away from known testing sites.

Nuclear Submarines

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contracts have been placed by the Royal Navy for the procurement of long-term storage tanks for the Devonport royal naval dockyard stockpile of radioactive ion exchange resins from the refitting of nuclear submarines.

Mr. Sainsbury: No such contracts have been placed by the Royal Navy. Responsibility for providing suitable containers in which to store the spent resin falls to the dockyard contractor.

Nuclear-free Campaigners

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the confrontations between campaigners for nuclear-free seas in inflatable dinghies and Royal Navy ships at Scottish ports in July.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: On 12 July, at Rosyth, six people in inflatable craft were apprehended by Ministry of Defence police and charged with offences under local byelaws. On 21 July, at Holy Loch, three people were apprehended by Ministry of Defence police on board a Royal Maritime Auxiliary Service vessel, and charged with similar offences. There were no confrontations with Royal Navy ships.

Unsafeguarded Uranium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the United Kingdom last received a consignment of unsafeguarded uranium for defence purposes; and from which country the uranium was imported.

Mr. Sainsbury: Uranium ore concentrate for defence purposes was last delivered to the United Kingdom in 1973. Further details cannot be given.

East-West Military Balance

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, in the light of the uncertainties, counting problems and difficulties in reaching reliable figures for Warsaw pact forces and military capabilities, as set out on page 56 of the 1988 Statement on the Defence Estimates, he will make it his policy to instruct Ministers and spokespeople for his Department to ensure such qualifying statements are included in all speeches made or information materials produced on behalf of his Department when addressing the question of the East-West military balance.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As the essay on the conventional balance on pages 56 to 59 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988" (Cm. 344-I) makes clear, although there is scope for assessments to differ in detail, the estimates produced by the Ministry of Defence and by the most reputable independent bodies all show broadly the same picture of massive Warsaw pact numerical superiority in conventional ground and air forces. This central point has been made by successive Governments, and needs no qualification.

Atomic Weapons Establishment, Cardiff

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total income from non-defence related work at the Atomic Weapons Establishment, Cardiff, plant in each of the past five years.

Mr. Sainsbury: The figures are as follows:

1983-84	85,761
1984-85	163,789
1985-86	141,212
1986-87	93,046
1987-88	93,661

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies have been undertaken into the potential for undertaking non-defence related work at the Atomic Weapons Establishment, Cardiff, in the past five years.

Mr. Sainsbury: Some non-defence work is carried out. No such studies have been undertaken however.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

OECD

1. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster with which Organisation for Economic Co-operation and development countries the United Kingdom is running a trade surplus.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the 12 months to August, of the 23 other countries in the OECD, the United Kingdom had surpluses on visible trade with, in descending order of magnitude, the United States, Australia, the Irish Republic, Canada, Spain and Greece.

Private Industry (Assistance)

5. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list for each year since 1983 the total level of government financial assistance given to private industry under aid and job creation schemes and his estimates of the total number of jobs created by this assistance.

Mr. Newton: Expenditure on regional assistance in Great Britain in the five financial years beginning April 1983 was £730 million, £710 million, £690 million, £860 million and £660 million respectively. The programmes making up these totals are being listed in the Official Report. It is too soon to estimate the net effect of this expenditure on employment in the assisted areas. In gross terms some 185,000 jobs were created or safeguarded by projects for which offers of regional selective assistance were made from 1983-84 onwards, and 97,000 were created in projects for which payments were made under the revised regional development grant scheme.

In addition, the Government have directly assisted job creation and safeguarding through its network of inner city task forces in England; through the urban programme; and through the employment measures of the Department of Employment.

The annual figures quoted in the reply comprise expenditure under the following:

Original and revised Regional Development Grant schemes
Regional Selective Assistance project and training grants
Business Improvement Services Scheme (Better Business Services and Better Technical Services in Scotland)
Exchange Risk Guarantee Scheme
English Industrial Estates Corporation and the Scottish and Welsh Development Agencies
Highland and Islands Development Board and the Mid-Wales Development Board

Balance of Trade

15. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the latest cumulative figures for 1988 on the balance of trade.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the eight months ended August there was a cumulative deficit on visible trade of £12·8 billion.

EC (Trade)

22. Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster with which EEC countries the United Kingdom is currently running a trade surplus.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the twelve months to August the United Kingdom had surpluses on visible trade with Greece, the Irish Republic and Spain.

43. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster with which EEC countries the United Kingdom is currently running a trade deficit.

27. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster with which EEC countries the United Kingdom is currently running a trade deficit.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the twelve months to August the United Kingdom had deficits on visible trade with Belgium/Luxembourg, Denmark, Federal Republic of Germany, France, Italy, the Netherlands and Portugal.

Knitwear

23. Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether, in the light of the closure of the knitwear section of the Corah factory, he will take steps to promote the knitwear industry in the city of Leicester.

Mr. Newton: Eligible firms are able to apply for assistance under the enterprise initiative. They may, for example, obtain help for exporting and consultancy support for further development of their business.

The knitwear industry both in Leicester and elsewhere, also benefits from the provisions of the multi-fibre arrangement and other trade agreements limiting low cost imports.

Industrial Prospects

24. Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the prospects for industry in the north-west.

Mr. Newton: I would expect the north-west to share in the continuing growth in United Kingdom output and investment.

Self-regulatory Organisations

25. Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met the chairmen of the self-regulatory organisations created under the Financial Services Act; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Maude: I meet the chairman of the various self-regulatory organisations recognised under the Financial Services Act from time to time when there is either a specific need or a suitable opportunity. The subjects discussed range widely over the whole area of regulation of financial services.

Barlow Clowes

26. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a further statement on the Barlow Clowes case, with particular reference to Sir Godfray Le Quesne's inquiry.

Mr. Maude: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 20 October at columns 1005-1009.

Inner City Task Forces

28. Mr. Hind: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the progress of the inner city task forces.

Mr. Newton: The inner city task forces are central to the Government's action for cities. Their objectives are to secure more jobs for local people, to improve their employability, to encourage and facilitate local enterprise, and to support environmental and crime prevention initiatives which can contribute to these objectives.

Since the task forces began their work in 1986, they have supported more than 900 projects. These have generated or safeguarded about 4,000 jobs, facilitated around 20,000 training places and involved around 400 companies.

37. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has plans to establish any more inner city task forces.

Mr. Newton: I have no plans at present to establish any more task forces. However task forces are not meant to be a permanent feature in their areas and the number and locations of them may change.

Post Office Users Council

29. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met representatives of the Post Office Users Council; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Forth: The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Industry and Consumer Affairs met with the chairman and secretary of the Post Office Users Council for Scotland on 4 May. A number of issues were discussed, ranging from the organisation and staffing of the council itself to more general matters of Post Office operations in Scotland.

Mergers

30. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has any proposals to change his criteria for referring merger plans to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Maude: No. On 3 March 1988 the Government published the results of a review of law and policy on merger control. We concluded that the effect of a merger on competition should continue to be the main criterion in deciding whether to make a reference to the MMC. We see no justification for a further review of this policy.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will seek to expand the role of the Office of Fair Trading to enable it to consider not only the potential adverse consequences of a proposed merger, but the potential enhancement to competition of a proposed merger; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: In advising my right hon. and noble Friend whether to refer a merger to the MMC, the Office of Fair Trading already takes into account the effect of the merger on competition, whether beneficial or adverse. This is consistent with my right hon. and noble Friend's policy of making competition the main criterion in deciding whether or not to refer. However, each case must be judged on its merits. It is no part of the function of merger control policy to seek to judge the relative merits of different mergers.

European Single Market

31. Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what monitoring he has undertaken of the level of awareness among business men of the single market achieved by his Department's "Europe—Open for Business" campaign.

Mr. Maude: Nine out of ten firms in this country are now aware of the significance of the single market. Since the campaign was announced DTI has had a substantial evaluation exercise to monitor the effectiveness of the campaign.

46. Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on progress with regard to arrangements made by his Department to assist British firms to take full advantage of the completion of the internal market in 1992.

Mr. Maude: Nine out of ten firms in this country are now aware of the significance of the single market challenge. Firms throughout the country need to take action to prepare for it. DTI's "Europe—Open for Business" campaign provides the most comprehensive information service available to business anywhere in the Community.

59. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a further statement on progress being made by the United Kingdom and the other member states on measures to create the single internal market by 1992.

Mr. Maude: The Government remain strongly committed to the completion of the single European market by the end of 1992. It will bring major benefits to business and consumers.

Over 60 separate single market measures have been agreed this year alone, including major proposals such as the liberalisation of capital movements, the mutual recognition of professional qualifications and the liberalisation of international road haulage. This brings the total number of measures agreed since 1985 to some 200.

At the European Council at Hanover in June, EC Heads of Government set four priorities for future work —public procurement, standards, financial services and intellectual property. All these are United Kingdom priorities. We also wish to see early progress on telecommunications, transport and food law.

I represented the United Kingdom at the first International Market Council of the Greek Presidency on 14 October. The council agreed six single market measures including a directive to ensure greater transparency in public works procurement; a directive to facilitate free trade in electrical apparatus by ensuring that it does not produce or receive interference; and measures to cut barriers to trade in fruit juices, jams, motorcycle parts and certain fertilisers. The council also discussed two further food law harmonisation directives, relating to labelling and foods for particular nutritional uses, and there was a preliminary discussion of a Commission memorandum about proposals for a European company statute.

We are maintaining rapid progress towards the completion of the single market. We will continue to make sure that markets are opened up in ways which encourage enterprise and increased competitiveness.

Teachers (Industrial Experience)

32. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps have been taken by the education unit within his Department to ensure that school teachers receive some experience of British industry.

Mr. Forth: One of the aims of the enterprise and education initiative, which was launched on 28 September, is that 10 per cent. of teachers should have the opportunity to gain experience of the world of business. DTI is developing a teacher placement programme with advice from education and industry, and it is proposed to have it in place early in 1989.

The programme will be completely voluntary and will supplement and increase any local teacher placement activity which may already be taking place.

Steel Industry

33. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a further statement on the prospects for the steel industry.

Mr. Newton: The steel sector is, of course, affected by the general level of economic activity, but demand for steel continues to be strong in key areas such as the construction, automotive and packaging industries.

Manufacturing (Productivity)

34. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the latest figures he has for the productivity of manufacturing industry; and what were the comparable figures one year ago.

Mr. Maude: On the basis of 1985 = 100 the output per person employed in manufacturing industry rose from 113·1 in August 1987 to 121·5 in August 1988.

Japan

35. Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what initiatives his Department has undertaken to advise and support British businesses wanting to enter Japanese markets.

Mr. Alan Clark: The opportunity Japan campaign, launched earlier this year by my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, aims to heighten United Kingdom companies' awareness of the increasing opportunities offered by the Japanese market and to stress the arguments for tackling it now with appropriate long term commitment.

Over 2,000 business leaders have been briefed by the campaign to date. An action line has been established within the DTI's exports to Japan unit to facilitate rapid access to the very considerable range of information and advice available. Its number is (01) 215 4269.

Insurance Brokers Registration Council

36. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met the chairman and secretary of the Insurance Brokers Registration Council; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Maude: I last met the chairman and registrar of the Insurance Brokers Registration Council on 5 May 1988 when we discussed the regulation of general insurance intermediaries.

Trade and Industry (Wales)

38. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on his Department's responsibilities for trade and industry in Wales.

Mr. Forth: The responsibilities of the Department of Trade and Industry extend to Wales. In matters of regional industrial policy, operational responsibility in Wales lies with the Secretary of State for Wales and the Welsh Office.

Competitiveness

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has recently received on Britain's competitiveness and its effect on trade in manufactures.

Mr. Alan Clark: Most contacts which my Department has with industry and commerce involve matters having a bearing on United Kingdom competitiveness.

Financial Services

40. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what estimate he has of the contribution made to Britain's economy by the financial services industry.

Mr. Maude: The financial services industry makes a large and growing contribution to the economy of the United Kingdom. In 1987 it employed approximately 1·2 million people, some 5 per cent. of all United Kingdom employment; it accounted for about 10 per cent. of the total domestic output of the United Kingdom economy; it contributed a surplus of over £9 billion to the current account of the balance of payments.

Overseas Companies (Investment)

41. Mr. Squire: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many overseas companies have set up operations in Britain; and what is his estimate of how many jobs such overseas investment has created and is sustaining.

Mr. Alan Clark: Since my Department's Invest in Britain bureau started formally recording individual investment projects in 1979, there have been 2,434. These include the establishment of a new business, the expansion or acquisition of an existing business, and involvement in joint venture. Altogether, from the information provided by the companies themselves, these have been responsible for the creation of nearly 160,000 jobs and, since 1983, are known to have safeguarded some 95,000 others.

Manufacturing Output

42. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what estimates he has made of growth in manufacturing output in the coming year.

Mr. Maude: The Chancellor of the Exchequer will be publishing a new set of forecasts in the Autumn Statement.

Venture Capital Industry

44. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the current situation of Britain's venture capital industry.

Mr. Newton: The British venture capital industry has grown rapidly in recent years and is making a significant contribution to financing the development of new and growing businesses.

Engineering Products

45. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the balance of trade for engineering products for the most recent period for which figures are available; and what was the comparable figure three years earlier.

Mr. Alan Clark: The balance of trade in engineering products (engineering products are defined as SITC 71-77) for the year to date and for the comparable period of 1985 is as follows:

Overseas Trade Statistics basis seasonally adjusted

	£ million
1988 January to August	−1,992
1985 January to August	−249

North-East (Overseas Investment)

47. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his estimate of the extent of overseas investment in the economy of the north-east, and of how many jobs it is supporting there.

Mr. Alan Clark: The latest figures available for capital expenditure by overseas companies for manufacturing activities in north England—which includes Tyne and Wear, Cleveland, Durham, Northumberland and Cumbria—is:

	£ million
1983	71·7
1984	106·3
1985	124·6
1986	104·0

In 1986 this supported a total of 35,300 jobs.

Source: Business Monitor, Report on the Census of Production, Summary Tables, PA 1002.

Manufacturing Investment

48. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the latest figure for manufacturing investment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Revised estimates of investment in the second quarter of 1988—the most recent available—together with other investment figures were published on 15 September 1988 in the form of a press release. The estimate for manufacturing industry, including leased assets, is £2·9 billion at 1985 prices and seasonally adjusted —the highest quarterly figure recorded.

Manufactures

49. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what further estimate he has made of the likely trade balance in manufactures for the current year.

Mr. Alan Clark: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer will publish his forecast of trade balances with his Autumn Statement in the usual way.

Estate Agents

50. Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to implement all the provisions of the Estate Agents Act 1979.

Mr. Forth: I have no immediate plans to implement sections 16, 17, 19 and 22 of the Estate Agents Act 1979.

However I am currently exploring with the leading estate agency bodies the scope for self-regulatory action by the trade to supplement the existing consumer protection provisions of the Act.

Manufacturing (Leicester)

51. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proposals he has to assist manufacturing industry in Leicester in the light of recent closures of local manufacturing firms.

Mr. Newton: Industry in Leicester, as in all parts of the country, can benefit from assistance offered under the enterprise initiative. In addition, firms located in the Leicester urban programme area can benefit from higher levels of support for consultancy projects.

Competition and Mergers

52. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received concerning his policies on competition and mergers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: My Department has received, and continues to receive, many representations from hon. Members and others expressing a wide range of views.

Mergers

53. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a further statement on mergers policy.

Mr. Maude: As recently as 3 March 1988 the Government published the results of a review of law and policy on merger control. We concluded that the effect of a merger on competition should continue to be the main criterion in deciding whether to make a reference to the MMC.

Japanese Cars (Imports)

54. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proposals he has received from the EEC about curbs on the imports of Japanese cars; what is the purpose of such proposals; and if cars manufactured in the United Kingdom by Japanese firms will be affected.

Mr. Alan Clark: The European Commission has not put forward proposals for future policy towards imports of Japanese cars in the Community.

Company Bids

55. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will introduce legislation to provide that a mandatory offer shall be made for a company when a person or persons acting in concert own or control 10 per cent. or more of a company's voting shares.

Mr. Maude: No. The City code on takeovers and mergers requires an offer to be made at a 30 per cent. holding, at which point control is deemed to be obtained. I do not favour reducing the threshold to 10 per cent., nor embodying the requirement in legislation.

British Steel

56. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he now expects to be able to transfer British Steel to the private sector.

Mr. Newton: Her Majesty's Government intend to transfer British Steel to the private sector in the second half of this November. A pathfinder prospectus will be issued on 28 October.

Commercial Leases

57. Mr. Speller: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to review consumer protection policy and legislation as it relates to tenants and leaseholders in the light of complaints about commercial leases containing onerous provisions in respect of future rent increases; what representations he has received on this matter about the activities of Blue Dolphin Fish Restaurants Ltd.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Questions relating to matters involving commercial leases, tenancy and rent are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Competitiveness

58. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how the competitiveness of (a) British and (b) West German industry has changed in the last year.

Mr. Newton: There is no single satisfactory measure of competitiveness since price and non-price factors are both important. The only reliable indicator of all-round competitiveness is a country's share of world trade. Between 1986 and 1987 the United Kingdom increased its share of the value of exports of manufactures of the main manufacturing countries from 7·6 per cent. to 8·1 per cent. and West Germany from 20·7 per cent. to 21·5 per cent.

Aerospace Products

60. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will review the categories by which sales of aerospace products are classified for statistical purposes.

Mr. Newton: The Department undertakes regular reviews of the product classifications for all manufacturing industries. The review of the aerospace industry has recently been completed. The first results on the new basis have just been published in the Business Monitor PQ 3640. There are no plans for any immediate further review of this industry.

International Textiles Policies (Study)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement outlining the reasons for the need to commission an independent study of the effect of international textiles and clothing trading policies in the United Kingdom economy; what was its precise terms of reference; who is undertaking the study; and what it is expected to cost.

Mr. Alan Clark: The study was commissioned to help the Government play a full part in future international discussions covering trade in textiles and clothing. These include current GATT negotiations and future negotiations on the multi-fibre arrangement, the current phase of which extends to 1991. The study will assess the economic impact of the mult-fibre arrangment and the associated voluntary agreements on the United Kingdom textiles and clothing industries and on the economy more widely, including United Kingdom consumers of such products.

Professor Silberston has been asked to look at the costs and benefits of protection for a number of sectors within the textile and clothing industries. Apparel will be distinguished from non-apparel and the group 1 products (the most sensitive categories under the MFA) will be assessed separately.

Particular emphasis is to be placed on developments since 1984, which was the terminal date for the previous study ("The Multi-Fibre Arrangement and the United Kingdom Economy") carried out by Professor Silberston for the Department. The study will consider the effects of both protection of the United Kingdom market and the implications for United Kingdom exports of protection in major overseas markets. The economic effects of proposals now being put forward for the future development of international trade in textiles and clothing will also be considered.

Professor Aubrey Silberston, Emeritus Professor in the University of London, will undertake the study. The total cost of the work, which will take some 10 months, is expected to be about £70,000.

Motor Vehicles (Purchaser Protection)

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has any plans to seek to amend the Supply of Goods Act to give greater protection to the buyers of new or second-hand cars against the manufacturers or sellers of such vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: In their report on the Sale and Supply of Goods (Cm. 137, May 1987), the Law Commission and the Scottish Law Commission proposed changes to the Sale of Goods Act 1979 which applies to all goods including new and second-hand cars. The Government have consulted widely on the Commissions' proposals and hopes to announce their intentions in the very near future.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has about the law protecting purchasers of cars in the United States with particular reference to the right to money back in cases of defects; if he has any plans to introduce similiar legislation in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I understand that laws in the United States known as "Lemon Laws" typically provide that if defects appear in a new vehicle within a certain time (often one year) or certain mileage after delivery, and the vehicle is still defective after it has been submitted to four attempts at repair, the manufacturer must replace the vehicle with a comparable one or refund the purchase price to the consumer, less a reasonable allowance for use. I have no present plans to introduce similar legislation in the United Kingdom.

Incorporation

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on proposals to enable a firm to incorporate itself as a European company and on his assessment of the implications of this for British companies; and whether United Kingdom tax and legal provisions would continue to apply to such a company.

Mr. Maude: The European Commission has invited comments from the Council of Ministers, the European Parliament and both sides of industry on an outline proposal for a European company statute. This would be a new set of laws to be applicable, if the companies concerned so wished, to companies formed by the joining together of two or more existing companies from different member states. The resultant "European company" would be governed partly by a new set of laws to be drafted and included in the statute and partly by the national laws of the relevant member states.

The Commission's memorandum suggests that a central feature of the statute should be a legal requirement that, subject to the agreement of the workers, a European company must have one of three alternative forms of employee participation described in the memorandum.

In order to assist the Government in forming a view on these proposals, the Department of Employment and the Department of Trade and Industry have jointly issued a consultation document.

Although all the responses to that consultation have not yet been received and analysed, the preliminary indications are that British companies do not in general see a need for such a statute; they do not appear to have problems in operating across borders which would be helped materially by the proposals and few would be likely to take up the option to use this new form of joining with other companies.

It is clear that the overwhelming majority of British companies also share the Government's view that it is wrong in principle to set out specific requirements in legislation for employee participation. The Government are committed to the concept of employers informing and consulting their employees but it must be for those employers and employees to determine the form of employee involvement which best suits their particular circumstances.

If the Commission's proposals were to go ahead, extensive discussions between all member states and the Commission would be necessary before the application of tax and legal provisions could be established. As I have already indicated, the outline proposal is that some aspects would be covered by provisions—yet to be drafted—in the statute and some by national law.

Foreign Investors

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will make it his policy to set a ceiling on the level of shareholding which foreign-owned or based companies will be permitted to hold in British Steel after privatisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: For a limited period following privatisation, individual shareholdings in British Steel (or shareholdings held by persons acting in concert) will be restricted by the company's articles to 15 per cent. of the ordinary shares in British Steel. These provisions are protected by a special share held by the Government, and cannot be changed without the Government's prior consent. The arrangements will remain in force until 31 December 1993.

The provisions apply irrespective of nationality. The Government have made it clear that in the case of British Steel they see no grounds for discriminating between shareholders on the basis of nationality.

Company Law Reform

Mr. Stern: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to bring forward proposals for the reform of company law.

Mr. Maude: My Department intends to introduce legislation at the earliest opportunity.

Consumer Credit Licensing

Mr. Curry: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the system of consumer credit licensing under the Consumer Credit Act 1974.

Mr. Maude: My Department has been reviewing the operation of consumer credit licensing and I have concluded that there should be greater powers for the authorities to take swift action against business practices which are a threat to the consumer.

My Department is therefore issuing today a consultation document containing proposals to make changes to the current licensing system and to give the Director General of Fair Trading more flexible and appropriate powers of enforcement. These will include the power to prohibit a business from trading with immediate effect where necessary, to seek information from businesses, and to attach conditions to a licence. I am also considering the removal of the current exemption from licensing of businesses not lending more than £30, which has been argued to be a barrier to effective enforcement of the Act against illegal moneylenders.

In the light of these changes I propose also that in future only lenders and hirers will automatically need to be licensed by OFT, and that in the exercise of his powers the DGFT will be able to take into account the activities of ancillary credit businesses, such as debt collectors, employed by lenders and hirers. Ancillary credit businesses will have to apply for a licence if the DGFT has reason to believe that they represent a threat to consumers; for instance, if their controllers have previously been refused a licence or have certain convictions or if their trading practices give rise to concern. At present, licences need to be renewed only after 15 years. I propose that in future licences should run for no more than three years.

I believe that these changes will focus regulatory resources where they are most needed, on those who pose a threat to consumers, while relieving a significant administrative burden on a wide range of law-abiding businesses.

My Department is seeking comments on these proposals before 2 December.

Regional Aid

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what initiatives are planned by his Department to increase the efficacy of the Government's regional aid programme.

Mr. Newton: An effective range of measures designed to encourage enterprise and economic growth in all parts of the country is available from DTI under the Enterprise Initiative. Extra help is already offered to firms in assisted areas and urban programme areas under the regional initiative.

North East Shipbuilders Ltd

Mr. Maples: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the latest position on the plans for the disposal of North East Shipbuilders Ltd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: British Shipbuilders received a number of bids for NESL by the deadline of 30 September. These are still being evaluated. Further additional information has also been submitted by some of the bidders, including a recent amendment to one of the bids. The Government are concerned to ensure that every avenue has been explored before a decision is taken. I have therefore asked John Lister to invite each of the bidders to submit any final amendments that they may wish to have considered by noon on Friday 28 October. I shall make a full statement to the House as soon as the evaluation is complete.

TRANSPORT

M1 Traffic Flow

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the road usage measured by vehicles per hour along the stretch of the M1 between Barlborough and Heath in Derbyshire.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department records road usage in terms of average annual daily traffic. This is the total number of vehicles in one year divided by 365. Hourly figures are not available. In 1987 the traffic flow expressed as AADT on the M1 between Barlborough and Heath was 57,000 vehicles. This figure includes traffic in both directions.

A1 Traffic Flow

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the road usage measured by vehicles per hour along the stretch of the A1 between Markham Moor roundabout and Five Lane ends roundabout in Nottinghamshire.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department records road usage in terms of average annual daily traffic. This is the total number of vehicles in one year divided by 365. Hourly figures are not available. In 1987 the traffic flow expressed as AADT on the A1 between Markham Moor roundabout and Five Lanes End roundabout was 26,000 vehicles. This figure includes traffic in both directions.

A12 (Accident Statistics)

Mr. Carttiss: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the accident figures for 1988 to the latest date and for 1987 and 1986, for the stretch of the A12 between Great Yarmouth and Lowestoft; and whether he will make a statement about a new junction at Hopton-on-Sea to provide for safer access to and from the A12 to Hopton village.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Accident figures for this section of the A12 trunk road are as follows:

	Fatal	Serious	Slight
1986	0	4	15
1987	1	1	8
[1]1988	2	7	2

[1] January to June.

There are no plans for a new junction on the A12 at Hopton-on-Sea.

The erection of warning signs to improve safety at this junction has been agreed with Norfolk county council which, as the Department's agents, is considering whether any further measures are necessary and justified on safety grounds.

Dangerous Goods (Air Transport)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to how many licences were issued by the Civil Aviation Authority for the carrying of dangerous goods by air; and what proportion covered the transport of toxic wastes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Matters of aviation safety are the responsibility of the Civil Aviation Authority. Permissions are not issued for individual consignments of dangerous goods. They permit air operators to carry all such goods providing they comply with the International Civil Aviation Organisation's technical instructions for the safe transport of dangerous goods by air. The number of permissions currently on issue is 145: 44 to United Kingdom operators (for carriage anywhere in the world) and 101 to non-United Kingdom operators (for carriage in the United Kingdom). Toxic waste is regarded as an item of dangerous goods. The amount carried compared to other dangerous goods is not separately identifiable.

Radioactive Materials

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, Official Report, column 247, 27 July, on radioactive materials transit, what policy considerations underlay the decision to require the central record keeping of nuclear materials lost in transit since 1987.

Mr. Portillo: Central recording of radioactive materials lost in transit was introduced as part of a general improvement of the controls exercised by the Government in this area.

Rheidol Narrow Gauge Railway

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the chairman of British Rail regarding the sale of the Rheidol narrow gauge railway line between Aberystwyth and Devils bridge, Cardiganshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I understand that the British Railways Board has entered into a conditional contract with the Brecon Mountain Railway Co. The Secretary of State's consent will be needed in due course to the sale, to the closure of the existing BR service, and to the making of the light railway transfer order.

Motorway Service Areas

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will seek to amend that part of the Highways Act 1980 which prohibits guests staying for more than two consecutive nights in any motel or motor lodge at a motorway service area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. The Highways Act 1980 does not directly prohibit guests from staying more than two consecutive nights at motorway service areas' motels or lodges. Under section 239(4)(c) we are empowered to acquire land solely for the provision of service stations to be used in connection with the construction, maintenance or use of the motorway. This means that service areas cannot be allowed to become destinations in themselves. Where, accordingly, the Department consents to the erection of MSA motels and lodges by operators on the areas leased to them, it is on the understanding that guests should not stay more than two consecutive nights. It is not proposed to amend section 239(4)(c). The principle that motorway service areas should be there to serve travellers on motorways rather than be an attraction in their own right seems a wholly reasonable one if we are to get the best out of our motorways in terms of promoting safe and free flow of traffic.

King's Cross

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration was given by his Department to the plans of London Underground Limited to refurbish part of King's Cross underground station prior to the fire in November 1987.

Mr. Portillo: The Department was aware that King's Cross was included in the modernisation programme for a number of stations approved by the GLC in 1981. It was also informed that work was due to begin in the summer of 1987 on the Metropolitan and Circle line areas of the station, the only areas at King's Cross remaining to be completed under the 1981 programme.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he or any of his ministerial colleagues or departmental officials have been consulted by Mr. Fennel about all or any part of the contents of his report into the King's Cross fire.

Mr. Portillo: No.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has received the Fennel report into the King's Cross fire.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) on 24 October 1988.

M66

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report the dates of discussion between his Department or consultants, and the North West water authority about the route of the M66 over Audinshaw reservoirs; and how far those discussions have produced agreement about alternative water supplies, who will pay for such works and how far carrying out that work will delay opening of the M66 for Denton northwards.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Officials and the Department's consultants have met the North-West water authority many times over the past seven years to discuss the provision of water storage capacity equivalent to that which will be lost as a result of land taken from the reservoir for construction of the Manchester outer ring road. Present proposals envisage the construction of a pipeline from Fernilee reservoir to Audenshaw reservoir. The details of a formal agreement and costs are under discussion. The reasonable costs of the replacement facility would be paid by the Department as compensation to the water authority under rule 5 of section 5 of the Land Compensation Act 1961. The construction of the pipeline will not delay the M66 works.

Major Transport Projects

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many major transport infrastructure projects have been privately financed since 1979.

Mr. Portillo [pursuant to his reply, 24 October 1988, c. 97-8]: Information concerning railways, light rail, river services and roads were omitted in error. The complete answer follows:

Since 1979 the transport infrastructure projects, costing over £10 million, financed fully or partly by the private sector and known to my Department are:

Channel Tunnel

The construction of the tunnel—Europe's largest ever private sector civil engineering project—has been entirely financed through the international capital markets. There is no Government funding or financial guarantee; this is ruled out by the treaty and the Channel Tunnel Act. The total financing requirement is £6 billion. This has been raised through £1 billion of equity and £5 billion in credit facilities with an international group of lending banks.

Ports

The privatised Associated British Ports was formed in 1983. Total capital expenditure of the 23 major port authorities from 1980 to 1987 was £534·5 million, including the following major port developments:

Dover

Reclamation of camber and creation of new berths in Eastern Docks (over 5 years) £20 million

Immingham

Deepwater LPG terminals—new dock facilities £35 million

Ramsgate

New linkspans, land reclamation and outer wall £17 million

Southampton

Container handling cranes and machinery £17 million

Airports

British Airports Authority, privatised in 1987, invested £182 million in capital projects in the year to March 1988 including the north terminal at Gatwick and the new terminal under construction at Stansted. In addition, London City airport was built by John Mowlem and Company plc at a cost of some £32 million and is owned by them. The airport opened in October 1987.

Railways

Paddington to Heathrow rail-link is to be financed largely from the private sector.

Light Rail

The cost of constructing an extension to Bank of the Docklands Light Railway and upgrading the initial railway includes a contribution of £68 million from private developers Olympia and York. A further extension to Beckton, if approved by Parliament, will be paid for by the LDDC from increased land values accruing as a result of the railway's construction. Private sector involvement is also expected in the Greater Manchester Metrolink light rail scheme and in the Avon and Leeds projects that are being developed.

River services

The Thamesline high-speed riverboat service is a totally private sector public transport operation linking Chelsea, Westminster, Canary Wharf and Greenwich.

Roads

The Dartford-Thurrock crossing was begun in August this year at an estimated cost of £86 million. The potential for private sector involvement in the second Severn crossing is being fully explored.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 27 October 1988

PRIME MINISTER

Okeford Fitzpaine

Q81. Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if she will pay an official visit to Okeford Fitzpaine.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Sawbridge

Q85. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to make an official visit to Sawbridge near Rugby.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

North Devon

Q138. Mr. Speller: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to pay an official visit to north Devon in the next 12 months.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Regulatory Units

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Prime Minister if she will publish in the Official Report in tabular form details of all the regulatory units or structures operating within Government Departments during each of the past five years including the number of civil servants working in them, together with their grades and salaries and the proportion of administrative and professional staff, the average period in which they are in post and if any fees paid for licences granted cover the cost of the regulatory procedures involved.

The Prime Minister: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Benefit Savings

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Prime Minister why the Department of Social Security uses a multiplier different from that used by the Department of Employment to calculate weekly benefit savings; what multipliers are used; what consideration has been given to alternative multipliers; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The multiplier used by the Department of Social Security in calculating benefit savings is 32 and is based on a study by the Department's operational research services, a copy of whose report was placed in the Library on 12 June 1985.

The Department of Employment uses a multiplier of 22. The difference reflects the type of fraud involved and varying methods of investigation. The Department of Employment's multiplier is being further considered by a study involving that Department's research and evaluation branch.

Environment

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if she has made any formal response to the European Community Environment Commissioner following his speech in Blackpool in early October criticising her address to the Royal Society in September and Her Majesty's Government's record on the environment.

The Prime Minister: No. I have received no communication from the European Community Environment Commissioner.

Silver Tableware

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister if she will seek to use in 10 Downing street the silver tableware produced in the silver schools of the London county council and belonging to the former Greater London council and now held in storage by the London residuary body.

The Prime Minister: No.

Business-Education Relationships

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Prime Minister what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards involvement by the education system in business and vice versa; what is her assessment of the mutual advantages of such a relationship; what are the implications for this policy of the decision by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise to charge value added tax on gifts by business to universities; what steps she proposes to take to reverse that decision; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Government have introduced a wide range of initiatives which enable the education system at all levels to develop effective continuing partnerships with business, to provide a mutual awareness of opportunities and transfer of knowledge and expertise.

There is no VAT on unconditional gifts of money to universities. Nor does the mere acknowledgement of such support attract VAT, for example the naming of a university chair after the donor. But where payment is conditional upon the university supplying clearly identifiable benefits in return, VAT is chargeable. This has always been the position and each case is considered on its particular facts.

Sight Tests

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Prime Minister what was the total number of sight tests carried out under the National Health Service in (a) Wales, (b) Scotland and (c) Northern Ireland during 1987.

The Prime Minister: The information is as follows: (a) 651,175; (b) 1,021,712; (c) 242,709.

Engagements

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 27 October.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 27 October.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 27 October.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 27 October.

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 27 October.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 27 October.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Minister's Statement

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will arrange for a copy of the statement made by the Minister for Overseas Development to the conference on the environment and the Pacific region, held in London in early October, to be placed in the Library; and if he will make a statement on the outcome of the conference.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have arranged for a copy of my speech to be placed in the Library.

A report of the conference, including recommendations made at it, is being prepared by the Commonwealth Institute, which hosted the event with strong support from the New Zealand Government. It should be available next month.

The conference discussed a wide range of environmental issues of concern to Commonwealth countries in the Pacific. It was attended by Government representatives and other individuals from those countries, from Australia and New Zealand and from the United Kingdom.

Central America

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will state the latest available figures by land and type of technical assistance and bilateral aid given to Costa Rica, Panama, Nicaragua, Guatemala, El Salvador, Belize, and Mexico; and when was the last time a project for such aid or assistance was approved for Nicaragua.

Mr. Chris Patten: The figures for bilateral aid in 1987 are as follows:

	Financial aid	Technical cooperation
Costa Rica	[1]2,228	356
Panama	—	72
Nicaragua	—	—
Guatemala	—	1
El Salvador	367	44
Belize	1,385	693
Mexico	30	600

[1] Provided through the Commonwealth Development Corporation.

The last direct bilateral aid to Nicaragua was for scholarships which finished in 1986. We have also provided aid for projects jointly funded with British voluntary agencies.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Dyslexia

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what resources are devoted in (a) Basildon and (b) England and Wales to the training of teachers in detecting and teaching dyslexic children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The allocation of resources, both for in-service training of teachers (apart from the LEA training grants scheme) and for the education of particular groups of children is a matter for determination by each local education authority.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what is his Department's latest estimate of dyslexic children and adults respectively; and how this compares with each of the last five years;

(2) what is his Department's latest estimate of dyslexic (a) children and (b) adults residing in the Basildon area; and how this compares for each of the last five years, respectively;

(3) what information his Department has on the number of children under 16 who suffer from dyslexia; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what proportion of under achievement of school children is due to dyslexia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Since the implementation of the 1981 Education Act in 1983, this Department has not collected national or local statistics of children by category of handicap. This information is not therefore available.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what research his Department is carrying out into dyslexia; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how much was spent by his Department on carrying out research into dyslexia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: My Department is not funding any research in this field at the present time. A total of five projects on specific learning difficulties were funded by this Department in recent years. Details of these projects, their completion dates, the researchers and the level of funding are (i) The prevalence and characteristics of children with specific learning difficulties, April 1983, Dr. D. A. Dobbins, £157,546 (ii) Development of a classroom-based integrated diagnostic/remediation procedure for failing readers, April 1983, Mr. G. E. F. Trickey, £98,385 (iii) The teaching of seven-year-old dyslexic pupils, June 1982, Professor P. R. Miles, £4,600 (iv) Action research project for dyslexic pupils 1981-82, June 1982, Mr. V. Tyre and Mr. P. Young, £40,750 (v) Follow-up study of 90 dyslexic pupils, June 1982, Professor T. R. Miles, £630.

In addition, my Department sponsored a seminar held on 22 May 1984, to disseminate the findings of the first four of the above research projects. Given this considerable funding effort, I think it is now appropriate that the Department's research funding into children with special educational needs should concentrate on other aspects of concern in the special education field.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from the British Dyslexia Association; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend has received no representations from the British Dyslexia Association in recent months.

School Staff

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many (a) teachers, (b) lecturers, and (c) non-teaching staff were employed in the public sector education system in the Basildon area for each of the last five years.

Mr. Butcher: Figures for Basildon are not available because the Department does not collect this information below the level of the local education authority. The numbers employed in the public sector education system in Essex are as follows:

	Teachers[1]	Lecturers[2]	Non teaching staff[3]
			Full-time	Part-time[4]
January
1984	12,643	2,195	3,340	13,861
1985	12,788	2,184	3,353	14,240
1986	12,401	2,223	3,376	15,077
1987	12,285	2,198	3,347	15,688
1988	12,398	2,187	3,379	16,174

[1] Teachers in maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special schools and those providing education otherwise than at school. As recorded by the local education authority on Form 618G.

[2] Full-time equivalent lecturers in further education establishments adult education centres and youth clubs and centres, as recorded by the local education authority on Form 618G.

[3] From Essex's Quarterly Manpower Information Reports for preceding December.

[4] Number of staff (ie head count.). Full-time equivalents based on national factors are not thought to be reliable for individual authorities.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the achievements of his Department in reducing drug abuse; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Education support grants have been provided by the Department for the last three years to facilitate the employment by local education authorities of drugs education co-ordinators. the third year of funding in 1988-89 will support 70 per cent. of LEA expenditure of up to £2·3 million. Support in 1989-90 will amount to 50 per cent. of LEA expenditure up to a total of £2·4 million. In 1989-90 the Department is also for a third year supporting drugs education in-service traning for teachers under the LEA training grants scheme. The Department will fund 70 per cent. of the cost of such training up to a total expenditure of £1·7 million by LEAs. It is too early to judge the effectiveness of these measures in reducing drug abuse.

Business and Schools

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress is being made on fostering links between business and schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Links between business and schools provide a valuable means of introducing children to the realities of industry, both its responsibilities and its opportunities. At present, two out of three children, before they leave school, receive direct experience of industry through a work experience placement. My Department is working with the DTI and Training Commision to ensure that all children benefit from this experience.

Seven-Year-Olds (Testing)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he anticipates that the first testing of seven-year-olds will be introduced into schools in England and Wales.

Mrs. Rumbold: The first national assessment of seven year olds is planned for 1991. The first fully reported run will be in 1992.

Mathematics (Report)

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will consider extending the closing date for responses to the consultative report, "Mathematics for Ages 5-16";

(2) how many individuals and organisations have applied for the consultation document, "Mathematics for Ages 5-16", and have not yet been sent one.

Mrs. Rumbold: The National Curriculum Council is responsible for consultations on the document "Mathematics for Ages 5-16". The NCC has distributed over 85,000 copies of the document, including some 40,000 copies to statutory consultees and schools and some 45,000 on request to other individuals and organisations. All requests received up to 24 October have been dealt with.

The NCC's 26 October deadline for comments on the proposed attainment targets and programmes of study has given statutory consultees up to 10 weeks to react. There is no case for extending this deadline.

SCOTLAND

Rating Reform

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what new arrangements he proposes to apportion the costs of provision of joint police forces and fire services between Lothian region and Borders region on the introduction of the community charge legislation in April 1989.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The new basis of apportionment of costs will require to be incorporated in schemes made by Lothian and Borders regional councils. These schemes have not yet been formally submitted to the Secretary of State for his approval, but I understand that the two councils are proceeding on the basis that both police and fire costs should be apportioned on the basis of population as estimated under paragraph 2(3) of schedule 4 to the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987.

Rail Bridge, Cockburnspath

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he now expects the work on the replacement rail bridge on the A1 trunk route at Cockburnspath to commence.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Work is expected to start during the last week in November or the first week in December.

Hospital Consultants

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the percentage of hospital consultants in Scotland who are female.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: At 30 September 1987 female hospital consultants represented 12·1 per cent. of all hospital consultants employed by the National Health Service in Scotland.

Unrestricted Medical Services

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to increase the number of female consultants and general practitioners giving unrestricted medical services.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I am currently considering measures to improve career patterns for young doctors in the hospital service in Scotland, as part of a drive to improve our hospital medical staffing structure. These measures include improved training programmes, better career advice and counselling, and more part-time registrar posts. All of these should help hospital doctors —including women doctors—to achieve their full career potential.

In the White Paper "Promoting Better Health" we announced our intention to discuss with the profession what arrangements might be made to ensure that more women are encouraged to enter and remain in general practice. This subject forms part of the confidential discussions at present taking place with the profession on the various proposals in the White Paper.

Lennox Castle Hospital

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 28 July, Official Report, column 472, what information he now has as to the current bed occupancy of wards 7 and 8 at Lennox castle hospital.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have had inquiries made of the greater Glasgow health board.

Wards 7 and 8 are for mentally handicapped people with behavioural disturbance. Eight of the 12 places in ward 7, the admission unit, are occupied. Further increases to the target occupancy level of 90 per cent. are dependent upon the rate of referrals from general practitioners and other consultants. Six of the 12 places in ward 8, the intensive care unit, are occupied. A further four residents will be admitted next week, taking the ward to its target occupancy level.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has concerning the current nurse staffing at Lennox castle hospital and the expected increase for 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have had inquiries made of the greater Glasgow health board.

The average whole-time equivalent nursing staff at Lennox castle hospital has increased from 617 in 1987-88 to 634 in the period April to September 1988. Since 1986-87 the ratio of residents to nurses has improved from 1:0.52 to 1:0.69, an increase of 33 per cent. in the total number of nurses per resident. The health board has allocated £466,000 in the current financial year for increases in nursing staff at the hospital. This is equivalent to £599,000 in a full year and will be used to improve the proportion of trained nurses, and increase their total number.

Scottish Medical and Dental Defence Union Scheme

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration has been given to the inclusion of non-British graduates employed by Health Care International in the Scottish Medical and Dental Defence Union scheme.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Consideration of what indemnification to provide against claims for damages made against its medical and other staff is a matter for Health Care International.

Magnetic Resonance Imaging Scanners

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of magnetic resonance imaging scanners in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are three nuclear magnetic resonance imaging scanners in National Health Service hospitals in Scotland.

Rent Arrears

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing levels of rent arrears for public sector housing in Scotland and in each district and islands area, for each month since 1 April 1987.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on local authority, new town and SSHA rents and rent arrears is collected centrally from authorites on an annual basis at 30 September each year. Figures for 1987 are set out in the table.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many of the 24 separate patrols undertaken in the current financial year up till 19 October by helicopters hired for surveillance of Scottish inshore fisheries have been specifically or mainly for the surveillance of salmon fisheries.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The 24 flights by helicopters in the current financial year up to 19 October were specifically for the surveillance of Scottish inshore fisheries and, as such, each flight was dedicated to protect the various sectors and detect infringements in those waters. Such flights are not aimed at any one individual component of the inshore fisheries.

Nuclear Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received any requests from the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority to conduct test drilling at its Dounreay site in preparation for Nirex's search for a suitable site for a repository for low and intermediate-level nuclear waste.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No such requests have been received.

Set-aside Scheme

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current level of applications for the set-aside scheme for Scottish farmers; and what is the acreage per Scottish region and per parliamentary constituency which will be removed from agricultural use as a result of (a) applications already processed and (b) applications pending decision.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not available in the form requested. Provisional returns indicate that over 400 applications were submitted by the closing date of 21 October and that almost 15,000 hectares of eligible land have been proposed for withdrawal from production this year.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been, to the latest available date, the expenditure incurred by his Department in (a) advertising the set-aside scheme, (b) offering advice to National Farmers Union offices and individual farmers and (c) approved annual payments for the transfer of land to non-agricultural purposes.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: (a) No expenditure has been incurred by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland on paid advertisements. The cost of an explanatory leaflet on registration for set-aside sent to all arable farmers in Scotland was about £2,000;

(b) Advice to farmers and others on the details of the scheme has been provided by staff as part of their normal duties;

(c) The precise cost of annual payments to farmers who have applied to enter the scheme this year cannot be calculated until all the applications have been processed but we estimate that expenditure in 1989-90—when the first payments will be made—will be of the order of £3 million.

Teachers

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total number of teachers employed in Scottish day schools by age band and by sex.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The full-time equivalent numbers of teachers in education authority and grant-aided schools at September 1987 are given in the table.

Age	Male	Female	Total
<24	223·9	1,464·7	1,688·6

Education Authorities

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of (a) male and (b) female members of the directorate in each of the Scottish education authorities.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Head Teachers

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list any day schools in each region and division which have a person other than a registered teacher employed as head teacher.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information is not held centrally on the registration status of teachers in particular posts. However, in terms of the Schools (Scotland) Code 1956, as amended, education authorities can only employ registered teachers.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to assist and co-ordinate action by Scottish local authorities for the safe disposal of unwanted domestic refrigerators and other equipment containing chlorofluorocarbons.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The vaporisation of chlorofluorocarbons does not present any significant risk to human health and no advice to local authorities is considered necessary.

There is at present no environmentally safe disposal method that local authorities could use, but my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment through his Department actively pursues means to reduce emissions with user industries.

Housing (Mortgage Defaults)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many houses have been repossessed as a result of mortgage default in the Glasgow, Govan constituency in each of the last five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not available.

ENERGY

Gas and Electricity Bills

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many (i) gas bill and (ii) electricity bill debts he estimates there are in Wales, expressed as a percentage of domestic credit customers for each of the years 1986, 1987 and for each of the months of 1988.

Mr. Peter Morrison: This is a matter for the chairmen of the utilities concerned. I have asked them to write to the hon. Member with the information.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he proposes to initiate discussions between the gas and electricity boards and the local authority associations consequent upon the implementation of the new housing benefit regulations, with a view to minimising indebtedness.

Mr. Parkinson: No. Both industries operate a code of practice on the payment of bills which contains a number of safeguards for those in genuine difficulty and sets out a variety of "pay as you go" schemes to help consumers. The code stresses the importance of consumers who are having difficulty paying their bills informing their gas or electricity supplier at an early stage.

Plutonium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, pursuant to his reply on plutonium on 20 July, Official Report, column 666, he will publish in the Official Report the figures for 1987-88 on plutonium produced at nuclear power stations, civil plutonium stocks and reprocessing activities at Sellafield.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The information requested was published on 13 October 1988 and placed in the Library of the House. A copy was also sent to the hon. Member.

Hazards Programme

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to include nuclear installations in the regulations covered by the control of industrial major accident hazards programme.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Consideration is being given to the possibility of applying to nuclear installations arrangements of a kind comparable with those provided for under the CIMAH regulations.

Nuclear Plants

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if his Department's research programme or that sponsored by his Department through the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, into decommissioning of nuclear plants, has taken into account the implications of bacteriological contamination of nuclear reactor cores and radioactively contaminated pipework.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority's programme of research into reactor decommissioning relates primarily to gas cooled reactors where problems of bacteriological contamination are not expected to occur. Such contamination would be taken fully into account were it to become a relevant issue.

Gas and Oil Platforms

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many prosecutions his Department has taken against companies for breaches in health and safety law on offshore gas and oil platforms; how many of these prosecutions have been successful; and what were the mean and modal fines imposed.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Details are available only from 1977. Since then 57 prosecutions of companies have been brought for breaches of health and safety requirements on offshore installations. 43 of these resulted in convictions. The mean and modal fines imposed were £1,100 and £500 respectively.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will list the requirements, showing the Acts under which they appear, for safety training for contract workers on oil and gas rigs.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 places a general obligation on all employers —whether they are operators or contractors—to provide training to ensure, so far as is reasonably practicable, the health and safety of their employees. The Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 (Application Outside Great Britain) Order 1977 extended this obligation offshore.

In addition, there are specific requirements under both the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 and the Mineral Workings (Offshore Installations) Act 1971 for the training of employees working with lead, asbestos and ionising radiations, and for medical staff and radio operators. There are also requirements for the appointment of competent persons to be responsible for the control and safety of operations.

Piper Alpha

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what resources of his Department were involved in work subsequent upon the Piper Alpha incident.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Twenty of my Department's staff were engaged at various stages of the work leading to the interim report of the Piper Alpha technical investigation into the causes of the disaster, which was released by Lord Cullen, the chairman of the forthcoming public inquiry, on 29 September 1988. My Department has so far authorised payments of about £200,000 for goods and services supplied in connection with work following the disaster under the authority of the advance from the Contingencies Fund which my right hon. Friend announced on 21 July 1988, at columns 835-36, in answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell).

Health and Safety

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will indicate the differences on the practices and procedures covering health and safety as between onshore and offshore installations; and whether he has any plans to harmonise them.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The general provisions of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 applies both onshore and offshore. Safety onshore is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

It is not possible to list all the differences in practices and procedures, since they are not all governed by regulations. The offshore safety regime has been designed to take into account the special requirements of the offshore environment. Where appropriate, onshore regulations are already applied offshore.

Hinkley Point

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if his Department has made any approach to the science policy research unit in Sussex university to obtain copies of the "trad", "mod" and "tech" computer simulations of the electricity supply system in the United Kingdom as part of his departmental input to the Hinkley Point inquiry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department has made no such approach.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will instruct the chairman of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority to inform the EC Energy Commissioner, M. Nic Mosar, that the European Commission has permission to release details of the 180 kg of United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority origin plutonium exported to Belgium under an agreement between the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority and Euratom of 3 May 1968, in regard to the Commission response to written question 2932/87 by Llewellyn Smith MEP, given on 21 September.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. This information is commercially confidential.

"Magnox, the Reckoning"

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the book "Magnox, the Reckoning", published by Friends of the Earth on 10 October.

Mr. Parkinson: A copy is on order for my Department's library.

Hinkley Point

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his policy towards his departmental witness at the Hinkley Point C public inquiry answering questions on the merits of departmental policy.

Mr. Michael Spicer: As recognised in rule 12(3) of the rules governing the Hinkley inquiry procedure, it is not customary for an official representative of a Government Department to answer questions on the merits of Government policy. As was made clear by my representative at the first Hinkley pre-inquiry meeting, I see no reason for my Department's witness to do so in this case; the merits of the relevant Government policy have been and will be the subject of parliamentary debate.

Uranium

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement upon the import of uranium from Namibia since 1977.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Imports of uranium ore from Namibia for the United Kingdom's civil nuclear programme were made from 1977 to 1984 by the Central Electricity Generating Board, on behalf of the British Civil Uranium Procurement Directorate. There are no plans to import further supplies from Namibia.

Nuclear Safety

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he envisages any changes in responsibility for the nuclear safety research programmes at present funded by his Department.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Following discussions with interested parties, it has been decided that the Health and Safety Commission will take over the Department of Energy's responsibility for contracting research programmes related to the safety of established thermal nuclear power systems. The transfer covers the existing programmes funded by my Department and carried out by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority on pressurised water reactor safety and advanced gas-cooled reactor safety, together with relevant parts of the general nuclear safety programme. The transfer to the Health and Safety Commission will take place on 1 April 1990 and the Health and Safety Commission's responsibilities will be managed on its behalf by the Health and Safety Executive. The Health and Safety Executive has considerable technical expertise and experience in managing research programmes.

Following a review to be carried out by the Health and Safety Commission and Health and Safety Executive of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority's nuclear safety research programmes to decide on the areas of work appropriate for them to sponsor, the Health and Safety Executive will, on the Health and Safety Commission's behalf, recover, from nuclear site licensees and licence applicants, the costs of research for which it becomes responsible under the new arrangements. Legislation to enable this will be introduced as soon as parliamentary time permits.

My Department will continue to fund directly a programme of generic nuclear safety research to enable the authority to carry out wider ranging work which is not related to nuclear systems currently licensed or contemplated for licensing in the United Kingdom and is therefore not appropriate for the Health and Safety Commission to sponsor under these arrangements.

Thermonuclear Fusion

Mr. Heseltine: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about the current level of support for the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority's programme of research in controlled thermonuclear fusion.

Mr. Parkinson: The Government earlier this year supported the European Council of Minister's decision to extend the life of the Joint European Torus (JET) project at Culham by two years to the end of 1992, to enable it to complete its agreed scientific objectives. This will mean further expenditure on JET of £75 million a year, which is partly funded by the United Kingdom. As a consequence, the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority will continue to carry out research and development in support of JET and its programme of work on the tokamak route to fusion. Support for other lines of fusion research will be reduced gradually. Additional resources will be made available to enable the UKAEA's laboratory at Culham to expand its commercial work, building on the laboratory's existing success in marketing its expertise and the high quality and reputation of its staff.

Cash Limits

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has any changes to announce to his Department's cash limits for 1988-89.

Mr. Parkinson: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for class VI, vote 3 is increased by £0·90 million from £25·888 million to £26·788 million. This is to cover expenditure in relation to the Piper Alpha technical investigation and public inquiry. This increase is offset by a reduction of £0·90 million in the cash limit for class VI, vote 2 from £278·822 to £277·922 million. These changes will not therefore lead to an increase in the planned total of public expenditure.

Fawley B Power Station

21. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has fixed the date for the public inquiry into the proposals by the Central Electricity Generating Board to construct the Fawley B power station and coal jetty.

Mr. Parkinson [pursuant to the reply, 13 June 1988, c.31]: On 3 February 1988 the Central Electricity Generating Board applied for my consent under the Electricity Act 1909 to construct a coal-fired generating station at Fawley in Hampshire. The board was required to advertise this application, following which I received some 4,000 objections to it, including ones from the relevant local planning authorities. A public inquiry into the application is therefore necessary. Since the application to construct the generating station was made the Government have announced their plans for the privatisation of the electricity supply industry and have been preparing for its precise implementation in consultation with the industry.

The CEGB has told me that, in its assessment of future electricity demand and the needs of the industry, it believes that Fawley B is needed. However, after privatisation, the decision whether the power from the station is needed will rest with the distribution companies who will succeed the area boards. In the CEGB's view Big "G", who will own and operate Fawley B if it is built, will not wish to proceed with the station unless he has assurances from the area boards that they wish to take the power from it. Discussions between the generation and distribution sides of the industry are in progress, but the area boards are not yet in a position to give the assurances sought.

Against that background the CEGB feels that it should not proceed with the application until the area boards are in a position to give definite assurances and has therefore asked that the public inquiry arrangements should not be made for the time being.

After careful consideration I have decided that I will not proceed for the present with the public inquiry arrangements, but I have asked the CEGB to let me know by 1 May 1989 whether it wishes to proceed with the application or to withdraw it. Should the CEGB tell me that it wishes to proceed, in order to ensure fairness to all concerned, I will require it to readvertise the application so that any person, who is not already registered as an objector, will have the opportunity so to register.

In the circumstances, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport has decided that the board's present application to him for an order to be made under the Harbours Act 1964 in respect of a jetty associated with the generating station should not proceed further, although if next year the CEGB indicates that it wishes to proceed with the power station application, he recognises that this would be likely to be accompanied by a fresh application under the Harbours Act 1964.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police (Complaints)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether it is proposed to consider changes in the law relating to the investigations of complaints against the police, in the light of representations from the chairman of the Police Complaints Authority.

Mr. Hurd: I intend shortly to circulate a consultation document seeking comments on the recommendations in the authority's triennial review report for 1985-88. When I have received these I shall consider how best to take forward the recommendations.

INFORM

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the size of the grant to INFORM: and for how many years it has been made;

(2) on what terms INFORM receives a Government grant.

Mr. John Patten: A grant of £25,000 was first made to INFORM (Information Network Focus on Religious Movements) for the period 1 October 1987 to 31 March 1988 and a further sum of £45,000 is being paid in 1988-89. It is proposed to give £35,000 and £15,000 in 1989-90 and 1990-91 respectively, subject to review of INFORM's performance. No money will be paid thereafter.

The grant is made to assist INFORM in its work of providing impartial information about cults, by providing a contribution towards its administrative expenses. Conditions relating to accounting and reporting arrangements are attached to the grant.

Civil Defence

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is satisfied with the progress being made in the preparation of fire brigade war plans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Fire brigade war emergency planning in England and Wales is under review in conjunction with Her Majesty's inspectorate of fire services. It is expected that initial findings will be available in early 1989.

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what auxiliary fire equipment held in store for civil defence purposes is available in emergency to organisations other than local authority fire services; what restrictions are placed on its use; and what arrangements are made for the crewing of the appliances.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Auxiliary fire equipment held for civil defence purposes, including "Green Goddess" appliances, pipes, hoses and other ancillary equipment can be made available on loan to any competent organisation or authority which may be responsible for dealing with emergencies. They would not normally be available in other than exceptional circumstances. Restrictions apply so as to preclude modification of the equipment or loan to a third party without Home Office consent; and a charge would normally be made. Arrangements for the crewing of appliances would normally be a matter for the borrowing organisation.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further response he has had to his proposals on crime prevention; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: There has been an encouraging response to our crime prevention policy, which stresses the role of the whole community in tackling crime. For example: there are now nearly 60,000 neighbourhood watch schemes across the country covering some three and a quarter million households; there have been nearly 200,000 separate requests for copies of our crime prevention handbook, over 1·5 million of which have been distributed; and all of the nine areas invited to take part in the first year of our safer cities programme have expressed an interest in participating, and in three of these work has now begun.

Cruelty to Animals

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many persons have been (a) charged with and (b) convicted of cruelty to animals in 1988; what were the figures for each of the last five years; and what percentage the former is of the latter;

(2) how many persons have been (a) charged with and (b) convicted of cruelty to animals in the Basildon area; what percentage the latter is to the former; what were the figures for each of the last five years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to his question yesterday. Information for 1988 is not yet available.

Capital Punishment

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further representations he has received on capital punishment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave on 22 July, at column 876.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons have been (a) charged with and (b) convicted of, (i) murder, (ii) child destruction, (iii) illegal abortion, (iv) rape, (v) unlawful sexual intercourse with a person under 13 years, (vi) unlawful sexual intercourse with a defective and (vii) manslaughter in (aa) the Basildon area and (bb) England and Wales in each year since 1958.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested in respect of England and Wales for all the offences specified except unlawful sexual intercourse with a defective is published annually in volumes 1 and 2 of "Criminal statistics, England and Wales Supplementary tables".

Details for the Basildon area are not available, but the following table gives information for Billericay petty sessional division and Chelmsford Crown court for 1986 and 1987. Comparable data for earlier years could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

For offences of procuring an illegal abortion, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to his question yesterday.

TV Licence Fees

Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is yet able to announce the level of the television licence fees to take effect from 1 April 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: On 27 October last year, at column 204, I announced that the licence fees for the three years starting from 1 April 1988 would be calculated in accordance with changes in the retail prices index, which determine the rate of increase of pensions and other state benefits.

The RPI figure for September, published on 14 October, showed a year-on-year increase of 5·9 per cent. I have accordingly decided that from 1 April 1989 the colour licence fee should be £66 and the monochrome fee £22. The necessary regulations will be laid before the House in due course.

Passport Applications

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the processing time for passport applications at all United Kingdom passport offices; what further progress has been made towards computerisation of passport offices and dispersal of work on postal applications from London to Glasgow; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Processing times for 14 October are shown in the table, together with those of six months and a year ago for the purpose of comparison. Urgent applications are given priority and are not normally subject to any delay.

[1] Resulting from the effects of industrial action.

The issue of machine readable passports in the European Community common format, which commenced in Glasgow on 15 August, is progressing satisfactorily, and plans for the next phase of the computerisation programme are well advanced. The phased transfer of postal applications from London to the computerised and enlarged Glasgow passport office commenced on 4 October. We aim to complete the dispersal of jobs and transfer of work from London to Glasgow by May 1989 when the London passport office will deal only with applications lodged by callers and all applications posted from the Greater London area will be handled in Glasgow. In association with these changes, the London public counter will, from 31 October 1988, close at 4 pm as opposed to 4·30 pm at present, though arrangements to deal with urgent inquiries up to 6 pm will remain.

Employment Protection Certificates

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many ministerial certificates, by grade or group, have been issued under section 138(4) of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 in each of the last three years for which figures are available; and how many of those issued have been renewed;

(2) for what period ministerial certificates issued under section 138(4) of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 are valid; after what period they are renewable; and to which classes of Crown employees they are generally issued.

Mr. Hurd [holding answer 28 July 1988]: There has been no change since my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister replied to the right hon. Member for Plymouth, Devonport (Dr. Owen) on 31 January 1984, at column 120.

HEALTH

Better Health (Self-help)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on how many health authorities have organised campaigns to promote better health by means of self-help since January 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Although detailed information is not available, I understand that nearly all health authorities mount health education campaigns which include a strong element of self-help. Health promotion is normally considered as part of ministerial reviews and we expect all health authorities to make active progress on the prevention of ill health through health promotion.

During the first year of the "Look After your Heart" campaign, grants were made to 95 health authorities to support heart disease prevention projects at local level, and 57 health authorities took stands and four showed their "health buses" at the first anniversary event of "Look After your Heart" at the National Exhibition centre, Birmingham in May.

AIDS

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any plans to review the administration of payments made to haemophiliacs suffering with HIV infection.

Mr. Mellor: A new charitable trust, known as the Macfarlane trust, was established on 10 March 1988 specifically to give financial help to haemophiliacs infected with HIV and to their dependents. The Government made an ex-gratia payment to the trust of £10 million and by regulations have ensured that payments from the trust are disregarded for the purposes of housing benefit, income support and family credit. A majority of the trustees were appointed by the Haemophilia society. I believe that we have thereby fulfilled the promise made to the House by my predecessor on 17 November 1987.

It is now a matter for the trustees to allocate their funds in the way which will best meet the needs of those eligible for assistance. I understand that so far the trust has received about 350 applications and made some 297 payments.

Adoption

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give, for 1984 and each subsequent year for which figures are available, the number and age breakdown of children placed for adoption; how many of these children were placed for adoption while in local authority care; and how many of the latter were placed without parental consent.

Mrs. Currie: The available information on placements for adoption is set out in the table, which shows children and young persons placed for adoption by the local authority during the year ending 31 March 1984, by age group, for both children in local authority care and other children. Comparable information is not available for later years. However, some information on placements for adoption is available for the year ending 31 March 1987 and provisional estimates show that about 900 children in local authority care were placed for adoption at that date.

No figures are collected centrally on the number of children placed for adoption from care without parental consent.

Magnetic Resonance Imaging Scanners

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the number of magnetic resonance imaging scanners in National Health Service hospitals paid for by charitable donations.

Mrs. Currie: To date the capital cost of nine magnetic resonance scanners in National Health Service hospitals has been paid for by charitable donation. One of the nine received some contribution from the Department of Trade and Industry and another from a regional health authority.

The revenue costs of all National Health Service scanners are paid from a variety of sources and include charitable donations, research bodies such as the Medical Research Council and Cancer Research Campaign, with approximately 50 per cent. receiving funding either wholly or in part from district health authorities.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the number of magnetic resonance imaging scanners in National Health Service hospitals and the number in the private sector.

Mrs. Currie: There are 19 magnetic resonance imaging scanners in National Health Service hospitals, including Scotland, and five in the private sector.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for increasing the number of magnetic resonance imaging scanners in National Health hospitals.

Mrs. Currie: Within the total resources available to them, health authorities determine their own level of spending on capital equipment in the light of local knowledge, health needs and requirements. The Government believe that decisions about the relative priority of particular equipment, such as magnetic resonance imaging scanners, amongst the competing demands for resources, are best taken locally.

Birth, Marriage and Death Certificates

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will consider amending the current birth, marriage and death certificates for England and Wales to include the additional information already required in Scotland.

Mrs. Currie: Yes. We will consider my hon. Friend's suggestion. I refer him to my announcement on 29 July 1988 at column 803, that a consultative document is to be issued on reforming the registration service.

General Practitioners (Telephones)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what sum of money he has (i) earmarked and (ii) paid to the British Telecom authorities for priority fault repair services for general practitioners.

Mr. Mellor: Negotiations with British Telecom over these costs are still in progress. Formal agreement on a price framework may be reached in November. Meanwhile a without prejudice payment of £1,363,900 in respect of services for family practitioners was made in March 1988 to cover a 10 month period to 31 March 1988.

Radiation

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence exists for a causal relationship between exposure to radiation doses and cancer.

Mrs. Currie: Evidence over many years from laboratory research in animals and from epidemiological studies suggest that exposure to various forms of radiation can cause certain cancers. The available evidence has been reviewed by international groups including the International Commission for radiation protection, the committee on the biological effects of ionising radiation and the United Nations scientific committee on the effects of radiation whose reports are publicly available.

Illegitimate Births

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the rate of overall illegitimate births as a percentage of all births in each of the past 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is as follows:

Percentage of births occurring outside marriage, United Kingdom 1978 to 87

Year	Percentage
1978	10·0
1979	10·6
1980	11·5
1981	12·5
1982	14·1
1983	15·4
1984	17·0
1985	18·9
1986	21·0
1987	22·9

An article describing recent trends in births outside marriage will appear in a forthcoming issue of Population Trends.

Deaf People

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he intends to take for the assessment and rehabilitation of those patients previously diagnosed as suffering from mental disorders, whose difficulties are subsequently discovered to arise from profound deafness; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: All staff working with mentally disordered people need to be alert to the possibility of hearing loss and this was drawn to the attention of staff working with mentally handicapped people in the 1984 report "Helping Mentally Handicapped People with Special Problems". Where hearing impairment is suspected, the patient is referred for skilled audiological advice. Future action must depend on the particular circumstances of the case.

St. Catherine's House, London

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any plans to improve the facilities for members of the public visiting St. Catherine's house, Kingsway, London, to consult the births, marriages and deaths registers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I am aware that at peak times the public search room at St. Catherine's house can become uncomfortably crowded. However, it now includes all the ground floor space available in that building and there are no immediate opportunities for further expansion: improvements to other facilities such as public telephones and the general decor are being made. The need for people to visit the search room personally is also being diminished by the sale of microfilm copies of the registration indexes to local record offices, libraries and other interested bodies, and OPCS is looking at ways in which the indexes might be made available for sale in the microfiche form which will be easier to store and handle.

Chronically Ill Patients

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision is made for reimbursing chronically ill patients who use their own transport when travelling for treatment at hospital in a separate health district; how many reimbursements were made in the last year for which figures are available; and what was the average reimbursement made.

Mrs. Currie: Transport by the ambulance service is provided free of charge for those patients considered medically unfit to travel by other means. Help is available under the hospital travel costs scheme for those patients on low incomes who are not eligible for ambulance service transport, including those who use their own transport. Information on the number of reimbursements made under this scheme, and the average amount paid, is not collected centrally.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimates he has as to the annual cost of inter-authority transport arrangements for chronically ill patients requiring treatment in a hospital run by a different health authority; what was the average cost per patient in the last year for which figures are available; and what was the total number of journeys undertaken.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not collected centrally.

National Health Service (Staff Contracts)

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the present contracts concerning medical staff including doctors working in the National Health Service are due for renegotiation.

Mr. Mellor: The contractual arrangements for doctors in the hospital and community health services are agreed as a result of national negotiations between the health departments and the professions. There are no plans at present for negotiations on this subject.

Following the White Paper "Promoting Better Health" (Cm. 249) published in November 1987, changes are to be made to general practitioners' terms of service and remuneration system. Discussions on implementing these changes are under way with representatives of GPs.

Spectacle Vouchers

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost to public funds for the whole of the United Kingdom for each of the past three years for which figures are available of the spectacle voucher schemes for the exempt groups for general optical service dispensing.

Mr. Mellor: The spectacle voucher scheme in the general ophthalmic service was introduced from 1 July 1986 and the only cost figures available, therefore, are £33·135 million for 1986-87 and £60·207 million (provisional) for 1987-88 for the United Kingdom.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospital beds there were in (a) the Greater London area and (b) the rest of the country in May 1979, or the latest date for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is given in the table.

Average daily available beds, National Health Service hospitals

	1979	1986	Percentage change
Greater London	64,376	52,708	−18
The rest of England	297,294	263,006	−12

Reductions in bed numbers do not necessarily mean loss in services. Better use of beds, changing clinical practices and the ability to treat more cases as day cases without patients having to stay in hospital overnight mean that many more cases are being treated in the facilities available.

Heart Disease

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the rate of heart disease in (a) the north-west and (b) the south-east regions.

Mrs. Currie: The table gives the direct age-standardised mortality rates for ischaemic heart disease for the north-west and south-east standard regions for 1982 to 1987. These rates have been adjusted to take account of the differences in the age distributions between areas, and permit direct comparisons to be made.

North-west and south-east standard regions are not precisely conterminous with health authority areas, being based on local authority boundaries; they correspond with health authority areas as follows:

North-west standard region
This consists of the following health authorities:
Mersey regional health authority and North-western regional health authority, with the exception of part of Tameside and Glossop district health authority, which is in East Midlands standard region.

South-east standard region
This consists of:
North West Thames regional health authority
North East Thames regional health authority
South West Thames regional health authority
South East Thames regional health authority and the following districts within Oxford regional health authority:
Basingstoke and North Hampshire
Isle of Wight
Portsmouth and South East Hampshire
Southampton and South West Hampshire
Winchester
plus part of Salisbury district health authority together with the following districts within Wessex regional health authority:
Aylesbury Vale
East Berkshire
West Berkshire
Milton Keynes

Ancillary Workers

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department intends to fund fully the cost to the health authorities of the increase in the hourly rate of pay of ancillary workers resulting from the reduction in the working week from 40 to 39 hours; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The reduction of one hour in the hours of the standard working week from 12 December was part of the settlement agreed for improvements in the pay and conditions of service of National Health Service ancillary staff for 1988-89. Health authorities are expected to plan flexibly to meet pay increases and other costs from within the pool of resources available to them. This pool includes their increased cash allocations for the year, cost improvement savings and funds raised through income generation schemes.

Professions Allied to Medicine

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will publish the Health Department's written evidence to the review body for the 1989 review of the pay of the professions allied to medicine; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The evidence on the professions allied to medicine was published today and copies are available in the Library.

This year's review body recommendations on the pay of the professions allied to medicine were accepted in full by the Government with effect from 1 April. Those recommendations will have added, in total, some 8·8 per cent. to the pay bill. Rates of pay have now risen on average by nearly 40 per cent. since 1979.

The health departments believe that, against that background, the existing remuneration levels should be maintained. Further large across-the-board increases are not a cost-effective means of maintaining an adequate workforce in the professions. A more accurately targeted response is needed to direct resources towards particular skills and geographical shortages. The review body's decision to introduce pay supplements for staff working in London represents a significant step in that direction. We are keen to see greater scope for geographical variation in pay, and we will be putting further evidence to the review body about this.

Intensive discussions have taken place over the past year on a new grading structure for the professions allied to medicine. Unfortunately agreement has not been reached in time for the 1989 review. We hope that discussions can continue with a view to reaching an agreement for the next round.

I have also arranged for copies of the health departments' evidence to the review body on nurses' pay, which was published on 4 October to be placed in the Library.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Overseas Pensioners

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimates he had made of the costs of paying fully indexed state retirement pensions to all United Kingdom pensioners in each of (a) Australia, (b) Canada, (c) New Zealand, (d) the United States of America and (e) the 12 member countries of the European Economic Community; and in which of these countries such indexed pensions are in fact paid.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The current costs in the 1987-88 tax year for paying United Kingdom retirement pension and widows benefits to pensioners in Australia, Canada and New Zealand are about £105 million, £62 million and £23 million a year, respectively. These pensions are not indexed linked and the cost of paying full United Kingdom rates of pensions and widows' benefits in those countries is estimated at 1988 rates to be an additional £88 million, £49 million and £36 million a year, respectively.

United Kingdom pensioners in the United States of America and in the EC receive uprated pensions and the costs for each country for 1987-88 are shown in the table.

Pensions

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many employed persons have contracted out of the state earnings-related pension scheme and are members of company or occupational pensions schemes, categorised by sex, and industry or occupation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The latest available information is shown in the table. Contracted-out status for national insurance purposes is available only to employees who are members of an occupational pension scheme to which their employer contributes. Records are not kept of individuals' occupations.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if his Department will publish a table of past housing benefit expenditure for each financial year since 1980 and projected housing benefit expenditure, indicating clearly the projected impact on rents of the current Housing Bill.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information is shown in the table. Revised figures for 1988-89 will be published early in the new year along with projected figures for later years.

Notes:
Before 1982-83 assistance with housing costs was through the supplementary benefit scheme administered by the Department and the rent and rate rebate and allowance schemes run by the Department of the Environment. Housing benefit from the Department was introduced for some supplementary benefit claimants from November 1982 with full implementation for all claimants following from April 1983. The data for the years prior to 1982-83 are based upon the Department of the Environment scheme only. The data for 1982-83 combine information from both the old and new schemes.

Single-parent Families

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set up an inquiry to examine the extent of passive dependency on welfare by single-parent families; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The latest figures available (May 1987) show 629,000 women and 30,000 men claiming supplementary benefit as heads of one-parent families, excluding cases of temporary separation. Of these claimants, about 67,000 women and 1,000 men had earnings from part-time work. The general reduction of disincentives to independence was one of the key aims of the reforms in social security benefits which we introduced in April and we shall be monitoring the effects of these changes.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the number of single unmarried women, divorced women, widows, separated women/and men and the relative percentages of each group out of the total number of lone-parent families in Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The latest available estimate of the number of lone-parent families in Great Btitain, published by the office of Population Censuses and Surveys using data from a variety of statistical sources, is 940,000 in 1984. Using information from general household surveys, OPCS estimates that that total is made up as follows:

Type of lone-parent family	Estimated Number	Percentage of total lone-parent families
Lone Mothers:
single	220,000	23
divorced	380,000	41
widowed	80,000	8
separated	170,000	18
Lone Fathers:	90,000	10
All lone parents	940,000	100

Benefits

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if pursuant to his answer of 18 April, Official Report, column 346, he will break down the £4 billion increase in the social security budget due to the real increase in the amount of benefits paid by each of the main benefits for which he is responsible; and what the real increase since 1978 has been on each benefit.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown) on 28 April 1988 at columns 251-52.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the average time taken for processing a successful claim for each of the major benefits for which his Department is responsible.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The national average clearance times for processing all claims for each of the major benefits are listed as follows. Separate figures for successful and unsuccessful claims are not available.

	Days
Sickness Benefit/Invalidity Benefit	11
Maternity Benefit	16
Retirement Pension	24
Income Support	5
Family Credit	[1]29·7

[1] The family credit figure of 29·7 days is for September, a period when claims clarance was affected by the postal dispute. The average clearance time in August was just over the target time of 18 working days.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing the value of (a) child benefit and (b) invalidity benefit for a married couple as a proportion of average net earnings for all males and all manually employed males for each year between November 1978 and the latest date available.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 29 July 1988, c. 822]: The information on child benefit is given in the following table from April 1979 when child tax allowances ceased. I regret that information is not available from which to calculate the average value of total invalidity benefit (including additional pension and invalidity allowance) received by married men. The following table therefore relates only to basic invalidity pension with an increase for an adult dependant. It takes no account of additional pension or invalidity allowance.

Unemployment Benefit

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps have been taken to ensure that the full extent normal rule, as at present interpreted, fulfils its original purpose and does not result in claimants being unreasonably refused unemployment benefit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have recently conducted a review of how the full extent normal rule operates in practice and will bring forward proposals shortly.

Maternity Payments

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what social fund payments are available for maternity needs in excess of the fixed grant of £85 and, where such payments are not available, from what alternative sources applicants are advised to seek help.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No other social fund payments are available for maternity expenses. Help is provided in the form of regular weekly benefits which, for those not in work, include income support with its added family premium and, for low-income working families, by family credit.

People on income support may make an application to the social fund for a payment not related to their maternity needs.

Mr. N. Facey (Member's Correspondence)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends to reply to the letter of 25 July from the hon. Member for Woolwich about Mr. N. Facey of 4 Lytton Strachey Path, SE28.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that we have no trace of this correspondence. If the hon. Member would forward a copy of his letter, I shall ensure that he is sent a reply.

Income Support

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the unit cost and estimated total annual cost of producing income support claim form B1.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The unit cost of income support claim form B1 is 10.29p and the estimated total annual cost is £578,182.

However, form B1 is always issued together with the housing benefit claim form NHB1 and the income support allowances and premiums sheet IS100. This increases the unit cost of the package to 12.49p. and the estimated annual cost to £767,700.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the percentage rate of identified errors in income support assessments; and what steps he is taking to improve the accuracy of assessments.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The income support error rate for the month ending 30 September 1988 was 9·4 per cent., a significant improvement on the error rate for the old supplementary benefit scheme.

(Source: Local Office monthly management information statistical returns based on the number of payments test-checked and the number of errors found in excess of 50p.)

The following steps are taken to improve further the accuracy of income support assessments:

Test checking and monitoring a random sample of all payments for accuracy. These results are used for local training of staff.

Adjudication and procedural instructions are constantly reviewed and expanded to provide staff with clearer and more precise guidance in areas of difficulty.

The office of the chief adjudication officer reports annually on the standards of adjudication achieved and makes recommendations for improvements.

Seasonal Workers

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people claiming income support are classed as seasonal workers in England, Wales and Scotland.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that this information is not available.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many complaints his Department has received in the last year regarding the payment of benefits to seasonal workers; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement regarding the position of seasonal workers and payment of unemployment benefit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A number of representations on unemployment benefits for seasonal workers are made every year. Following the publication in May of the report of the Social Security Advisory Committee on this subject (Cm. 374), officials have reviewed the operation of the additional condition for seasonal workers. We shall be making an announcement shortly.

Unemployed Persons

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what incentives his Department give to encourage the unemployed to take up short-term employment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government do not draw a distinction between short-term work and other work. We are concerned to encourage individual independence and enterprise by improving incentives to work generally.

The Government have already taken the following measures to help improve work incentives. The basic rate of income tax has been reduced from 33 per cent. to 25 per cent. and since 1979 personal tax allowances have been increased by 25 per cent. in real terms. Since October 1985 national insurance contributions have been reduced for those with low earnings and for their employers. In addition, the Department of Employment's claimant advisers explain to job seekers that rapid access to family credit and housing benefit can be provided for those re-entering employment.

The introduction of the reformed social security system in April helped to alleviate the unemployment trap by bringing more generous help through family credit. Alignment of the assessment rules for income-related benefit means that people with similar incomes are being treated equally whether in or out of work. The worst features of the poverty trap have been removed under the reformed structure. Family credit and housing benefit are being assessed using net, rather than gross, income. This means that the withdrawal of in-work income-related benefits no longer creates a fall in net income when gross earnings rise.

Hostel Dwellers

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has reached decisions on his Department's proposals to change the rules about paying benefit to hostel dwellers.

Mr. Scott: The consultation paper "Help With Hostel Charges", published in July, proposed ending special income support payments for people in hostels from April 1989. Comments were invited on two proposals: that normal income support and housing benefit should be paid to all hostel dwellers or, alternatively, only to those not receiving physical care.

I am grateful for the many responses to the proposals, which we are still considering. We have, however, decided at this stage to defer any changes until after April 1989, to allow us time to examine more fully the effects on hostels' finances. An announcement will be made once final decisions have been made.

DEFENCE

Estimates

61. Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the single largest percentage increase in the categories listed in table 23 volume 2, page 10, of the annual statement on the Defence Estimates over the period 1980-81 to 1988-89.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The largest percentage increase between 1980-81 and 1988-89 is that for nuclear strategic forces.

Trident

63. Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what effect the recent strike at VSEL, Barrow has had on the progress of the Trident submarine building programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: Construction work at VSEL on the two Vanguard class submarines so far ordered was suspended throughout the strike; however some sub-contract work continued. I am currently awaiting detailed proposals from VSEL for recovery of the Vanguard class programme and remain confident that the planned in-service date for Trident will remain unaltered.

WE 177 Replacement

64. Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of his discussions with the French and United States Governments on the development of a replacement for the WE 177 free fall nuclear bomb.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 26 October 1988.

London Offices

65. Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps have been taken to reduce the costs of his Department's London office space.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Department will very shortly complete its commitment to disperse 1,400 posts to Glasgow and in the meantime, is conducting the review announced by my right hon. Friend the Paymaster General on 31 March 1988, Official Report, columns 610-11.

Cancer (AWRE)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the implications for health of the atomic weapons research establishment Aldermaston work force of the results of the survey conducted at Aldermaston by the London school of hygiene and tropical medicine, published in the British Medical Journal in September, showing statistically significant excesses of levels of prostatic cancer.

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the incidence of different forms of cancer among people working at the atomic weapons research establishment; how these figures relate to the relevant averages for the United Kingdom as a whole; what medical examinations for carcinomas take place among the employees and how frequently; and whether he is generally satisfied with health levels at the establishment.

Mr. Sainsbury: The main conclusions of the study published in the BMJ No. 6651, Volume 297, on 24 September 1988 were that the mortality rates of AWE employees both from all causes and from all cancers were lower than those of the United Kingdom national averages for the general population when age distribution and sex were taken into account. No significant difference overall in mortality rates between exposed and non-exposed AWE workers was observed. In separate comparisons for 29 specific cancer categories the mortality rates for radiation-monitored workers was lower compared with that for other workers and with the national average in several categories, including leukaemia, multiple myeloma and lung cancer, and higher in some others. A suggestion of higher mortality rate from prostrate cancer in a very small group of workers who had accumulated comparatively high external exposures and had also been monitored for internal uptake of radioactive materials must be treated with caution; the numbers involved were very small. Although mortality from lung cancer in radiation workers was below the average for the general population, among workers monitored for internal exposure mortality from this cause rose as external exposure increased by the statistical link was weak.

The Government regard the findings as confirmation that the radiological protection policy operated by AWE during the period covered by this study was sound and effective, but accept the need for continuing vigilance to keep all radiation doses both internal and external "as low as reasonably practicable", in accordance with United Kingdom legislative measure and with the practices recommended by international and national radiological protection authorities. That is not to say that the suggestion that there might be a specific occupational hazard of prostrate cancer for a small group, similar to that observed in the study of workers in UKAEA, does not merit further study to establish whether it can be definitely associated with a particular aspect of employment. To this end, arrangements are being made for this study to be analysed with other similar ones for UKAEA and BNF plc, thus increasing the numbers of workers included with the anticipation that the outcome will be a more precise statistical estimate.

Information on cancer incidence has not been collated. All occupationally exposed workers are given a medical examination every two years unless there are grounds, including the individual's preference, for more frequent examinations. These examinations would be expected to uncover suspicion of any serious ailments including carcinomas which, if found, would then be referred immediately to the individual's own general practitioner. I am satisfied with health levels at the establishment.

Nuclear Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department has made any evaluation of extra-terrestial methods of the disposal of nuclear wastes, either by internal scientific study, or in conjunction with the United States of America.

Mr. Salisbury: No.

Ilminster Crash

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the crash between a military Mamoth Major transporter en route to the Bullpoint Royal Navy base at Plymouth and a car on the Ilminster by-pass on 17 September.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The road traffic accident in question is still subject to investigations under the direction of the local coroner, in the normal manner. It would be inappropriate for us to comment on the precise circumstances of the accident in advance of the coroner's inquest.

Search and Rescue

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list each Royal Air Force and Royal Navy search and rescue detachment in the United Kingdom, together with the number of ground and aircrew employed on search and rescue duties at each base, the number of search and rescue helicopters and other aircraft at each base and the cost of each detachment in 1987-88.

Mr. Freeman: A list of search and rescue (SAR) stations and aircraft assigned to the SAR role was included in the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Rhondda (Mr. Rogers) on 8 June 1988 at column 566. It is not our practice to give numbers of other operational aircraft, or of personnel assigned to specific operational roles.

On the subject of costs, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Devon, North (Mr. Speller) on 1 July 1988, at columns 225-26.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for each Royal Air Force and Royal Navy search and rescue detachment the total number of call outs in each year since 1984, the number of civilians and number of service personnel rescued.

Mr. Freeman: The figures requested by my hon. Friend are as follows:

[3] Nimrod MR aircraft operating from St. Mawgan and Kinloss provide assistance to SAR operations and may drop life-saving stores, but do not carry out rescues.

Royal Ordnance

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will name the chartered surveyors who were commissioned by him to value the land and buildings of the Royal Ordnance prior to its sale.

Mr. Sainsbury: Messrs Weatherall, Green and Smith.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what instructions he gave, concerning the assumptions to be made about planning permission, to the firm of chartered surveyors that he commissioned to value the land and buildings of Royal Ordnance.

Mr. Sainsbury: The instructions to Messrs Weatherall, Green and Smith required it to submit valuations of the freehold and leasehold properties of Royal Ordnance for balance sheet purposes as at 31 December 1985. It was also asked to advise on open market alternative use values of the properties. It was left to the chartered surveyors to use their professional judgment in assessing the effect on such values of any possible future changes in planning constraints. Both of these were updates of an earlier valuation in 1984.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the chartered surveyors who estimated the open market value of the Royal Ordnance sites at Waltham Abbey and Enfield in 1984 gave any estimates of their value that did not assume that their location within the metropolitan green belt area would inhibit their redevelopment.

Mr. Sainsbury: In 1984 alternative use valuation took account of existing planning constraints, and of the assumptions that a prospective purchaser might make about the prospects of obtaining consent for development. The 1986 updating was conducted on a similar basis.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to why the chartered surveyors commissioned by him to value the assets of Royal Ordnance were unable to determine an open market value for all of its assets.

Mr. Sainsbury: The chartered surveyors did provide such a valuation for the Royal Ordnance sites, using their professional judgment in assessing the likelihood of planning permission being granted for redevelopment and the possible timing of any such permission.

Wind Tunnels

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether it is proposed to dispose of the wind tunnels at Bedford and Farnborough or lease out the use of the facilities to private sector interests.

Mr. Sainsbury: There are no plans at present to dispose of the wind tunnels at Bedford or Farnborough. A study has been carried out into the feasibility of commercial management of the wind tunnels and the report is now being considered within the Ministry of Defence.

Royal Aerospace Establishment, Bedford

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much of the total acreage of the royal aerospace establishment, Bedford will be (a) retained and (b) available for disposal; and if he will make a statement about the future of the airfield at Thurleigh.

Mr. Sainsbury: There are no plans at present to dispose of the airfield at Thurleigh or any other part of the royal aerospace establishment, Bedford sites.

Research Establishments

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how it is proposed to safeguard long-term planning projects while restructuring of research establishments is being undertaken.

Mr. Sainsbury: The requirement of long-term projects will be taken into account in any proposals for restructuring the research establishments.

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are employed by (a) the Admiralty research establishment, (b) the royal aerospace establishment, (c) the royal armaments research and development establishment, (d) the royal signals and radar establishment, (e) the chemical defence establishment and (f) the aeroplane and armament experimental establishment; and what staff cuts are envisaged at each.

Mr. Sainsbury: As at 1 April 1988, the number of staff employed at each establishment was as follows:

	Numbers
Admiralty Research Establishment	3,006
Royal Aerospace Establishment	5,378
Royal Armaments Research and Development Establishment	2,340
Royal Signals and Radar Establishment	1,605
Chemical Defence Establishment	555
Aeroplane and Armament Experimental Establishment	1,133

Staffing levels are kept under continual review, and reflect current and predicted workloads.

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he intends the formation of a defence research agency to be the precursor of full privatisation of the establishments involved.

Mr. Sainsbury: Proposals for the creation of a defence research agency are currently under consideration. No decisions have yet been taken. However, full privatisation of the non-nuclear research establishments is not likely to be appropriate; the agency concept relates to the improvement of management efficiency in the public sector.

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he intends that the existing research establishments should form one unit or will be assembled under several entities.

Mr. Sainsbury: Decisions on the status and scope of the proposed defence research agency have yet to be taken.

Research Agency

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence where it is proposed to locate the administrative headquarters of the defence research agency.

Mr. Sainsbury: Decisions on the proposed defence research agency, including where its headquarters might be, have yet to be taken.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Apples and Pears

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from apple and pear growers seeking urgent approval by his Department of low volume spray procedures; and if he can give any indications of the progress in discussions with the industry on this matter.

Mr. Ryder: I have not received any representations from apple and pear growers as such, but horticultural interests are represented on our application technology panel by a nominee of the National Farmers Union. The panel is currently formulating guidance on the question which will be considered by the advisory committee on pesticides.

Users of reduced-volume application equipment do not require specific approval for the use of such equipment, nor are they obliged to follow recommended dilution rates for individual pesticides, although the total permitted dose is regulated. Moreover, growers are obliged by the legislation to "take all reasonable precautions to protect the health of human beings, creatures and plants, to safeguard the environment, and in particular to avoid pollution of water".

Guidance as to what would constitute appropriate precautions for low-volume use generally is given in part 6 of our revised draft code of practice for the agricultural and commercial horticultural use of pesticides. However the code does not yet cover air-assisted applications. Until such guidance can be made available users of air-assisted equipment should judge, in the light of the nature of the compound, their experience and their local circumstances, what would constitute reasonable precautions.

Hinkley Point C (Inquiry)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy towards his departmental witnesses at the Hinckley Point C public inquiry answering questions on the merits of departmental policy.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Witnesses from my Department appearing at the Hinkley Point C public inquiry will present factual evidence on matters for which MAFF either has statutory responsibility or appropriate expertise. They will assist the inquiry by explaining departmental policy but will not expect to answer any question which, in the opinion of the inspector, is directed to the merits of that policy. This is in accordance with rules 12(3) of the inquiries procedures rules 1987.

Milk Quota

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he anticipates that there will be a need for further cuts in the milk quota beyond those already agreed.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I am not aware of any plans to make further reductions in milk quotas.

Beef and Sheep Premiums

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning the retention of the beef and sheep variable premiums; and if he will make a statement on the proposals put forward by the European Community Commission to end them.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I continue to receive a number of such representations. The Commission's proposals for the reform of the beef and sheepmeat regimes have just been received, and I am studying them closely.

Set-Aside Scheme

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farm workers have lost their jobs as a result of their employers entering the set-aside scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: As the scheme has only just come into operation, this information is not available. I will, however, be monitoring carefully the impact of the scheme.

Whales

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what representations have been made to the Danish Government in respect of the slaughter of pilot whales and white-sided dolphins by Faroe islanders; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make it his policy to prohibit the importation of produce from Denmark until the slaughter of pilot whales and white-sided dolphins is prohibited in the Faroe Islands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We have expressed our concern to the Danish Government about the manner in which the Faroese hunting of pilot whales is conducted. In response to our raising this in the International Whaling Commission the Faroese authorities now exercise tighter control of the hunting and have take measures to improve its humaneness. I would caution against the hope of securing a complete stop to the hunting as there is no evidence that the pilot whale stock has been endangered by the Faroese catches.

I understand from the Danish authorities that the killing of dolphins last year was in contravention of Faroese law and the incident was investigated by the local police.

We are not taking trade sanctions. It is widely recognised that the Government have taken a positive lead on the conservation of whales. We consider that the appropriate way forward is to continue to work for this through the International Whaling Commission which we regard as the primary forum for all whaling matters.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

British Telecom

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has on the allowance made by the Director General of the Office of Telecommunications in his negotiations with British Telecom for return on capital employed.

Mr. Forth: The Director General of Telecommunications wrote to my right hon. and noble Friend shortly before making his public statement of 7 July, which set out the considerations that had influenced the director general's discussions with British Telecom. The allowances he made for various elements is a matter for him.

Staff Sickness

Mr. Ames: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many working days are lost to his Department by staff sickness; and what are the figures for each month since 1983.

Mr. Forth: Monthly figures are not available, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Annual totals of days of sick absence from 1984 onwards are:

Year	Days
1984	132,270
1985	164,520
1986	154,979
1987	164,840

Mr. Ames: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many working days are lost to his Department through staff suffering from (a) migraine and (b) backache; and what are the figures for each month since 1984.

Mr. Forth: Data on staff sick absence are not held in the form requested, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ames: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many staff of his Department are absent from work because of (a) migraine and (b) backache; and what are the figures for each month since 1984.

Mr. Forth: Data on staff sick absence are not held in the form requested, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Space Programmes

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he or his departmental officials have had any recent discussions with the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority over plans being developed within the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority to create an international inspectorate for monitoring the safety and reliability of space programmes.

Mr. Newton: No. As part of its business development plans the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority is actively seeking R and D contracts in the space market and is well qualified to give advice on the safety and reliability of space programmes. However neither my Department nor the authority has plans to create an international space inspectorate.

Airbus

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the total amount in cash in 1988 prices given by successive Governments to British Aerospace for Airbus Industrie for Airbus projects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: In 1988 prices £376·56 million has been given by successive Governments to British Aerospace for Airbus Industrie Airbus projects.

Urban Development

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what contribution is being made by Her Majesty's Government to British Urban Development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The Government warmly welcomed the announcement of the British Urban Development initiative, but they make no financial contribution towards the initiative.

Petrol (Retailing)

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish the terms of reference of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission inquiry into petroleum retailing in the United Kindom.

Mr. Maude: The Director General of Fair Trading, who has announced his intention to refer the wholesaling of petrol in the United Kingdom to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, will publish the terms when the reference is formally made.

British Aerospace

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will visit the British Aerospace works, Broughton, Clwyd; what is his estimate of the number of jobs involved in the projects in the United Kingdom concerning Airbus Industrie; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 26 October 1988]: I have no immediate plans to visit the British Aerospace works at Broughton. On the basis of information presently available to my Department, it is estimated that approximately 10,850 jobs are involved in Airbus production in the United Kingdom.

Foreign Investors

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether, in the light of his decision to accept the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's ruling on the level of the stake in BP held by the Kuwait Investment Office, he will make a statement on his policy towards the size of shareholding by foreign investors in the United Kingdom companies which will be permitted in future.

Mr. Maude: [holding answer 26 October 1988]: We shall continue to consider qualifying mergers under the Fair Trading Act 1973 on a case by case basis, without discriminating between acquisitions made by UK and overseas enterprises. The Director General of Fair Trading will continue to examine any acquisition of shares in order to establish whether it constitutes a qualifying merger under the Act.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his assessment of the repercussions on foreign investors operating in the City of London of the decision to order the Kuwait Investment Office to reduce its holding in BP; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: [holding answer 26 October 1988]: Each merger situation is considered individually, on its merits, under the provisions of the Fair Trading Act 1973. The recommendations of the MMC on the Kuwait Investment Office holding in BP applied to one holding in one company, and were reached in the light of special and unusual circumstances. The Government's general attitude towards investment by foreigners in the UK is to welcome it.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment he has made, in the light of the decision to order the Kuwait Investment Office to reduce its stake in BP, of the likelihood of other countries taking reciprocal action against British companies holding substantial stakes in overseas companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: [holding answer 26 October 1988]: I am not aware of any reason to suppose that UK companies with overseas investments are being asked to reduce those investments.

WALES

Speech Therapy Services

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the amount of cash spent on speech therapy services in 1982 and in 1986-87; what is the percentage increase in real terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: NHS expenditure on speech therapy services in Wales in 1982-83 was £909,500 and 1986-87 was £1,446,100. This represents an increase in real terms of 32·8 per cent. over the period.

Physiotherapy Services

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the expenditure on physiotherapy services in the National Health Service in Wales in 1982 and 1986-87; what was the percentage increase; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: NHS expenditure on physiotherapy and remedial gymnastic services is grouped together in financial statistics. Such expenditure in Wales in 1982-83 was £4,236,600 and in 1986-87 was £6,810,300. This represents an increase in real terms of 34·2 per cent. over the period.

Elm Crossroads, Mold (Improvements)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will publish the Clwyd county council report on Elm crossroads, Alltami, Mold Clwyd; and if he will make a statement; if he will implement urgently the findings of the report and make available cash for the proposed improvements; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list the short-term measures Clwyd county council proposes to improve road safety at Elm crossroads; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Clwyd county council has reported that Elm junction has a comparatively low accident record and should not be improved in advance of consideration of possible overall improvement of the A494 between Hawarden bypass and the proposed Mold bypass. In the meantime the county council has been instructed to implement its recommended alteration to traffic signs at the junction and their illumination.

Belmont Special School, Clwyd

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make special funds available to the Training Commission to enable Belmont special school, Buckley, Clwyd to participate in the current work experience scheme for those aged 16-plus years who are slow learners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The decision whether to adapt the existing community programme provision in respect of Belmont special school to meet the requirements of employment training rests with the training manager at the north-east Wales institute. Any question of allocating education resources to this project is for the local education authority in the light of its priorities.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will invite the chairman of the Training Commission to visit Ysgol Belmont, Buckley, Clwyd, to discuss the difficulties facing the school's work experience scheme by senior students in January 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Bovine Somatotropin

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will organise and address an all-Wales conference of dairy farmers, the farming unions, consumer organisations, retail dairymen, supermarket and shop owners, medical consultants and general practitioners to receive reports and debate the current field trials of bovine somatotropin in milk production.

Mr. Peter Walker: No.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to disclose where field trials concerning bovine somatotropin in Wales are taking place; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: No. Section 118 of the Medicines Act 1968 prohibits the disclosure of information supplied by applicants for product licences and test certificates. It is therefore not possible to divulge the location of the trials.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the impact upon the dairy milk quota system of the use of bovine somatotropin in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: The overall level of milk production in the EC is controlled by quotas. Bovine somatotropin, which is currently under test in a limited number of field trials, has had no impact on the milk quota system.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will seek to ensure by regulation and legislation that companies dealing in hazardous wastes will demonstrate that they have used legal means to dispose of their waste.

Mr. Grist: Provision for the certification of the proper disposal of special wastes exists under the Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations 1980.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will seek to ensure that companies, involved in managing tips receiving hazardous waste, will, when the tipping site is exhausted, make the site safe; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will introduce legislation and regulations which will give greater powers to local authorities, as waste disposal authorities, to sue hazardous waste diposing companies which break the law; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Amendments to waste disposal law which will strengthen the powers of waste disposal authorities to enforce site licensing conditions and extend the licensing arrangements to apply after a site has been closed were amongst the proposals announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on 29 June. The necessary legislation will be introduced as soon as parliamentary time permits.

Hazardous Waste Inspectors

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many hazardous waste inspectors there are in Wales; how many were in post 1979; if he will take steps to increase the number of hazardous waste inspectors; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will indicate from which locations hazardous waste inspectors work.

Mr. Grist: The hazardous waste inspectorate was formed in 1983 and incorporated into Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution in 1987. One inspector, based in Cardiff, has worked in Wales since 1983. The staffing of the inspectorate is kept under continuous review.

Golftyn High School

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet the town council in Connah's Quay, the parent-teachers association of Golftyn high school for separate talks at the town council chambers on the future of Golftyn high school.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many pupils are on roll at Golftyn high school; when Golftyn high school was opened; and what was its cost of building and furnishing at 1988 prices.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: At January 1988 the number of pupils on roll at Connahs Quay (Golftyn) high school was 644. Information is not available in the Department on the date of the school's opening and its cost.

Adult Training Programme

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many employees of the community task force have had redundancy notices sent to them as a result of replacing the community programme and the job training scheme with the adult training programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Durham, North-West (Ms. Armstrong) on 19 October 1988, at column 869, by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Employment. Thirty-five people left the community task force in Wales.

Traws Goed and Pwllpeirian Experimental Farms

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has had any direct or indirect consultations with any organisations regarding any future plans to close or run down Traws Goed and Pwllpeirian experimental farms in Cardiganshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: My officials have been in discussions with the industry in Wales on the Government's proposals to withdraw public funding from near market research. It is too early to say what effects the proposals will have on individual establishments. Much will depend on the amount of that research industry is prepared to fund.

Health Services, Clwyd

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the amount of money paid by Clwyd health authority to (a) the Clwyd north and (b) the Clwyd south parts of the authority for health services for each of the years from 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The accounts presented by Clwyd health authority to the Department do not separately identify the expenditure incurred by units within the authority. This information can only be obtained from the authority itself.

Enveloping Schemes

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the enveloping schemes undertaken since the inception of the scheme, together with those in progress, the forecast and actual time taken to complete the schemes and the total cost of these schemes;

(2) what monitoring is undertaken by his Department of enveloping schemes; and whether he is satisfied with the current level of supervision by local authorities of contractors' work carried out in conjunction with these schemes.

Mr. Grist: Since we introduced enveloping in Wales in 1982, 85 schemes have been undertaken or are currently under way. The information is shown in the following tables:

The time taken to complete schemes varies considerably from project to project and largely depends on their size and the programming arrangements adopted by individual local authorities. To date, more than 7,000 dwellings have benefited by this innovative approach at a cost of more than £47 million.

The Department liaises very closely with local authorities as schemes are being developed and while the work is in progress.

Redberth and Sageston Bypass, Pembrokeshire

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received on the case for a bypass for the villages of Redberth and Sageston, Pembrokeshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Apart from the representation from my hon. Friend, a petition has been received signed by 13 residents of Redberth and representations from South Pembrokeshire district council, Carew community council and two local residents.

The start date of the Sageston bypass scheme remains post-1990 as shown in "Roads in Wales" (1985). The latest position of bypasses for Redberth and Sageston will be announced in the next edition of "Roads in Wales".

Chronically Ill Patients (Travelling Expenses)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what provision is made for reimbursing chronically ill patients who use their own transport when travelling for treatment at a hospital in a separate health district; how many reimbursements were made in the last year for which figures are available; and what was the average reimbursement made.

Mr. Grist: Chronically sick patients who use their own transport may qualify for reimbursement under the National Health Service hospital travel costs scheme. Individual payments made by health authorities are not recorded centrally.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has as to the annual cost of inter-authority transport arrangements for chronically ill patients requiring treatment in a hospital run by a different health authority; what was the average cost per patient in the last year for which figures are available; and what was the total number of journeys undertaken.

Mr. Grist: The information is not held centrally.

Cash Limits

Mr. Gwilyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if there is to be any change to the cash limit for class XVII, vote 5 for the current financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Yes. Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit on class XVII, vote 5, is to be changed from £24,784,000 to £223,766,000. This is the net effect of two changes to the cash limit.

There is a reduction of £1,203,000 to compensate for an overspend in 1987-88. This follows the normal practice of reducing the cash limit for one financial year by the amount of the previous year's overspend. The reduction is partly offset by an increase of £185,000 which represents part of the £383,000 allocated to Wales for disbursement to various voluntary sector bodies following the error in the calculation of the retail prices index as announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services on 18 December 1987.

63. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met his counterparts in the Group of Seven; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The Group of Seven Finance Ministers and central bank governors met on 24 September, and issued a communiqué in which they renewed their commitment to policies leading to sustained growth, low inflation and exchange rate stability.

101. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the annual deficit for 1988 on the current account.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In the first half of 1988 real personal disposable income was 3 per cent. higher than in the first half of 1987.

Pound Sterling (Exchange Rate)

40. Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the Confederation of British Industry about the exchange rate of pound sterling.

50. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the Confederation of British Industry about the exchange rate of pound sterling.

87. Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the Confederation of British Industry about the exchange rate of pound sterling.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given earlier today by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor to the hon. Member for Wolverhampton, South-East (Mr. Turner).

Corporation Tax

41. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Chancellor ot the Exchequer if he will make a statement on levels of corporation tax in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) in the United Kingdom's major international competitors.

Mr. Norman Lamont: International comparisons of the levels of corporation tax are difficult to make because of the variations in tax structures and the different rules for measuring profits. The table sets out the top corporation tax rate for the United Kingdom and a number of other countries.

Top Corporation Tax Rate

	Percentage
United Kingdom	35
Australia	39
Belgium	43
Canada	28
Denmark	50
France	42
Germany	56
Greece	49
Ireland	47
Italy	36
Japan	42
Luxembourg	36
Netherlands	42
Portugal	35
Spain	35
United States	34

Notes:
1. Some of these countries have lower rates or special reliefs for companies with profits below certain levels.
2. There are also local or additional company taxes in some of these countries and some have different rates for distributed profits. Some countries have lower rates for particular types of company.
3. The rates shown are those currently in force. Lower rates are proposed in Belgium, France, Germany, Greece, Luxembourg and the Netherlands.

42. Mr. Hind: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the latest figures for the growth of industrial production in the British economy.

128. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the latest figures for the growth of industrial production in the British economy.

102. Dr. Reid: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will indicate the areas of expenditure to which he attaches priority in making decisions on public expenditure for the forthcoming year.

111. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the priorities he will have in preparing his statement on public expenditure for the forthcoming financial year.

117. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will indicate the areas of expenditure to which he attaches priority in making decisions on public expenditure for the forthcoming year.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan (Mr. Wray) on 29 July at column 744.

121. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures for the growth of manufacturing investment.

Mr. Major: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter).

Share Sales (Privatisation)

46. Mr. Knowles: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many share sales have taken place since 1979 as a result of the Government's policy of privatisation.

74. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many share sales have taken place since 1979 as a result of the Government's policy of privatisation.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Cannock and Burntwood (Mr. Howarth).

Personal Taxation (Yields)

51. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to the effect of the reduction of income tax rates in the United Kingdom and in other countries on total tax yields from personal taxes.

94. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has of the extent to which a further reduction of the marginal rate of income tax may generate more tax revenue; and if he has any indication of the extra revenue generated to date by his Budget measures.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Estimates of the direct revenue costs of the reductions in income tax rates were published in the financial statement and Budget report on Budget day. Notwithstanding those reductions, provisional figures suggest that income tax receipts in the first six months of 1988-89 are 6½ per cent. higher than in the corresponding period in 1987-88 as a result of the growth in employment and earnings. It is not possible to isolate the effects of the Budget measures on these factors; nor is it possible to estimate corresponding effects of any further reductions in tax rates. Experience in other countries supports the view that there are significant benefits from reducing high rates of personal tax.

Balance of Payments (Tax Cuts)

56. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated effect to date of tax cuts announced in his Budget on the balance of payments.

Mr. Major: I expect the cuts in income tax rates to improve the United Kingdom's economic performance, and so to increase output and exports.

Excise Duties and VAT

57. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement concerning the latest proposals of the Commission of the European Economic Communities concerning the reinstatement of excise duties and value added tax.

Mr. Lilley: I assume that the hon. Gentleman is referring to the European Commission's proposals for the approximation of indirect tax rates. No new proposals have been put forward since the original package published in August 1987. The Government remain of the view that tax approximation is unnecessary for the completion of the single market. It could not be introduced without the unanimous consent of all member states. At an informal meeting of Economic and Finance Ministers in September my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer presented a paper setting out an alternative, market based approach to completing the single market. Copies have been placed in the Library. The paper remains on the table for further consideration alongside the Commission's proposals. The Commission is currently re-examining its proposals in the light of the many serious reservations expressed by member states.

Investment (Economy)

58. Mr. Watts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures for the growth of investment in the economy.

113. Mr. Mans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures for the growth of investment in the economy.

114. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures for the growth of investment in the economy.

Mr. Major: Total fixed investment in the whole economy at 1985 prices grew by 10·5 per cent. in the second quarter of this year compared to the same period in 1987.

Earnings

59. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the contribution to falling unemployment of 1 per cent. off the annual increase in average earnings.

122. Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the contribution to falling unemployment of 1 per cent. off the annual increase in average earnings.

Mr. Major: A decrease in the level of pay settlements which brought them more closely into line with increases in productivity would have an important effect in reducing unemployment. This is now on a firm downward trend, and greater wage restraint would help to keep it there.

Labour Statistics

60. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the increase in total employment in the economy since 1983.

Mr. Major: Total employment in the whole economy has risen by over 2 million since March 1983. This is more than in any other EC country.

Self-employment

65. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the increase in total self-employment in the economy since 1979.

76. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the increase in total self-employment in the economy since 1979.

125. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the increase in total self-employment in the economy since 1979.

Mr. Major: Since 1979 self-employment has increased by more than 1 million, or over 50 per cent., which is more than six times as much as in the previous 30 years.

Manufacturing Productivity

66. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the growth of manufacturing productivity in the economy since 1980.

Mr. Major: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer my right hon. Friend the Paymaster General gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, North (Mr. Burt).

Manufacturing Productivity

118. Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give his latest estimate of the growth of manufacturing productivity over the latest three-months period for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: In the three months to August 1988, output per head in manufacturing was 7½ per cent. higher than the same period a year earlier.

Civil Servants (Locations)

67. Mr. Holt: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many civil servants employed in (a) the Treasury, (b) Customs and Excise, (c) Inland Revenue and (d) other departments for which he is responsible work in the (i) north of England, (ii) south of England and (iii) midlands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: At 1 April 1988, the staff numbers in the Chancellor's departments were:

Full time equivalents

Department	North of England	South of England	Midlands
HM Treasury (inclusive CISCO)	62	2,810	117
HM Customs and Excise	4,300	16,891	1,947
Inland Revenue	17,623	28,594	8,595
Others	4,908	3,509	52

National Economics Development Council

68. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last attended a meeting of the National Economic Development Council; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Major: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave on 16 June at columns 268-69 to my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre Forest (Mr. Coombs).

MF and World Bank

80. Mr. Stuart Holland: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make a statement on the action taken by Her Majesty's Government in the light of the September meetings of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank.

Mr. Lilley: At the Berlin meetings, Finance Ministers of the main industrialised countries renewed their commitment to policies leading to sustained growth, low inflation and exchange rate stability.

The meetings welcomed the agreement reached by the Paris Club to implement proposals which my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer first made in April 1987 to provide substantial relief on the official debts of some of the poorest and most heavily indebted countries in Africa which are following approved adjustment programmes. The United Kingdom will play its part in these reschedulings, the first of which is due to be discussed this month.

Independent Advisers

82. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many independent advisers he has who are paid from public funds.

84. Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many independent advisers he has who are paid from public funds.

132. Mr. Hood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many independent advisers he has who are paid from public funds.

Mr. Brooke: I refer the hon. Members to the reply given earlier today by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the hon. Member for Western Isles (Mr. Macdonald).

Manufacturing Output

83. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the growth of manufacturing output during the first half of 1988.

90. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the growth of manufacturing output during the first half of 1988.

91. Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the growth of manufacturing output during the first half of 1988.

124. Mr. Mills: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the growth of manufacturing output during the first half of 1988.

Mr. Major: Manufacturing output grew by 6·9 per cent. in the three months up to August compared with the same period a year earlier.

IMF and World Bank

88. Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the joint annual meeting of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank.

Mr. Lilley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my right hon. Friend the Chancellor gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Cardiff, North (Mr. Jones).

Departmental Staff (Work Rate)

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has made any estimate of the increase in work rate of those members of his Department whose marginal rates of tax were cut by the budget to 40 per cent.

Mr. Brooke: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 12 April 1988 at column 66.

Scotch Whisky

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total amount of revenue accruing to the Exchequer from (a) exports of Scotch whisky and (b) domestic sales of Scotch whisky for the financial year 1987-88.

Mr. Lilley: It is estimated that about half the £2.1 billion VAT and excise duty revenue on spirits in 1987-88 came from domestic sales of Scotch whisky. Indirect taxes are not charged on exports of Scotch whisky.

Gold Stocks (Bank of England)

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the value of gold currently held by the Bank of England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: $8.1 billion.

Company Taxation

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the latest position on the European harmonisation of company taxation.

Mr. Lilley: I understand that the European Commission is still considering its draft proposals for harmonisation of the business tax base.

VAT

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals to extend the range of goods and services covered by value added tax are currently being considered; how many recent representations he has received on this topic; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The Government are considering how to implement the European Court of Justice's ruling that certain of our VAT zero rates do not comply with existing Community law. The European Commission has proposed approximation of VAT rates, which would involve VAT being charged on all items currently zero-rated; but we have made it clear that we do not consider tax approximation to be a necessary precondition for completing the internal market and that we cannot accept any proposals which would restrict our present ability to use VAT zero rating. We have received a number of representation on these, and other, aspects of VAT zero rating.

Price Stability

110. Mr. Latham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make a statement on progress in achieving the Government's ultimate objective of price stability.

Mr. Major: The Government's decisive action in raising interest rates this summer shows our determination to keep on top of inflation.

Company Cars

112. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any further plans to seek to increase the taxation paid by individuals enjoying the benefits of a company car.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I cannot anticipate what changes my right hon. Friend might want to make in his Budget. However, in his last Budget, when proposing increases to the scale charges which apply where an individual has the benefit of a company car, my right hon. Friend pointed out that the scale of undertaxation of company cars was too great to be put right in a single year.

EC (Finance Ministers)

115. Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met his counterparts in the EEC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met his counterparts in the European Economic Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. Friend attended the informal meeting of European Community Finance Ministers in Crete from 16-18 September, at which the question of the approximation of indirect taxation was further discussed. No conclusions were reached.

Government Revenue

127. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much his latest estimate of total Government revenue in 1988-89 differs from his Budget forecast.

Mr. Major: Given the expectation of higher economic growth than previously forecast, it is likely that receipts will be higher in 198-89 than forecast at Budget time. A new forecast of general Government receipts will be given in the autumn statement next month.

Fiscal Policy

130. Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he has taken to prepare British fiscal policy for 1992.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend circulated a paper on 8 September to other EC Finance Minister on a market-based approach to harmonisation of indirect taxation within the EC. This was discussed at an informal Ecofin in Crete on 17 September. The Commission has not yet published its formal proposals for the harmonisation of the business tax base.

Company Taxation

131. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what resources the Inland Revenue is currently devoting to investigations of the tax affairs of companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: For the year to April 1988 the Inland Revenue estimates that some 1,200 man-years of its staff resources were devoted to the examination of company accounts.

Balance of Trade

133. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will call a conference of Government, the Trades Union Congress and the Confederation of British Industry to discuss the implications for the British economy of the adverse balance of trade.

Mr. Major: No.

Official Report

Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the price per issue of the Official Report; the amount of subsidy per issue; and what was the figure for each year since 1970;

(2) how many copies of the Official Report are sold; and what were the figures for each year since 1983.

Mr. Lilley: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies I gave him on 26 October.

Civil Servants (Leave)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce a scheme whereby all established civil servants receive one day's increased annual leave per year of service to a maximum limit of 30 days; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Civil Service leave allowances compare favourably with those offered by other employers, and their competitiveness will increase still further as improvements already agreed are brought in. From 1 April 1991 all non-industrial civil servants with one year's service will enjoy five weeks' leave, arising to six weeks after 10-20 years service, depending on grade.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the amount of annual leave granted to civil servants of the following grades (a) administrative assistant, (b) administrative officer, (c) executive officer, (d) higher executive officer, (e) SEO, (f) grade 7, (g) grade 6 and (h) grade 5.

Mr. Brooke: The information is as follows:

Flexible Working Hours

Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will increase the existing limit on flexible working hours to four days per month; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: No. I have no such plan.

Civil Servants (Pay)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the rates of pay of civil servants of the following grades (a) administrative assistant, (b) administrative officer, (c) executive officer, (d) higher executive officer, (e) SEO, (f) grade 7, (g) grade 6 and (h) grade 5.

Mr. Brooke: The pay scales of the grades in question are as follows (with effect from 1 April 1988 unless other wise stated):

Public Bills (Reprinting)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report, a list of Public Bills which were reprinted during the 1987-88 Session; what was the reason for reprinting each Bill; and what was the cost.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 26 October 1988]: The information requested is given in the table:

Advance Forecasts

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his response to the Treasury and Civil Service Committee's recommendations that Parliament should be provided with advance forecasts in the autumn to set beside expenditure decisions.

Mr. Major: [holding answer 26 October 1988]: The Government's response to the Treasury and Civil Service

Select Committee's recommendations was published on 25 October by the Committee in its fourth special report (House of Commons paper 675).

Elton John

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Minister for the Arts how much Sothebys paid the Victoria and Albert museum for the preview they staged on the sale of the possessions of Elton John.

Mr. Luce: The recent exhibition of part of the collection of Elton John was staged at the Victoria and Albert museum with the support of Sothebys. The cost of setting up the exhibition was met by Sothebys.

The museum's purpose in exhibiting the collection was to reach a new audience, a sector of the public who may not traditionally visit museums. I understand that visitor numbers to the museums more than doubled during the period of the exhibition.

CIVIL SERVICE

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service, if he will state the amounts reclaimed from his office for expenditure incurred by Her Majesty's embassies and high commissions arising from ministerial visits abroad in each year since 1985.

Mr. Luce: The information is not held in the form requested and cannot be obtained except at disproportionate cost.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Norman Shaw North Issue Office

Mr. Amess: To ask the Lord President of the Council if there are any plans to review the opening hours of the Norman Shaw north issue office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: The opening hours of the Norman Shaw north issue office are kept continuously under review. Most recently, on 2 February 1988, the Services Committee resolved that the experimental arrangement, to extend the opening hours from 6 pm to 10 pm be made permanent.

Vote Office

Mr. Amess: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he has any plans to review the access to the Vote Office of staff of hon. Members before 8.45 am on sitting days; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: The Deliverer of the Vote keeps this matter under constant review with the object of commencing service to the staff of right hon. and hon. Members as early as possible. As my hon. Friend may be aware, the House of Commons (Services) Committee, recently recommended in its second report, Session 1987-88: "Access to the Precincts of the House" (para 37 and 38; HC 580), that the Deliverer of the Vote should retain the discretion to vary his services to non-Members.

Palace of Westminster (Security Officers)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, when the grade 3/4 security officers employed at the Palace of Westminster will receive their 1988 pay award.

Mr. Beith: The House of Commons Commission has no responsibility for determining the salaries of security officers employed at the Palace of Westminster, whose services are provided by the Commissioner for the Metropolitan Police. The House's contribution to the cost of the service is, however, carried on sub-head A9 of the Vote for House of Commons: Administration, the Estimate for which is approved by the Commission. I understand that a settlement of the security officers' 1988 pay award is now in prospect, and I have asked the responsible authority to write to the hon. Gentleman to explain the position.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Criminal Jurisdiction Act 1975

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish in the Official Report, the text of his letter of 19 October to the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North where he refers to the difficulties involved in the use of the Criminal Jurisdiction Act 1975 and its equivalent to the Republic of Ireland to try alleged offenders in one jurisdiction for offences committed in the other.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My right hon. Friend wrote to the hon. Member on 19 October 1988 in the following terms:

"You wrote to the Prime Minister on 26 September advocating greater use of the Criminal Law (Jurisdiction) Act 1976 to have fugitive terrorist offenders tried in the Republic of Ireland rather than seeking their extradition.

The provision of our Criminal Jurisdiction Act 1975 and the 1976 Act which is the equivalent Irish legislation give rise to certain difficulties which make its use more restrictive than extradition. But I can assure you that the Attorney General and the prosecuting authorities do bear the Act very much in mind when seeking to bring fugitives to justice. If a suitable case arises it will be used. Our policy is to use the most effective route in any given instance.

It is the Government's expressed concern that there should be no hiding place for terrorists anywhere in the island of Ireland and that those accused of serious crimes should not be able to escape justice by fleeing the jurisdiction. The Irish Government shares that concern. That is why we are working together to make the arrangements for dealing with fugitive offenders as effective as possible".

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the difficulties referred to in his letter to the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North of 19 October.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The main difficulties with the use of the extraterritorial legislation to proceed against terrorists apprehended in the Republic of Ireland stem from the fact that a case prepared in one jurisdiction has to be run in another, with a differing system of justice, particularly with regard to rules of evidence. The precise areas will of course vary accordingly to the particular details of each case.

As my right hon. Friend stated in his letter of 19 October to the hon. Member, the Attorney-General and the prosecuting authorities do bear the legislation very much in mind when seeking to bring fugitives to justice. Both we and the Government of the Republic of Ireland are working together to make the arrangements for dealing with fugitive offenders as effective as possible.

EMPLOYMENT

London Docklands

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what facilities the employment service has in London docklands; and what percentage of new jobs in docklands are advertised through his Department's jobcentres.

Mr. Nicholls: The employment service has a network of thirteen jobcentres and unemployment benefit offices in and around the docklands.

The existing network is to be further enhanced by a new docklands mobile jobcentre which will be operational from November 1 this year. This office will visit five sites each week in the boroughs of Newham and Tower Hamlets and will provide access to the full facilities of the employment service. During the period April-September this year 10,798 vacancies were notified to offices in and around docklands. It is not possible to calculate what percentage of the total vacancies available in the docklands this represents.

Northamptonshire (Labour Statistics)

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were employed (a) full-time and (b) full-time equivalents in Northamptonshire and in each of its seven districts in March 1979 and March 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: Employee estimates for counties and smaller areas are available only for dates when censuses of employment are taken and cover only estimates of the numbers of full-time and part-time workers in different industries and services. The available information, taken from the September 1981 and September 1984 censuses of employment, is given in the table below. The information collected in the census of employment is not sufficiently detailed to support the accurate calculation of full-time equivalents.

Employees in employment[1] (thousands)

County and districts[2]	September 1981			September 1984

[1] The figures exclude the self-employed and members of HM Forces.
[2] The areas are defined in terms of ward boundaries as at 1981.
[3] Part-timers are defined as those working not more than 30 hours a week.

Piper Alpha

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what resources of the Health and Safety Commission and Executive were involved in work subsequent upon the Piper Alpha incident.

Mr. Nicholls: A total of approximately 25 man weeks have been spent to date by nine Health and Safety Executive staff, acting on behalf of the Health and Safety Commission, on work relating to the technical investigation subsequent to the Piper Alpha incident.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what work the Health and Safety Commission and Executive had to postpone owing to resources being allocated to work consequent upon the Piper Alpha incident.

Mr. Nicholls: The main effect of the assignment of Health and Safety Executiveinspectors to assist with the investigation of the Piper Alpha incident was to delay some planned preventive work.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of industrial accidents which result in an emergency services call-out do not receive attention from the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of accidents in the construction industry are not visited by inspectors from the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Nicholls: Between 1 April 1987 and 31 March 1988 all accidents involving fatal injuries were investigated. In the same period 91·7 per cent. of the total of reportable injuries occurring in the construction industry which were reported to the Health and Safety Executive's factory and agricultural inspectorates were not investigated. Reported accidents are selected for investigation after considering the gravity of the apparent breach, the need to give advice and the value of any information that would be obtained to prevent similar accidents.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of the time of Health and Safety Executive's construction inspectors is now taken up with work relating to so-called blitzes, fatalities and prosecutions.

Mr. Nicholls The amount of time devoted to work by construction inspectors on the blitzes, which ended in September 1988 and on investigating fatal accidents is not recorded separately.

Information about the amount of time construction inspectors devote to prosecutions is also not recorded separately. However, it is expected that construction inspectors during the current year will devote about 13 per cent. of their time to legal work, most of which will relate to prosecutions.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement concerning the number of experienced factory inspectors leaving the Health and Safety Executive; and what steps he intends taking to reduce such losses in the future.

Mr. Nicholls: The staffing of the factory inspectorate is a matter for the Health and Safety Commission and Executive. Between 1 January 1979 and 31 December 1987, 333 experienced factory inspectors left HSE of whom 178 resigned, 135 retired and 20 left for other reasons. During the same period 242 factory inspectors joined HSE.

New long-term pay arrangements, agreed last year, allow greater flexibility in determining future salaries, and improvements are currently being discussed between HM Treasury and the Institution of Professional Civil Servants. Also, within the HSE, training and career development arrangements for all inspectors are being re-examined, with a view to broadening and enhancing what is already rewarding, if demanding, work. Particular attention is being focused on inspectors in mid-career.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what priority he attaches to the enforcement of the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations; and what assessment he has made as to whether there are sufficient Health and Safety Executive inspectors in place to fully implement these regulations.

Mr. Nicholls: Health and Safety enforcement priorities, and allocation of appropriate resources, are matters for the Health and Safety Commission and Executive, whose total resources are reviewed annually. I am satisfied that sufficient resources will be available to the Executive to enforce the regulations.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many written reports have been received under the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazard Regulations; what proportion this represents of reports that are required for submission before June 1989; and what assessment he has made as to whether there are sufficient inspectors in the Health and Safety Executive adequately to scrutinise the reports.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive has received centrally 123 safety reports as required by the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazards (CIMAH) Regulations 1984. There are currently about 300 sites subject to the more specific requirements of CIMAH ("top tier" sites) where compliance with regulation 7 is required.

It is impossible to give a precise estimate of the number of safety reports which Health and Safety Executive expect to receive by July 1989. This is because there are several distinct "top tier" activities on some large sites, each in a separate installation, and operators have discretion to decide whether to submit a comprehensive single report covering all activities, or a separate report for each activity.

Allocation of resources is a matter for the Health and Safety Commission and Executive and I am satisfied that Health and Safety Executive is able to carry out its scrutiny of safety cases effectively.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the problems the Health and Safety Executive faces, and anticipates facing, over recruiting new graduate scientists; and what plans it has made to help overcome these problems.

Mr. Nicholls: Responsibility for the recruitment of scientists rests with the Health and Safety Executive which recognises the importance of attracting good quality candidates in an environment where there is strong competition from other employers.

Pay is obviously important. New long-term arrangements agreed last year between Her Majesty's Treasury and the Institution of Professional Civil Servants will provide for greater flexibility in determining salaries for the grades at which most scientists are recruited.

In addition, the executive is seeking to publicise more widely to potential recruits—through closer contacts with universities, and greater use of vacation studentships—the wide range of interesting and rewarding work available. More school leavers may also be recruited, with support to pursue further education on day release.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what work is being done, or is planned by the Health and Safety Executive in investigating flour allergy among biscuit and pastry makers; and what sources of expertise are available to it in this area.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive plans to assist the Federation of Baker's safety sub-committee working party which has been set up to identify where dust occurs in bakeries and to consider practical and engineering methods of reducing dust levels. The Health and Safety Executive employs expert doctors and scientists concerned with occupational health and hygiene and is also in touch with other leading specialists.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what additional numbers of inspectors are (a) needed and (b) in place to implement and enforce the Food and Environment Protection Act, the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazard Regulations, the Road Traffic (Carriage of Dangerous Substances in Packages) Regulations and the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive enforces these and other health and safety regulations concurrently and resources cannot be allocated specifically to particular items of legislation. These additional responsibilities were however recognised in the Government's decision to allocate an additional £6·7 million for the executive's work in 1988-89.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement on the information he has as to the reasons for the increases in fatal and major accident incidence rates in manufacturing industry from 1981 to 1985.

Mr. Nicholls: An analysis of trends in reported occupational accidents 1981 to 1985 was discussed in an article by HSE which appeared in the Employment Gazette in January 1988. A copy has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make his policy not to allow the transfer to the Health and Safety Executive of areas of work currently allocated to other departments without a concomitant increase in resources.

Mr. Nicholls: When such transfers take place, proper consideration is given to implications for resources.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether any work is being undertaken by the Health and Safety Executive to reduce hazards in underground transportation in mines, following the two serious accidents in the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive has always paid particular attention to the hazards of underground transport in mines and is currently undertaking a survey of transport accidents in mines as well as projects related to individual types of transport systems.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations the Health and Safety Executive has received on the extension of the working life of mine winding ropes; and what response the Executive has made.

Mr. Nicholls: No representations on the extension of the working life of mine winding ropes have been received by HSE since the mining industry commented in 1985 on proposed new legislation on shafts and winding in mines.

The proposals have been revised to take account of these comments and are to be issued for a further period of informal consultation.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what work has been undertaken by Health and Safety Executive scientists on the emergency shut-down system for offshore gas production platforms; and when this work will be completed.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive's work in this area arose as a constituent part of a wider programme on the assessment of programmable electronic systems. A PES-based system is used on the SEAN P gas production platform in the North sea which was selected as an example to evaluate the PES guidance documents published by HSE. The assessment was limited to the wellhead area of the platform and is now complete. The draft report is now being approved for issue.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what work is planned by the Health and Safety Executive into dimethylformamide as a cause of testicular cancer in the shoe manufacturing industry.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive's employment medical advisory service is compiling information about workplaces known to be using dimethylformamide (DMF), including the circumstances in which it is being used, the numbers of workers and the levels of exposure to DMF which they experience. This will be used to assess the feasibility of the executive carrying out an epidemiological study of exposed workers.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will list the responsibilities that the Health and Safety Executive has lost since 1979; and whether he will describe the major areas since that year where the Health and Safety Executive has become more cost-effective.

Mr. Nicholls: Since 1979 the Health and Safety Executive has lost the following responsibilities:

(i) Her Majesty's industrial air pollution inspectorate was transferred to the Department of Environment on 1 april 1987.

(ii) inspection and enforcement responsibility at most zoos was transferred to local authorities from October 1985.

Over the same period, sources of improved cost-effectiveness have included:

better planning and targeting of inspections, helped by the development of work recording systems and systems for rating premises according to their level of risk; use of information technology and the development of investigation databases; and reduced administrative burdens following codification of advice and reform of out-dated legislation.

A fuller account of efficiency and effectiveness improvements will be included in the annual report of the Commission and the Executive for 1987-88, to be published shortly.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will list the additional responsibilities taken on by the Health and Safety Executive since 1979; and if he is satisfied that the Health and Safety Executive is adequately enforcing these responsibilities.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety at Work etc Act 1974 laid upon the Health and Safety Commission and Executive responsibility for virtually all aspects of occupational health and safety, and most aspects of the protection of the public from work activity. Within this overall competence HSE has acquired the following new responsibilities since 1979:

(i) carriage by road, classification, packaging and labelling of dangerous substances;

(ii) notification of new and existing substances before they are placed on the market;

(iii) action under the European directive on the control of industrial major accident hazards;

(iv) mains gas safety;

(v) asbestos licensing;

(vi) the enforcement of part 3 of the Food and Environment Protection Act and its related Control of Pesticides regulations.

In addition, the HSE has acquired new or substantially expanded work in connection with the nuclear industry and the control of dangerous substances in harbour areas, radiation and noise and the health and safety implications of the development and use of new technology including programmable electronics and biotechnology. There has also been a significant growth of EC activity and regulations in areas affecting safety and health, and a general growth in public and international interest in relevant environmental and major hazards issues requiring action by HSE.

I am satisfied that HSE is adequately enforcing these responsibilities.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many times since 1984 the Health and Safety Commission or the Health and Safety Executive, directly or through his Department, has asked for additional funding over and above its original public expenditure survey allocation; and what sums were requested and granted in each case.

Mr. Nicholls: Discussions regarding the funding for the Health and Safety Commission are confidential and take place in the context of the annual public expenditure survey round. These discussions have resulted in the allocation of the following amounts additional to the previously planned gross provision:

£ million

	Additional amounts agreed
PES 1985 covering years:
1986-87	1·1
1987-88	2·9
1988-89	3·0
PES 1987 covering years:
1988-89	6·7
1989-90	6·9
1990-91	7·1

In addition, during the estimates round for 1987-88 the Health and Safety Commission received further gross provision of £1 million above the previously agreed planned provision, as well as a winter supplementary estimate of £1 million gross.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest number of factory and agricultural inspectors employed by the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Nicholls: On 1 October 1988 the Health and Safety Executive employed 601·5 factory and 165 agricultural inspectors.

Fireworks

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many laboratories external to the Health and Safety Executive have been identified by it as suitable and capable of testing fireworks.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive has so far accepted 25 sites as being suitable and capable for testing fireworks.

King's Cross Fire

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what amount of the Health and Safety Executive's resources were allocated to the scientific investigation of the causes of the King's Cross fire; and what work was postponed or abandoned to allow for this task.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive contribution to the scientific investigation is estimated at £0·75 million, including eight man years' work. Work on the investigation was accommodated primarily by changing priorities in research programmes and delaying work on particular projects, for example, the European Commission's major technological hazards research programme.

Coal Tar Pitch Volatiles

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether the Health and Safety Executive will undertake a survey of exposure levels for coal tar pitch volatiles.

Mr. Nicholls: A survey of exposure levels for coal tar pitch volatiles already forms part of the review of these substances being undertaken during the current work programme of the advisory committee on toxic substances (ACTS). This committee advises the Health and Safety Commission on methods of controlling health hazards arising from the use of toxic substances at work.

Organotin Compounds

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what work is planned by the Health and Safety Executive into the study of toxicity of organotin compounds in fungicides; and how many requests have been made by the employment medical advisory service for such work to be undertaken.

Mr. Nicholls: The executive is carrying out a review of the use of the organotin compound tributyl tin oxide in wood preservatives. The review has been requested by the independent advisory committee on pesticides and reflects concern that pesticides introduced some years ago do not meet current, more stringent safety and environmental standards. The employment medical advisory service has not specifically requested this work.

Accident Statistics

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will list, in standard industrial classification order, the fatal and major incident rates for each of the past 10 years for all major industries.

Mr. Nicholls: The available information is set out in the following three tables. Some of the older data analysed by the previous standard industrial classification could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Specialist Inspectors

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many specialist inspectors are employed by the Health and Safety Executive; in what disciplines they are employed; and whether he has any plans to increase the number of specialist inspectors.

Mr. Nicholls: On 1 October 1988 there were 204 specialist inspectors in post in the Health and Safety Executive working in the explosives, construction engineering, mechanical engineering, chemical (including biotechnology) and electrical disciplines. Of these, 192 were working in the Health and Safety Executive's technology division. The executive plans to increase the number of specialist inspectors in the Health and Safety Executive's technology division to around 230 by the end of 1988-89.

Fire Precautions

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment why the Health and Safety Executive's technology division has not completed the task of inspecting and certifying fire precautions at the United Kingdom's 1,500 most potentially dangerous work places; and whether he has set a new target date for completion.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive has issued over 600 fire certificates and has completed the survey work at another 35 premises. The majority of those remaining will already have fire certificates issued under the Factories Act 1961, or the Fire Precautions Act 1971 which remain valid until superseded by a certificate issued under the Fire Certification (Special Premises) Regulations 1976. Priority has been given to those premises having no certificate.

Additional specialist inspectors have been trained this year with the aim of largely completing this work by 1991.

Research and Planned Support Work

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will list the work that constitutes the backlog of research and planned support work caused by a period of diminishing staff resources described in the 1987 Health and Safety Executive annual report.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive has a rolling programme of research and planned support work and so by its very nature, there is always a queue of further work awaiting action. Examples of work that are currently in the queue include the safety assessment of mine winding ropes, studies of the mechanical properties of non-metallic materials, the safety assessment of expert systems, failure rate data of engineering components, predictive models for the safe venting of explosions and work on occupational hygiene projects.

Occupational Ill-health

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many new cases of occupational ill-health there are each year.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 5 July 1988 at column 576.

Food and Environment Protection Act

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what guidance has been issued to the agricultural inspectorate on the implementation and enforcement of the Food and Environment Protection Act; and what duties have been dropped to accommodate this additional work.

Mr. Nicholls: Written instructions providing guidance on the interpretation and enforcement of the Food and Environment Protection Act and its regulations have been issued to all HSE agricultural inspectors. These formal instructions are supported by relevant publications and training when necessary.

It has not been necessary to drop any duties to accommodate the work, which arises gradually as regulations come successively into force; some priorities in the work programme have been adjusted.

Pesticides

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many complaints relating to pesticide usage were received by each Health and Safety Executive area office during the first nine months of 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: The information for individual area offices could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The total number of complaints relating to pesticide usage received by the Health and Safety Executive during this period was 105.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the extent of the backlog in non-agricultural pesticide approvals undertaken by the Health and Safety Executive's medical division.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive currently has 300 outstanding applications for approval of non-agricultural pesticides under the Control of Pesticides Regulations, 1986. About one third of these have been received in the last three months.

Hazard Rating System

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement on the factory inspectorate's hazard rating system; and if he will review it.

Mr. Nicholls: The inspection rating systems used in the factory and agricultural inspectorate division of Health and Safety Executive are designed to ensure that basic inspection is applied systematically, and most frequently to those premises where the hazard is greatest or where for other reasons close monitoring is desirable. The system has operated since 1977 and its effectiveness as a tool for allocating the division's resources is currently under review.

Workplaces

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the number of fixed workplaces; how many are registered with the Health and Safety Executive; and what plans he has to increase the number of workplaces that are registered.

Mr. Nicholls: There are approximately 695,000 fixed workplaces currently registered with the Health and Safety Executive. The Health and Safety Executive has published two leaflets "Don't wait until an Inspector Calls" and "500 Dead" to encourage small firms to comply with statutory requirements.

Preventive Inspections

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many preventive inspections were under taken by the factories inspectorate in each of the following years: 1970, 1973, 1974, 1980 and 1987.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available in the form requested for the years 1970, 1973, 1974, and 1980. Between 1 April 1987 and 31 March 1988 factory inspectors made 100,815 preventive inspection visits.

Disabled People

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the procedure under the employment training scheme for referring disabled people to employment rehabilitation centres.

Mr. Nicholls: Employment rehabilitation centres are part of the employment rehabilitation service and are freely available without charge to support training agents and training managers under employment training.

The services are available for clients with special needs and trainees may be referred at any stage in their assessment or training. A training agent may refer a client if there is difficulty in producing an action plan because of a disability or may recommend rehabilitation or further assessment as part of the action plan. A training manager could refer a trainee if there is difficulty in implementing an action plan.

Employment Medical Advisory Service

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current staffing level of nurses in the employment medical advisory service; how many posts are unfilled; how many applications were received for the last advertisement; how many people were offered jobs; and how many of these accepted.

Mr. Nicholls: On 1 October 1988, 45 nurses were employed in the Health and Safety Executive's employment medical advisory service. Three full-time and four part-time posts are unfilled. The most recent recruitment competition attracted 11 applications. An offer of employment will be made to the three successful candidates in the near future.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current staffing level for doctors in the employment medical advisory service; how many posts are unfilled; how many applications were received for the last job advertisement; how many people were offered jobs; and how many of these people accepted the offer.

Mr. Nicholls: On 1 October 1988, 45 doctors were employed in the Health and Safety Executive's employment medical advisory service. Five posts are vacant. The most recent recruitment competition attracted 25 applications. Offers of employment will be made to seven successful candidates in the near future. Five candidates will be offered posts in the Employment Medical Advisory Service with the remaining two filling vacancies in the Health and Safety Executive's medical division head office.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement on the ways in which the employment medical advisory service will encourage the development of occupational health services in industry.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Commission has embarked on a programme to encourage employers to review their specific needs for health advice and make suitable arrangements for obtaining it. This includes the publication of guidance and promotional activities intended to raise awareness of occupational health issues and to create the right atmosphere for action by employers. It also involves encouragement to employers already making adequate provision to make their facilities more widely available. The employment medical advisory service is playing a central role in these activities.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the role of doctors and nurses employed by the EMAS in relation to the introduction of Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations; and what additional staff resources will be made available to effect this.

Mr. Nicholls: Responsibility for implementing requirements in the COSHH regulations for medical surveillance rests with employers. The employment medical advisory service will continue to advise employers on these obligations and appropriate arrangements to meet them. No requirement for additional doctors and nurses is envisaged at present.

Employment Rehabilitation Centres

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement concerning the two employment rehabilitation centres at Egham and Preston.

Mr. Nicholls: Egham and Preston are the two purpose-built residential employment rehabilitation centres. They offer assessment and rehabilitation courses for people with disabilities who live beyond daily travelling distance of an employment rehabilitation service establishment or have special need for residential provision.

They also offer non-residential services to people who can travel daily and operate mobile assessment services.

Control of Substances Hazardous to Health

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will update the numbers of deaths from occupational diseases that was published in the foreword to the "Control of Substances Hazardous to Health" consultation document.

Mr. Nicholls: In 1986, the latest date for which a figure is available, there were 631 awards of death benefit, excluding awards for asbestosis, in Great Britain. Other figures are for 1985, when the total number of deaths from chronic bronchitis, asthma and emphysema were about 16,000 and the total number of deaths from cancer just under 142,000. It is not known what proportion of deaths are occupationally related, but for cancer it has been variously estimated as between 28 and 30 per cent.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, what additional resources he expects will be necessary for the Health and Safety Executive fully to implement the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations; and in what areas and disciplines additional staff will be needed.

Mr. Nicholls: Responsibility for compliance with the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations when they come into force in October 1989 will rest with industry. The Executive intends to work closely with industry organisations in the coming months, to encourage them to develop guidance for their members.

The regulations will be enforced by the Health and Safety Executive as part of its continuing programmes of visits to premises. Although the regulations largely replace out-dated existing requirements, their introduction can be expected to increase employers' awareness of health problems, and generate more requests to the Health and Safety Executive for advice and assistance.

There will be a shift in the balance of scientific support required by inspectors, from checking exposure problems directly, to appraising employers' control systems. Possible changes in the Health and Safety Executive's total costs are unquantifiable at present. Resourcing for the commission and the Health and Safety Executive is, of course, reviewed annually as part of the public expenditure survey.

Youth Training

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on restructuring youth training and on what emphasis is placed on raising the level of foundation skills.

Mr. Cope: We will be discussing training matters in our forthcoming White Paper.

Hazardous Goods (Carriage by Road)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report the number of joint roadside checking exercises of road vehicles carrying hazardous goods that the police have undertaken in conjunction with the Health and Safety Executive in each of the past three years in England and Wales, and if he will indicate the number of prosecutions that have followed.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not readily available and could not be obtained without incurring disproportionate cost.

ENVIRONMENT

Irish Sea (Pollution)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if pollution of the Irish sea will be placed on the agenda of the next North sea Ministers conference in March 1990.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There is no provision at present for specific discussion of pollution in the Irish sea at the third North sea ministerial conference in March 1990. This accords with the scope of the agenda at the first and second conferences.

Aspects of pollution in the Irish sea were recently considered in a report by the International Council for the Exploration of the Seas and are currently being discussed by the Irish sea study group, an independent forum bringing together a wide range of interested parties.

At intergovernmental level issues related to dumping at sea and discharges from land based sources are discussed in the Oslo and Parish Commissions which cover the north-east Atlantic area and whose membership includes both Ireland and the United Kingdom. In addition the Governments of both countries are regularly in touch to discuss matters of mutual interest in this area.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are being taken to end radioactive discharges into the Irish sea.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The largest source of man-made radioactive discharges to the Irish sea is the British Nuclear Fuels plc reprocessing plant at Sellafield. As a result of major investment, discharges of low-level radioactive liquid waste to sea from Sellafield have decreased considerably over recent years and now are only one tenth of what they were in 1979. Further major reductions will be achieved in the early 1990s as the result of investment by British Nuclear Fuels in new plant. The main objective is to ensure that the radiation exposure arising from radioactive wastes should be as low as reasonably achieveable.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for the environment if he will introduce legislation to prohibit the dumping of industrial waste and sewage sludge in the Irish sea and take steps immediately to reduce at source the volume and complexity of toxic waste presently being discharged into rivers flowing into the Irish sea.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The dumping of waste at sea, including sewage sludge, and the discharge of waste to rivers are already controlled in all United Kingdom inland and coastal waters under legislation which is the responsibility of fisheries and environment Departments.

There are no current licences permitting the dumping of industrial waste in the Irish sea. The disposal of treated sewage sludge is permitted only where the licensing authority is satisfied that there will be no damage to the marine environment and dump sites are carefully monitored for this purpose.

Discharge to rivers are primarily the responsibility of water authorities in England and Wales, river purification boards in Scotland, and in Northern Ireland, the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland. On 28 July the Department of the Environment published a consultation document setting out proposals for tighter controls on the discharge of dangerous substances to water in England and Wales, including a "red list" of 26 substances or compounds, for which substantial reductions, of the order of 50 per cent. will be sought by 1995. These proposals will also be incorporated into the framework of controls in Scotland and Northern Ireland and will spearhead action to reduce inputs of dangerous substances to rivers and estuaries taken as a result of the London North sea conference declaration. They will be applicable to all United Kingdom coastal waters.

Pollution and Hazardous Wastes

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a White Paper on the Government's policy to deal with pollution and hazardous wastes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no plans at present to do so.

Commercial and Domestic Waste

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review section 30 of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 to redefine the nature of commercial and domestic waste.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have no plans to do so.

Rate Precepts (Shire Counties)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the rate precepts for all the English shire counties in the years 1985-86, 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is shown in the following table:

Rural Housing

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on recent initiatives that he has taken to stimulate rural housing.

Mr. Trippier: We have been considering the responses to the Secretary of State's statement of 5 July, outlining measures to increase the supply of low cost housing in rural areas. I have nothing further to add to this statement at present.

Rents (Basildon)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the rent income per year from the houses and flats owned by the Commission for New Towns in Basildon; how this compares with each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The annual rent income from the houses and flats owned by the Commission for the New Towns amounted to £14,740,927 in 1987-88. This compared with the following income for each of the last five years:

Year	£
1982-83	13,704,356
1983-84	14,148,055
1984-85	14,508,715
1985-86	14,575,222
1986-87	14,703,523

Empty Properties

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further proposals he has for bringing into use privately owned empty properties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Private property is left empty for a number of reasons, of which reluctance to let under Rent Act controls is one. Our proposals for the deregulation of new private lettings in the Housing Bill will enable owners to let at market rents, and to have certainty of possession at the end of a short fixed term letting if they use shorthold. This should encourage owners of empty private houses and flats to make their property available for letting.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses have been empty for six months or more during the last five years in the Basildon area; and what were the figures for each year since 1983.

Mr. Trippier: The number of council dwellings vacant for more than six months has been provided by local authorities, since 1987, on their annual housing investment programme returns. Basildon district council has reported 19 such dwellings at 1 April 1987 and 3 at 1 April 1988.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what current estimates he has for the numbers of publicly-owned empty properties in (a) the Basildon area and (b) England and Wales; and what were the figures for the last five years.

Mr. Trippier: The information derived from the annual housing investment programme returns from local authorities is as follows:

Vacant dwellings owned by local authorities and other public sector bodies at 1 April

	Local authority[1]		other public[2]
	Basildon	England	Basildon	England
1983	146	113,600	361	23,000
1984	130	112,700	349	21,800
1985	86	116,500	359	19,100
1986	77	113,300	294	18,500
1987	66	112,400	169	15,500
1988	221	[3]103,000	182	[3]16,000

[1] Includes dwellings which are closed or have been acquired for demolition and, since 1987, dwellings on overspill estates.

[2] Includes housing owned by new towns, county councils (for example, police houses), Government departments and nationalised industries and other public bodies. Many of these dwellings are vacant because of operational requirements, notably those owned by the Ministry of Defence, and others have been acquired for demolition, for example by the Department of Transport. Government are encouraging the sale of housing which is not required and many of those that are vacant are in the process of disposal.

[3] Provisional estimate.

For information about Wales I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Small Businesses

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what further proposals he has for encouraging the growth of small businesses; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what steps his Department has taken to encourage the development of small businesses in (a) the Basildon area and (b) England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: My Department has taken the following steps to encourage small businesses:

Encouraged the more effective provision of assistance to small firms in rural areas through the merger of the Development Commission and CoSIRA to create the Rural Development Commission on 1 April 1988.

Enabled the Development Commission and CoSIRA together to spend £30 million. in 1987-88, compared with £27·5 million. in 1986-87.

Published, in January 1988, a new series of planning policy guidance notes. These notes provide concise and practical guidance on planning policies, in a clearer and more accessible form than in earlier departmental circulars and other official publications. They include a PPGN on industrial and commercial development and small firms.

Implemented, in November 1987, regulations to allow simplified planning zones. The first two have already been adopted and further proposals are being prepared.

Implemented, in June 1987, changes to modernise the Use Classes Order and enable a wider range of changes of use to take place without the need for planning permission.

Simplified outdoor advertisement control.

Established nine urban development corporations in England to regenerate inner city areas.

Provided the following assistance under the urban programme:

In 1987-88 £19·6 million urban programme expenditure was allocated to the provision of new or converted industrial units for small firms. This compared with £11·6 million allocated in 1986-87. Many of these units are small (less than 2.500 square feet) and in areas where the private sector is unwilling to make such provision.

Support is also given to preparatory works such as reclamation and assembly of sites intended to make land available for industrial development by the private sector. £9·3 million was allocated to this in 1987-88 compared to £6·6 million in 1986-87.

In addition, expenditure on highway access works to assist development accounted for £7·8 million in 1987-88 compared to £6·2 million in 1986-87.

Direct loans and grants to firms chiefly to help with high inner city land and building costs and to businesses in commercial and industrial improvement areas accounted for £12 million in 1987-88 compared with £9·8 million in 1986-87.

General environmental projects to improve physical conditions and raise private sector confidence accounted for £6·8 million in 1987-88 compared to £4·6 million in 1986-87.

Advisory services to small businesses accounted for £3·9 million in 1987-88 compared to £5·1 million in 1986-87 and additional miscellaneous expenditure on business promotion, trades fairs, tourism, etc. accounted for £6·1 million in 1987-88 compared to £5 million in 1986-87. One project funded was for two pilot schemes to set up local authority One Stop Shops coordinating the activities of LA departments with other organisations helping small firms and start up businesses.

The effect of urban programme assistance on small firms cannot always be separately identified. However, research evidence shows that assistance is targetted closely on small firms particularly those employing fewer than 10 people.

All the planning and land use measures apply to Basildon as elsewhere. In addition, the Secretary of State is considering the first alteration to the Essex structure plan, which will provide for the county's development requirements up to the year 2001. The first alteration contains new policies designed to encourage development providing employment throughout the county and identifies Basildon as a location where such development should particularly be promoted.

Specific measures relating to Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Further proposals by my Department that can be expected to encourage the development of small businesses include the following:

An order to extend the Merseyside Development Corporation which is before Parliament.

An order to establish an urban development corporation in Bristol which is currently being considered by a Select Committee in the other place.

The Rural Development Commission proposals for encouraging the private sector to play a greater role in the provision of workshops for small firms.

Review of the planning system to identify further measures to remove unnecessary restrictions on development and to simplify procedures where this is justified.

The second stage of a review of building regulations which will cover technical aspects with the aim of ensuring that the legal requirements are easy to unerstand and do not go beyond what is clearly necessary, particularly for health and safety reasons; and that the guidance provided on methods of compliance is clear, simple and accurate.

In addition, the other programmes described earlier in this answer, while not always targeted specifically at small businesses, will continue to benefit them.

Council House Sales (Greenwich)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals against valuations under the right-to-buy scheme have been made by Greenwich council tenants in each year since the scheme began; and in how many cases the valuation was reduced on appeal.

Mr. Trippier: This information is as follows:

Seals

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment has been made of the levels of (a) lead, (b) cadmium, (c) mercury, (d) nickel, (e) phosphorus and (f) cholrinated hydrocarbons including polychlorinated biphenyls dioxins and naphthalenes found in dead seals collected on the east coast of England in August and September.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The sea mammal research unit of the Natural Environment Research Council is co-ordinating a large programme of analyses on contaminant levels in dead seals from the whole coastline of the British Isles. This study is part of an international collaborative programme in part funded by DOE, MAFF, DAFS and the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology are undertaking the analyses on heavy metals, pesticides and PCB's. Measurements of some of the more complicated organic compounds such as dioxins and organotins are being made on the same samples in Holland.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many letters he has received from (a) organisations, (b) members of the general public and (c) overseas in the periods (i) January to June and (ii) July to present time on the welfare on seals in the North sea and coastal waters around the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Previous to July of this year occasional letters received in the Department made a reference to this subject. Since July over 500 letters have been received from members of the public including those forwarded by hon. Members, 16 from organisations and 10 from overseas, mostly since the spread of the seals disease to the United Kingdom was confirmed in late August.

Waste Disposal

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all grants from the European Economic Community by amount awarded, date awarded and project for which award was made, in the period 1979 to the most recent date for which information is available towards the development of landfill sites for toxic and hazardous wastes in the United Kingdom; and what was the total awarded over the same period to other European Economic Community member states.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I know of no grants from the EEC for the development of landfill sites for toxic and hazardous waste in the United Kingdom since 1979 nor do I have information on such grants to other member states.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if any studies have been undertaken by his Department, or consultants to his Department, or have been brought to the attention of his Department by RWMAC or Her Majesty's pollution inspectorate, on the effect on metal, concrete and glass containers designed to isolate nuclear wastes of the microbes, gallionella, thiobacillus, thiobacillus ferro-oxidans, and the fungi asperigullus and penicillum.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Yes. Studies continue to be conducted in the United Kingdom as part of the DOE programme and overseas, into the possible effects of micro-organisms on the performance of radioactive waste repositories.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the immunity of repository containment barriers to geomicrobiological degradation.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Some substances produced by microbes may be capable of degrading repository containment barriers. Investigations continue to establish the existence of such organisms and their significance.

Ozone Layer

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if any evaluation has been made by (a) his Department, (b) the Natural Environment Research Council and (c) the European Commission Environment Directorate into the effects of carbon tetrachloride released in eastern Europe on the ozone layer over western Europe.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The stratospheric ozone review group report, published in October 1988 estimates that global carbon tetrachloride emissions account for 8 per cent. of global ozone depletion. We know of no evaluation by the Department's research contractors, NERC or the European Commission Environment Directorate which looks specifically at the impact of emissions of carbon tetrachloride from eastern Europe.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research has been undertaken to evaluate the benefits and disbenefits of CFC-22 in regard to reducing ozone depletion.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The potential impact of CFC-22 on the ozone layer has been evaluated in this and other countries by using mathematical models of atmospheric chemistry. These models estimate the amount of ozone depletion likely to occur as a result of emission of a particular CFC. The ozone depletion potential is defined as the ratio of ozone depletion from a given CFC to that of CFC-11, one of the most common. For CFC-22 the ozone depletion potential is about 0·05. The 1988 stratospheric ozone review group report estimates that CFC-22 was responsible for only 0·4 per cent. of the total ozone depletion in 1985.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how his Department was represented at the United Nations environmental programme meeting in Yugoslavia in early October, which discussed the greenhouse effect and possible solutions.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A meeting of task teams on the regional impact of climate change under the UNEP ocean and coastal areas programme of the global climate programme was held in Split between 3 and 8 October 1988. This meeting was a working scientific meeting and not one for national delegations. I understand that scientists from the Institute of Oceanographic Sciences, University College London, and the University of East Anglia were present.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department made any commitment to support research into ozone layer depletion in Western Europe at the international meeting on the ozone hole in Göttingen, in the Federal Republic of Germany, in August.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 26 October]: The meeting in question was one of scientists to discuss all aspects of atmospheric ozone, not only the ozone hole. No commitments to support research were sought from the Department. We did, however, issue for information a short statement on a proposal from the United Kingdom, Norway and the European Commission to set up a unit to co-ordinate European research on stratospheric ozone.

Pollution

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the departmental scheme, announced on 13 September, for special environmental protection research and implementation to mitigate pollution of the North sea and rivers.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The environmental protection technology scheme aims to encourage technical innovation where this will enable higher environmental standards to be set. The scheme offers support for approved projects up to the stage where the concept is proved. Grant is available at up to 25 per cent. of costs for projects proposed by single companies and up to 50 per cent. for collaborative projects. The first set of priority areas for the scheme were announced in June, when proposals were invited which would reduce emissions from municipal incinerators and tackle odour problems. More than 30 applications are being considered.

On 13 September, I announced that the second set of priority areas would be the reduction of discharges of heavy metals and organic compounds in industrial effluents.

This announcement was closely linked to actions agreed following last year's ministerial declaration at the international conference on the protection of the North sea, to reduce the amounts of the most dangerous substances entering rivers and estuaries. The Government have already published consultation proposals for stringent controls on a "Red List" of these substances.

Environmental Protection

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received following his interview on the Radio 4 "Today" programme broadcast on 7 October, concerning Government successes and failures in implementing and developing international environmental protection agreements.

Mr. Ridley: I have received 20 letters from the public as a result of the interview on Radio 4's "Today" programme on 7 October.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his policies on the protection or enhancement of the environment have changed since he last made a statement thereon to Parliament.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. The Government's policies represent a long-standing commitment to the protection and enhancement of the environment.

Radioactive Reactor Parts (Disposal)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has had any recent discussions with the chairman of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority concerning the policy preference declared by the chairman on 11 October at a nuclear facilities decommissioning conference, that large mildly radioactive reactor parts should be disposed of in the Atlantic ocean.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. Friend has not had any recent discussions with the chairman of the UKAEA on this subject. It is Government policy that the sea disposal option should be kept open for large items arising from decommissioning operations.

Nuclear Power (Policy)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy towards his departmental witness at the Hinkley Point C public inquiry answering questions on the merits of departmental policy.

Mr. Ridley: Departmental witnesses at the Hinkley Point C public inquiry will explain the Government's radioactive waste management policy and strategy. In accordance with rule 12(3) of the inquiry procedure rules 1987, they will not be expected to discuss the merits of that policy.

Mr. Jonathan Jackson

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretry of State for the Environment if, further to the letter dated 30 September from the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes, he is now in a position to decide whether or not he will call in for determination by himself planning applications in the name of Mr. Jonathan Jackson.

Mr. Chope: The matter is still under consideration, but my right hon. Friend hopes to announce his decision in the near future.

Rating Reform

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to adjust the workings of the home loss payments scheme in the light of the introduction of the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Since home loss payments are calculated as a multiple of rateable value, some adjustment will be necessary as a consequence of the introduction of the community charge. My right hon. Friend is currently considering this matter.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether there are any plans to compensate (a) members of the armed forces, (b) civilian employees of the Ministry of Defence, (c) other civil servants and (d) police officers, for high levels of poll tax, on the grounds that they have no choice as to where to live.

Mr. Ridley: Members of each of these groups will, unless exempt, be subject to the personal community charge in the same way as other members of the population. In respect of the Armed Forces, my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Defence, is still considering the detailed practical implications of the charge.

There are no plans for compensating civilian employees of the Ministry of Defence, other Civil Servants or police officers.

Dolphins

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement regarding the steps taken by Her Majesty's Government to protect dolphins in British waters.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: All species of dolphin in British waters are protected by the provisions of Section 9 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, by virtue of their listing in schedule 5 of the Act.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to assist and co-ordinate action by local authorities for the safe disposal of unwanted domestic refrigerators and other equipment containing chlorofluorocarbons.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department is in regular discussion with the user industries about reducing emissions of chlorofluorocarbons by better housekeeping, recycling or recovery. There is at present no safe disposal method that we could ask local authorities to undertake.

Local Government Finance

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the extra grant entitlement that would accrue to each authority if block grant were (a) £200 million and (b) £512 million higher than the amount planned to be distributed in 1988-89 on the basis of his 7 July announcement and if that increase in grant were effected by an adjustment in the notional grant related poundage for spending at grant-related expenditure.

Mr. Ridley: The information requested is shown in the following table:

Crown Prosecution Service (Office Space)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what rental has been agreed by his Department for office space in Artillery Row, SW1, on behalf of the Crown Prosecution Service; and what information he has about average rental prices in the Victoria area.

Mr. Nicholas Ridley: Negotiations by the Property Services Agency for the acquisition of 4-16 Artillery Row, SW1, were conducted on a strictly commercial and therefore confidential basis. The agency operates in the market and also makes the widest possible use of commercially available sources of information on rents and other property market intelligence.

Housing (Defects Provision)

Mr. Aspinwall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if there are any proposals to amend the housing defects provisions in the light of the four years' experience with the scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: We have been monitoring the working of the housng defects legislation since it came into force in December 1984. This has enabled us to identify some proposals, of a mainly technical nature, which might help streamline the day-to-day operation of the scheme. The main suggestions are that local authorities should be free to pay owners reinstatement grant at whatever level local authorities believe is justified under the housing defects rules, but with a revised degree of Exchequer contribution; and that there could be scope for grant-aided demolition and rebuild of individual properties in specific circumstances.

The Department's officials are writing to the local authority associations, homeowners' groups and other bodies known to have an interest in the housing defects scheme, to seek their views on these possible changes; the Welsh Office are taking similar action.

Copies of the Department's letter are being placed in the Library.

Drigg Dump Site

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the outcome of the investigation into the nuclear fuel canister at the Drigg dump site; what response he intends to make to the investigation report; and when his Department first learned from British Nuclear Fuels plc., about the canister.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 26 October]: The canister was unearthed on 12 July. British Nuclear Fuels informed both Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and the nuclear installations inspectorate the same day. A detailed investigation was undertaken by the inspectorates and completed by 28 July. A report is being finalised for submission to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy.

Northern Seas (Pollution)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what departmental Ministers and officials were present, and what written and oral representations were made from the United Kingdom, at the special meeting convened on 18 August by the Prime Minister of Sweden on pollution of the northern seas and waterways.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 26 October 1988]: The United Kingdom was represented at the international conference on problems in the marine environment convened by the Swedish Government on 18 August in Stockholm by Mr. J. H. Cleary, marine branch, Department of the Environment, and Dr. John Harwood, director, sea mammal research unit, Natural Environment Research Council. The United Kingdom gave a report on research and monitoring in the marine environment and on progress in implementing the measures agreed at the second North sea ministerial conference in London in November 1987.

Bradford

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations have taken place with representatives of Bradford during the past three months regarding the provision of services and further financial assistance to the city; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 24 October]: I met a delegation from the council on 29 September 1988 at their request, to receive their representations about the 1989-90 rate support grant settlement and about European regional development fund grant. The council is also in regular contact with officials of this Department on various matters.

Bathing Beaches

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received from regional water authorities with regard to the implications of upgrading bathing beaches.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 21 October 1988]: The financial implications of upgrading bathing waters have been considered in this year's round of corporate plan discussions with water authorities. These discussions took place against the background of a request to the industry to examine the feasibility of accelerating investment programmes to achieve compliance with the EC bathing water directive.

Storm Damage

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what assistance his Department has given to private householders to remove fallen trees following the October 1987 hurricane; and if he will make a statement.

(2) what compensation his Department has paid to individuals in the Basildon area as a result of fallen trees damaging their property in the October 1987 hurricane; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Assistance has not been provided by central Government to private householders or individuals: it is for them to ensure that their property is adequately insured against accidental damage.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the additional expense that was incurred by local councils in the Basildon area in consequence of the October 1987 hurricane; what assistance his Department offered towards these costs; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Local authorities have reported to the Department gross expenditure on dealing with the effects of the storm of £113·4 million, of which some £55 million was met through insurance claims or would have been insurable, or was capital expenditure. Of the remainder, some £30·9 million is eligible expenditure above the threshold on which special financial assistance under the Bellwin scheme will be paid. The rate of grant is 75 per cent. giving an entitlement of £23·2 million. In addition, extra capital allocations of £11·9 million were made for 1987-88. For the current year additional capital allocations of £5 million have been made for housing and other services, for which individual authorities are currently bidding.

In Basildon gross expenditure was £279,000 and grant will be £39,000. The equivalent figures for authorities in the Basildon area (ie Basildon, Castle Point, Chelmsford, Brentwood, Thurrock and Rochford) are £2 million and £0·4 million respectively, and for the whole of London are £27·6 million and £4·0 million.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions have taken place between his Department and local authorities in Essex concerning the consequences of the storm on the morning of 16 October 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: On 2 December 1987 the Secretary of State met councillors from Essex county council and other county councils to discuss the effects of the October storm. In addition, there has been correspondence with individual local authorities in Essex about the details of their claims for special financial assistance with expenditure on storm damage.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is his estimate of how many trees had to be felled in the Basildon area as a result of the October 1987 hurricane; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is his estimate of how many trees had to be felled as a result of the October 1987 hurricane; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Felling has taken place in a wide range of circumstances. No detailed statistics are available. In the affected areas as a whole the number of trees felled as a consequence of the storm is unlikely to have exceeded 10 per cent. of the number blown down.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what steps his Department has taken to replace those trees damaged in the October 1987 hurricane in the Basildon area:

(2) what further steps his Department has taken to replace those trees damaged in the October 1987 hurricane; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have made significant additional resources available for the replacement planting of amenity trees destroyed in the storm of 16 October last year. A special unit of the Countryside Commission—"Task Force Trees"—is administering the main programme of aid in close liaison with the local authorities concerned. During the last planting season £3 million was provided for "Task Force Trees" to assist restoration and grant allocated to Essex county council totalled £120,000. Currently the unit is considering bids for a further £3·3 million of aid made available by the Department for work in the coming season.

Aid for restocking woodlands over ¼ hectare and for replanting orchards has been the subject of separate announcements by my right hon. Friend, the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will publish in the Official Report a table giving estimates, broken down by counties, of the number of non-woodland trees blown down and damaged in the October 1987 hurricane;

(2) how many non-woodland trees are known by his Department to have been blown down (a) in the Basildon area and (b) in England and Wales during the October 1987 hurricane; what is the percentage of the latter to the former; and if he will make a statement;

(3) how many trees are now known by his Department to have been blown down in the October 1987 hurricane; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In total an estimated 15 million trees were destroyed by the storm of 16 October last year. Most of these were in woodlands but an estimated 200,000 non-woodland trees were blown down in the wider countryside. In addition large numbers of trees were destroyed in orchards, parks, gardens, streets and by highways. Detailed statistics, by county and other categories, were published in the recent report "The Effects of the Great Storm" available from HMSO.

Local statistics of losses in the Basildon area are not held centrally. However I understand that Basildon district council estimates that some 30,000 woodland and non-woodland trees were destroyed in the borough during the storm.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Argentina

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the acquisition by Argentina of the Condor II missile; and if this matter has been discussed in the context of the seven-nation missile technology control regime of which the United Kingdom is a part.

Mr. Eggar: The missile technology control regime is intended to control the transfers of equipment and technology which could make a contribution to nuclear weapons delivery systems other than manned aircraft, capable of delivering a payload of 500 kg or more to a range of at least 300 km. Missile projects such as Condor II which fall within these parameters are a subject of concern to Her Majesty's Government and are discussed with our partners in the regime.

Nuclear Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if there have been any initiatives taken by any contracting parties to the 1959 Antarctic treaty, under articles IX and XII, to modify the prohibition on the disposal of nuclear waste in the Antarctic territories under treaty article V.

Mr. Eggar: No such initiative has been taken. At the VIII Antarctic treaty consultative meeting held in Oslo in 1975 the consultative parties noted the increasing production of nuclear materials and the growing concern over the disposal of nuclear waste. Against this background the consultative parties recalled their commitment to article V of the Antarctic treaty and adopted recommendations VIII-12 to the effect that no one should dispose of radioactive waste in the Antarctic treaty area.

Central America

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement regarding the progress towards elections to the Central American Parliament.

Mr. Eggar: We understand that Costa Rica has yet to ratify the Central American Parliament treaty, although legislation is in train to allow it to do so. We hope that elections to the Central American Parliament may take place not long thereafter.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to Honduras, Guatemala and El Salvador concerning their failure to abide by the terms of the Esquipaulas II peace accord; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We and our European partners have on a number of occasions called on all signatories of the Esquipulas II peace agreement to fulfil their outstanding obligations under the agreement without delay.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State intends to visit Nicaragua when he is in Central America in 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I have no plans at present to visit Nicaragua.

European Commission

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the chairmanships and membership of committees including committees on technical standards by nationality within the European Commission and within the economic and social committee.

Mrs. Chalker: Committees set up by the Commission to deal with matters the Council has delegated to it are chaired by the relevant Commission officials, regardless of nationality, and consist of representatives of member states. This includes committees in the area of technical standards.

The economic and social committee has specialised sections for the main areas covered by the treaties. Representatives in the various sections decide among themselves who should chair their meetings for formulating opinions on Commission proposals.

"A World Apart"

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to the reasons for the cancellation by Her Majesty's consulate in Lugano of the reception for Chis Menges' film entitled "A World Apart"; and which Ministers were consulted before the decision was made.

Mrs. Chalker: The hon. Member is misinformed. I can confirm that a reception was hosted in Lugano on 9 August by Her Majesty's chargé d'affaires in Berne to mark British Week at the Lugano international film festival. There is no question of Ministers being consulted over the programme of a foreign film festival.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council held on 24-25 October.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary and I attended the Foreign Affairs Council in Luxembourg on 24-25 October. Following agreement on the framework regulation in June, the Council held the first discussion of the implementing regulations for the Community's structural funds. Agreement was reached on the thresholds for the minimum sizes of projects and programmes eligible for support from the funds. All other issues were referred back for further consideration in Coreper, with a view to agreement being reached at the Foreign Affairs Council in November.

The Council finalised the decision to establish a court of first instance, which will relieve the burden on the Court of Justice. Its jurisdiction will cover staff, competition, subsidies and steel cases. The question whether jurisdiction should be extended also to anti-dumping cases will be reconsidered after the court has been running for two years.

There was a preliminary discussion of the Community's generalised system of preferences for developing countries for 1989. There will be further discussion at the November Council.

The president of the Social Affairs Council reported on the informal meeting of Labour and Social Affairs Ministers in Athens on 20 September.

The Council also agreed that the November Council should review developments in the Community's textile industry, on the basis of a Commission report.

Cash Limits

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is proposed to make any changes to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office cash limits for 1988-89.

Mr. Eggar: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for class II, vote 2 (Foreign and Commonwealth Office: Other External Relations) will be increased by £428,000 from £129,270,000 to £129,698,000 to take account of additional provision required to cover the costs of the United Kingdom-Iran compensation agreement dated 7 July 1988. The increase will not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

United Nations Military Observer Group

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution the United Kingdom has made to the United Nations Iran-Iraq military observer group.

Mr. Eggar: As a permanent member of the United Nations Security Council, we have a special responsibility towards financing such operations as the United Nations Iran-Iraq military observer group. Our assessed share of the total cost is 5·9 per cent. or £2,640,000. Of this we have already paid £1,244,440·20 with the balance due in November.

Parliamentary approval for this expenditure will be sought in a winter Supplementary Estimate for the "Foreign and Commonwealth Office: Other External Relations" Vote. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure of £1,244,440·20 has been met by a repayable advance already issued from the contingency fund. The balance will also be met by a repayable advance from the contingency fund.

International Foundation for the Survival of Humanity

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has had any invitation from the board of the International Foundation for the Survival of Humanity to meet to discuss matters for which his Department has responsibility.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. and learned Friend has had no such invitation.

Chemical Weapons

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when his Department first learnt of allegations of chemical weapons use against Kurds by Iraqi military forces; on what date this allegation was verified; and on what date Her Majesty's Government made representations to the Government of Iraq on the use of chemical weapons against Kurds.

Mr. Waldegrave: Allegations of Iraq's military operations against the Kurds involving the use of chemical weapons were first made during the week beginning 22 August. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office issued a statement on 2 September. Having established that there were compelling indications that chemical weapons had been used, we made representations to the Government of Iraq through the Iraqi Minister of State for Foreign Affairs on 21 September. We have called for an authoritative, independent investigation to establish the truth.

TRANSPORT

Wildlife (Motorway Verges)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps are taken by his Department to encourage, preserve and monitor wild life on motorway verges.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Tree and shrub planting is the major landscape activity of the Department. Over 32 million have been planted in 25 years. This creates an invaluable wildlife habitat.

The selection of native species, mainly broadleaves, form linear woodlands of significant conservation value, especially in the case of motorways where there is no human disturbance.

The major tree and shrub species used are:

oak supports 284 insect species hawthorne supports 149 insect species willow supports 266 insect species birch supports 229 insect species pine supports 91 insect species alder supports 90 insect species hazel supports 73 insect species beech supports 64 insect species
ash supports 41 insect species

The extensive grasslands encompassed by our motorway boundaries are not regularly cut and no overall herbicide treatments are used. Wild flowers are increasingly colonising these verges/slopes, and we are using, on an experimental basis, wild flower seed mixtures on new road schemes in different parts of the country.

These linear woodlands are managed by our agent foresters to provide a natural and structural diversity of vegetation offering nesting opportunities for birds and protection to many small animals and insects including butterflies.

Animals that would be at risk from motorway traffic, notably badgers and deer, are kept from the verges by special fencing and diverted to crossings: tunnels for badgers, bridges and underpasses for deer.

The Department's horticultural officers and Forestry Commission foresters monitor wild life on the verges of our roads as part of their routine inspections.

Hazardous Goods (Carriage by Road)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to improve the inspection methods used to check dangerous goods consignments transported by road to ensure that the transport documents correctly reflect the dangerous goods actually carried.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The enforcement of the regulations covering the transport of dangerous goods by road is the responsibility of the Health and Safety Executive. The Department's traffic examiners and the police also undertake regular checks of goods vehicles carrying dangerous goods to ensure that documentation and the marking of the vehicle correctly reflect the consignments.

We are considering with the Health and Safety Executive the feasibility of prescribing a transport document identifying dangerous goods carried.

Railways (Conversion)

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received any proposals from private sector firms to convert sections of railways into motorways over the past 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: No proposals for particular schemes have been put to me.

Air Piracy and Terrorism

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made to achieve a common policy on handling and preventing air piracy and terrorist action against airlines and passengers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The prevention of acts of unlawful interference with civil aviation, and the development of procedures for dealing with them when they occur, is regarded as a high priority by both the International Civil Aviation Organisation and the European civil aviation conference. Both have developed international standards and guidance material for preventive measures, and they keep these under constant review.

ICAO has sponsored the development of three international conventions (the Tokyo, Hague and Montreal conventions), which together establish an international legal framework making acts of unlawful interference into international offences for which signatory states will either bring suspects in their custody to justice or permit their extradition to another competent state, and providing for the re-establishment of lawful control in cases where aircraft have been seized.

Roads (Privatisation)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has and plans to privatise in whole or in part the existing Queen's highway, to encourage the investment by private funds in the road network, or to introduce any charging policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We aim to add the private sector's innovation, enterprise and efficiency to the provision of transport infrastructure. We will consider seriously any well-based proposal for involving private funds in the road network. We have no plans at present to toll existing roads.

Intimidatory Driving

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will seek to introduce an offence of intimidatory driving.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The report of the road traffic law review rejected this on the grounds that its proposal for redefining the present reckless driving offence would be adequate to cover intimidatory driving. We aim to announce our conclusions on the report as a whole early in the new year.

M1 Motorway

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out the average journey time between junctions 8 and 16 on the M1, for traffic travelling (a) north and (b) south for (i) Fridays between 2 pm and 7 pm, (ii) Sundays between 5 pm and 11 pm and (iii) Monday to Thursday between (1) 7 am and 10 am and (2) 10 am and 1 pm for each of the last eight years, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested is not collected.

Highways (Direction Powers)

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he plans to transfer highway direction powers from county councils to district councils.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is proposed to replace the power of direction of local highway authorities with a right to be consulted on development proposed near roads. The change will be included in the new consolidated Town and Country Planning General Development Order for England and Wales which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment proposes to lay before Parliament early next week. It is to come into effect on 5 December this year.

Bonby Lodge Interchange

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement regarding progress on the Bonby Lodge interchange.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department's proposals for the Bonby Lodge interchange, on the A15 trunk road, were published on 29 July in the form of draft orders under the Highways Act 1980. The period for the receipt of objections expires on 28 October.

Further progress on the scheme will be governed by the time needed to complete the necessary statutory procedures.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each of the last five years, the number of heavy goods vehicles in the United Kingdom and in the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the publication "Transport Statistics Great Britain 1977-1987", published by HMSO for the Government statistical service, a copy of which is in the Library.

Table 6·7 provides data on number of road vehicles by type.

Data for earlier years were published in previous editions of "Transport Statistics Great Britain."

A36 (West Wellow)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimate in round figures of the cost of the proposed bypass on the A36 at West Wellow.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The estimated cost is about £3·5 million at November 1985 prices. The actual cost will depend on the route and detailed design.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what traffic counts have been carried out on the A36 at West Wellow; and if he will publish the results in the Official Report, showing the vehicles by type.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The lastest traffic count, on 20 June 1986, showed a 24-hour flow of 12,500 vehicles. Analysis of vehicle type was carried out over a 12-hour period between 7 am and 7 pm. Categories were as follows:

	Number
Pedal Cycles	12
Motor Cycles	138
Car and Taxi	7,796
Bus and Coach	64
Light Goods Vehicles	1,014
Medium Goods Vehicles	279
Heavy Goods Vehicles	1,211

King's Cross

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the last date before the fire at King's Cross underground station in November 1987 on which the railway inspectorate inspected any part of King's Cross underground station.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 26 October 1988]: The Victoria line escalator machine room at King's Cross LUL station was inspected on 24 March 1987.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the alterations in progress at King's Cross underground station booking hall in November 1987 had been inspected by the railway inspectorate.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 26 October 1988]: No.

Railway Maintenance

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on whose authority it was decided that the railway inspectorate should refrain from making any preventive checks on railway maintenance of operating equipment.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 26 October 1988]: No such decision has been taken.

Railway Inspectorate

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of the time of (a) The chief inspecting officer of railways and (b) the professional staff of the railway inspectorate, including the employment inspectors, was spent in 1987 before the King's Cross fire, and in 1986 on the work on the channel tunnel, on work for Hong Kong and Singapore, talks with the Chinese Government, British Rail, London Underground and minor railways, respectively.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 26 October 1988]: This information is not available in the form requested. I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible giving such information as can readily be obtained.

Private Streets (Adoption)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department has any proposals for the reform of the law on the adoption of private streets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Following a consultation paper issued in 1983, the Department has reviewed the law on private street works. It is concluded that the provisions of the present law are in general satisfactory and that in particular the basic principle of frontager liability should be maintained.

Earlier this year, with our encouragement, the Housebuilders Federation and the local authority associations negotiated a revised model agreement to provide for the adoption of newly constructed estate roads. We commend this as a substantial improvement on the previous arrangements.

We are currently considering certain detailed amendments of the law with a view to introduction when a suitable opportunity arises for legislation.

A2 (Roadworks)

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report the number of months and weeks that the A2 between the Black Prince, Bexley and Swanscombe Cutting has been under roadworks from 1 January 1984 to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have had a substantial programme of maintenance and improvement for this section of the A2. Major works, consisting of maintenance, replacement of safety fences and construction of hard shoulders, have taken 70 weeks in total since 1 January 1984. There are no records of the timing of minor maintenance.

Major works were carried out over the following periods:

May 1986–October 1986 (23 weeks)—replacement of safety fences
March 1987–July 1987 (19 weeks)—major maintenance
October 1987–January 1988 (16 weeks)—major maintenance
August 1988–To date (12 weeks)—construction of hard shoulders

In addition, this section of the A2 is subject to regular patching.

A1(M), Hatfield

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the cost of the underpass on the A1(M) at Hatfield; and what is its total length.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The structure at Hatfield, constructed by the cut-and-cover process, accommodates a full three-lane motorway. Raised walkways along both sides of each carriageway contain the extensive cabling and service ducts required for tunnel services and motorway communications.

As well as offering environmental advantages this approach, with appropriate strengthening, allow the redevelopment of an area of some 25 acres on and around the tunnel lid.

The final gross construction cost of the tunnel and carriageways, excluding land/compensation costs, was £35 million, some of this being recovered by receipts associated with the development scheme.

The tunnel is 1,150m (¾ mile) long.

Common Market (Commercial Tonnage)

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the increase in commercial road tonnage carried in the common market over the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the publication "International comparisons of transport statistics 1970-1985; Part I intermodal". Table 8 gives data on freight lifted by mode.

Data for 1986 are published in table 6.6 of "Transport Statistics Great Britain 1977-1987." Both publications are issued by HMSO for the Government statistical service; copies are held in the Library.

A36 (West Wellow)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will publish in the Official Report a list of the reported accidents on the stretch of the A36 through West Wellow over the last 10 years, showing how many have involved injuries and fatalities.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information available for the section of the A36 from the county boundary to C17 Whinwhistle road is as follows:

	Accidents
	Fatal	Serious	Slight	Total
1978	0	4	6	10
1979	0	3	4	7
1980	1	2	4	7

1982	0	1	0	1
1983	0	0	4	4

	Fatal	Serious	Slight	Total
1984	0	2	6	8
1985	0	3	6	9
1986	2	4	3	9

[1]1988	1	2	5	8

[1] To July.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether consultants have been appointed to consider alternative routes for a bypass on the A36 at West Wellow; when the study is likely to take place; when the study will be completed; and when he expects to publish his recommendations for the proposed route.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We hope to appoint consultants early next year to prepare for public consultation in late 1990. The announcement of a preferred route will depend on the outcome. It could be made in 1991.

Health and Safety

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for how long before and after April 1987 the responsibility for enforcing health and safety legislation, investigating staff accidents and inspecting railway premises on the whole of the British Rail southern region and London Underground was carried out by a sole inspector.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 26 October 1988]: From May 1986 up to the present date one inspector under the supervision of a principal inspector and an inspecting officer have been responsible for enforcing the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act on British Rail southern region and London Underground.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Guardian Angels

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the west midlands on the implications for the maintenance of law and order of the activities of the group from the United States of America known as the Guardian Angels.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand that the chief constable of the west midlands is compiling a full report on the activities of this group which will be sent to the Home Secretary shortly. In the meantime the chief constable has advised my right hon. Friend that officers of the West Midlands police have met representatives of the Guardian Angels and have made clear their views that, while they welcome the support of members of the community in crime prevention initiatives of various kinds, groups which seek to take over the role of the police, for example by patrolling the streets, are not acceptable. I fully support this view.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will use his powers to order the removal from the United Kingdom of the group known as the Guardian Angels.

Mr. Renton: No. I am not aware of any justification for the use of these powers.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if Her Majesty's Government will take steps to seek representation at the European Court deliberations on the legality of Sunday trading restrictions in the United Kingdom, raised by Messrs. Cullen Stores; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We have not yet received details concerning any application to the European Court in respect of Messrs. Cullen Stores but the Government have submitted written observations in respect of five similar applications to the European Court and have instructed counsel.

Home Insulation Scheme Grants

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish the number of 90 per cent. home insulation scheme grants given in 1987, and the number of households insulated by councils by insulation projects in 1987.

Mr. Peter Morrison: 45,825 90 per cent. homes insulation scheme grants were paid in 1987. Additionally, in excess of 165,000 homes were treated in 1987 by community insulation projects operating under the Government's community programme.

Atomic Energy Conference (Vienna)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations from Her Majesty's Government were made at the International Atomic Energy Authority conference held in Vienna on 21 September on the relationship between the Vienna convention on civil liability for nuclear damage 1963 and the Paris convention on third party liability in the field of nuclear energy 1960.

Mr. Michael Spicer: At the conference on 21 September representatives of Her Majesty's Government gave full support to, and signed, the joint protocol to establish a relationship between the Vienna convention on civil liability for nuclear damage and the Paris convention on third party liability in the field of nuclear energy.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many departmental Ministers or officials were present at the 32nd annual conference of the International Atomic Energy Authority, held in Vienna on 19 to 23 September.

Mr. Michael Spicer: In addition to members of the United Kingdom's permanent mission to the International Atomic Energy Agency, two officials from the Department of Energy and one from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office attended the IAEA's 32nd general conference. No Ministers were present at the conference.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if any initiatives on (a) nuclear safety, (b) nuclear safeguards, (c) precautions against nuclear terrorism and non-state proliferation, (d) nuclear waste management and (e) nuclear emergency planning were made by the United Kingdom delegation to the 32nd regular session of the International Atomic Energy Agency general conference held on 19 to 23 September, in Vienna.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The United Kingdom delegation played a full and active role in the proceedings of the International Atomic Energy Agency's 32nd general conference, which covered a wide range of issues affecting all aspects of the agency's work. The United Kingdom joined in the sponsoring of resolutions on nuclear safety and on the dumping of radioactive waste and was among the signatories of a protocol linking the Paris and Vienna conventions on nuclear liability.

"Earthing Electricity"

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the report, "Earthing Electricity", published by the Centre for Economic and Environmental Development in September.

Mr. Parkinson: A copy of the report is already available in the departmental library.

Hinkley Point C

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many (a) individual, (b) organisations and (c) foreign objections to the Hinkley Point C pressurised water reactor application by the Central Electricity Generating Board had been registered at his Department by 4 October.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Over 9,000 individuals and over 350 organisations are registered as objectors to Hinkley Point C pursuant to section 34 of the Electricity Act 1957.

Overseas objectors cannot be so registered and have no entitlement to appear at the public inquiry. However, the inquiry inspector has the discretion to allow overseas objectors to appear.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many departmental officials have attended, and for what period of time, the Hinkley Point C public inquiry since it opened on 4 October; and what level of departmental representation he expects to maintain during the remainder of the inquiry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Three officials from my Department attended the opening day of the inquiry on 4 October; one attended on 19 October.

My Department's witness to the inquiry began giving evidence on 26 October and is supported by six officials. These officials will continue to attend the inquiry for as long as the Department's witness is required to give evidence although not all of them will necessarily be present throughout that period.

After my Department has given evidence my officials might attend on particular days as necessary.

Euratom Safeguards, Sellafield (Report)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether, following the vote in the European Parliament in Strasbourg on the report from the Energy, Research and Technology Committee on the application of Euratom safeguards at Sellafield, the Llewellyn Smith report, his Department has received any representations on its implications for the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Up to 27 October my Department had received no representations on the CERT report.

Electricity Supply Industry (Privatisation)

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the advisers who have been appointed to assist the Government, the CEGB, the Electricity Council and the 12 area boards in the proposed privatisation of the ESI and the amount of money that has been paid to each of those advisers in the last financial year; and how much it is estimated will be paid to them in this financial year and in the next financial year.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Department is being provided with advice by Kleinwort Benson, Touche Ross, Slaughter and May, Merz and McLellan, Professor Stephen Littlechild, James Capel, Warburg Securities, Lloyds Bank, Lowe Bell, BMRB and the reporting accountants for the 12 area boards and the CEGB.

Expenditure in 1987-88 was £771,000. There is estimate provision in 1988-89 of £6 million. It is not usual practice to publish details of individual contracts. Advice received by the industry is a matter for the bodies concerned.

Electricity Generation (Advertising Campaign)

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the total budget for the advertising campaign on electricity power generation.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the electricity supply industry. I have asked the chairman of the Electricity Council to reply to the hon. Member.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Maladministration

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Attorney-General how many investigations in the past year into alleged maladministration in the courts the ombudsman has had to suspend because a purely administrative decision has been made on the instructions of a judge rather than by the Lord Chancellor's Department; what alternative remedy is available to the public for such maladministration; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: In the past year, the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration had to suspend three investigations into alleged maladministration in the courts. This results from the view taken by the Lord Chancellor, on the advice of Treasury counsel, that the PCA has no jurisdiction to investigate the actions of court staff who are exercising the administrative functions of the courts as distinct from the limited range of administrative functions conferred on the Lord Chancellor by statute.

In one of the three suspended investigations, the LCD has accepted the PCA's jurisdiction to investigate part of the complaint and is assisting the PCA with that part. In a fourth case, the PCA has been able to investigate the bulk of the complaint but the LCD has denied his jurisdiction in relation to certain matters which were the subject of the court orders.

The following alternative remedies may be available to members of the public who believe they have suffered loss as a result of maladministration by staff in the courts: to draw their complaint to the attention of the court or court officials concerned; to exercise any right of appeal available in relation to the decision or order of the court concerned; to institute civil proceedings if they have a cause of action; or to apply for judicial review. Also, the Lord Chancellor is prepared to consider claims for compensation where loss is sustained through any negligence of court officials in matters for which he is responsible. Members of the public may submit such claims directly, or through their Member of Parliament, to the Lord Chancellor or his Department's headquarters, or circuit offices.

The Lord Chancellor's present view on the jurisdiction of the PCA emerged in late 1986 following Treasury counsel's advice in a particular case. The PCA has seen that advice as have Members of the Select Committee on the PCA, to whom Lord Chancellor Hailsham explained on 31 March 1987 why the Lord Chancellor was obliged to comply with the advice.

In all the cases suspended since 1986, the Lord Chancellor's Department has conducted its own thorough investigation and, where justified, paid ex gratia compensation.

Wapping (Police Behaviour)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Attorney-General what action is being taken by the Director of Public Prosecutions on the reports referred to him by the Northamptonshire police on the behaviour of the metropolitan Police at Wapping.

The Attorney-General: The director is presently considering such reports as have already been received by him. Further police reports are anticipated.

"The Wilson Plot"

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General if he has any plans to take legal action to seek to prevent the publication of the book "The Wilson Plot" by David Leigh.

The Attorney-General: The Government are considering this matter in the light of the speeches of their lordships in AG v. Sunday Times, Guardian and Observer.

ENVIRONMENT

Rate Support Grant (Warwickshire)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to what extent rate support grant to Warwickshire county council has fallen below the rate of inflation for each year since May 1985; and what are the reasons for the shortfall in each year.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The table sets out the amount of rate support grant paid to Warwickshire county council for each year since 1985-86. The figures are shown in both cash and real terms, together with the shortfall each year. The changes in grant from each year to year reflect changes in the total amount of grant available and changes in the distribution of that total between authorities. Changes in grant distribution in turn reflect changes in GRE methodology and data, changes in grant mechanisms—such as the abolition of targets and holdback and steeper slopes of the poundage schedule introduced in 1986-87—and authorities' spending decisions.

Cash	53·777	52·743	53·804	46·098
Constant 1985-86 prices	53·777	51·018	49·550	40·625
Shortfall		2·759	1·468	8·925

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total amount of rate support grant paid to Warwickshire county council in 1984-85; what was the amount in 1987-88; and if he will express the answer both in actual amounts and in real terms.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Warwickshire county council has received £62·874 million rate support grant for 1984-85 and £53·804 million for 1987-88. In constant 1987-88 prices, the amount received for 1984-85 was £72·350 million.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much Government grant in total has been lost by Warwickshire county council as a result of penalties imposed because of overspending.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Grant abatement was a feature of the rate support grant system from 1981-82 to 1985-86. Expenditure guidance was issued to local authorities each year and those spending above target were liable to abatement of block grant (holdback). The only year in which Warwickshire county council lost grant as a result of spending above the expenditure guidance issued to it was 1983-84, when holdback amounted to £0·551 million.

Rating Reform

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will use his powers under the Local Government Finance Act to stop access to the community charge register by debt collectors and mail order companies; and how he intends to protect the privacy of an individual when the register is available for public inspection for purposes not connected to the community charge.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The community charge register will not be available for public inspection. An extract of the register showing addresses, initials and surnames will be available for public inspection, but regulations will prohibit registration officers from supplying or selling copies to anyone. No one will have the right to take copies from the extract.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which student nurses will pay 20 per cent. of the community charge.

Mr. Gummer: On 23 May, the Government announced major changes in nurse training, to be introduced over a number of years, including a substantial reduction in the time spent by student nurses working during their training, and giving them non-taxable bursaries rather than salaries. The Government made clear, during the passage of the Local Government Finance Act 1988, that student nurses training under the new arrangements would pay only 20 per cent. of the personal community charge, like other full-time students. The Government also said that they would consider further the position of student nurses who continue to be trained under the existing arrangements and are paid salaries. They have decided that the definition of "full-time student" for community charge purposes should not be widened to include such nurses, whose average earnings this year are between £5,400 and £6,200.

Multi-occupied Properties

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if his Department has yet decided on any action on multi-occupied properties; and if he will make a statement.

(2) if he has received any recent representatives on multi-occupied properties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: We have received so far over 200 responses to our consultation paper on houses in multiple occupation issued on 18 July, copies of which are in the Library. We are currently considering possible legislative changes in the light of those responses.

Hazardous Wastes

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what proportion of the annual total of special hazardous wastes has been imported through airports in each of the past nine years for which data are available;

(2) for each of the last 10 years, how many tonnes of what is now defined as special hazardous waste have been imported to the United Kingdom via (a) ports and (b) airports.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information on imports of special waste is collected by waste disposal authorities. Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution (and its predecessors) has collected some information from the authorities since the financial year 1981-82. These records show the following information:

Financial Year	Estimated Quantity Imported (Tonnes)
1981-82	3,786
1982-83	4,986
1983-84	14,824
1984-85	5,000
1985-86	24,548
1986-87	53,000
1987-88	80,000

The inspectorate is aware of imports by air in only two of these years, 60 tonnes in 1985-86 and 25 tonnes in 1987-88, and of 3 tonnes to date this year.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has had any meetings with the Nuclear Industry Radioactive Waste Executive to discuss the recommendations of the House of Lords Select Committee on the European Communities report, "Radioactive Waste Management (HL 99)".

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. Friend has had no discussions with Nirex on this report.

Toxic Wastes Import (Air Canada)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what authorisations were sought by Air Canada between November 1987 and June 1988 to import 27 tonnes of toxic wastes, including PCBs, on its aircraft into the United Kingdom; and which airports were used for these imports.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No specific authorisations are required for the import of wastes from Canada but there are pre-notification procedures under Canadian law and our own Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations 1980. All consignments of waste shipped by Air Canada during the period November 1987 to June 1988 came into Heathrow airport.

Rimnet Radiation Monitoring Programme

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the implementation of the Rimnet radiation monitoring programme.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Forty-six monitoring stations became operational in June and are now feeding data to London. The next phase of the development of Rimnet will double the number of monitoring stations and progressively introduce fully automated facilities.

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by local authority, and by standard economic region, the changes in expenditure allowed under section 137 of the Local Government Act 1972 in the event that the proposals contained in the Government's response to the Widdicombe committee of inquiry are enacted; and if he will show these figures in both cash and percentage terms.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information is not immediately available in the precise format sought. I will therefore write to the hon. Gentleman when the necessary data have been collated.

Home Loss Payments Scheme

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review the arrangements and formula of the home loss payments scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him yesterday.

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the levels of award payable under the home loss payments scheme; and what the levels would be at today's prices, adjusted to take account of inflation.

Mr. Chope: The amount of home loss payment under section 30 of the Land Compensation Act 1973 has, since 1 April 1973, been three times the rateable value of the claimant's home, subject to a minimum of £150 and a maximum of £1,500. Since that date the retail prices index has increased by a factor of 4·65.

Hampstead Heath

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what conclusions he has reached on the future of Hampstead heath; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Following a recommendation from the London residuary body last April that its functions, properties, rights and liabilities in respect of Hampstead heath be transferred to the corporation of the City of London, my Department invited comments on the contents of the proposed order to give effect to the LRB's recommendation. Comments were received from 36 local authorities, organisations and individuals.

After careful consideration of the comments I have concluded that an order shall be laid before Parliament to give effect to the proposals set out in the consultation letter of 14 June 1988 subject to one modification.

We have concluded that, with one exception, it is appropriate that the city corporation should be able to exercise all powers that were exercisable by the GLC in respect of Hampstead heath. The exception relates to section 123 of the Local Government Act 1972 (power to dispose of land).

Sewer Collapses

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has, for each water authority, on the number of significant sewer collapses in 1985-86 and 1986-87.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 21 October 1988]: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as I have the information available.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what British groups, university research departments and scientists have been approached by him in order to prepare proposals to tackle the problems of (a) the destruction of rain forests and (b) the protection of the ozone layer.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 24 October 1988]: Scientists from Cambridge University, the Meteorological Office the Harwell Laboratory and the private sector are currently engaged on work related to the ozone layer under the Department's air pollution research programme. The Department is considering what further work on this topic should be undertaken in 1989-90; and will take into account the recommendations made by the stratospheric ozone review group in its second report, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Proposals for tackling the destruction of rain forests are the responsibility of my hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development.

Stratospheric Ozone Review Group

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the implications for departmental research resources currently allocated to ozone layer and chlorofluorocarbons research of the report of the United Kingdom stratospheric ozone review group, published on 4 October.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 25 October 1988]: The Department of the Environment plans to continue to fund research at least at the current level covering all the areas of work discussed by the stratospheric ozone review group. The Department funds research primarily to provide scientific advice on policy matters. The funding of basic research is more properly the role of NERC and SERC as mentioned in the group's second report.

Travelling Families (Darenth)

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate when he is likely to publish his decision on the illegal occupation by travelling families of agricultural land at Darenth hill, Dartford; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 26 October 1988]: I regret the delay in issuing my right hon. Friend's decision on the enforcement appeals to which my hon. Friend refers. The decision is now about to be issued. I am arranging for a copy of it to be sent to my hon. Friend and inviting him to discuss problems with enforcement of planning control in his constituency.

Sports Council

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has reached any conclusions about the membership of the Sports Council.

Mr. Moynihan [pursuant to his reply, 1 July 1988, c. 388]: On 1 July I announced our intention to reduce the size of the Sports Council in order to provide a leaner, more efficient and responsive organisation; and at the same time to make a number of new appointments. I am delighted to announce that from today the following are to become members of the Council:

Richard Fox
Margaret Hohmann
Norman Jacobs
Tim Marshall
Mary Peters
David Simon
Peter Yarranton

These seven appointments bring the membership of the Sports Council to 14. We believe that a smaller council will be able to respond more quickly and flexibly to the changing demands and expectations in sport. It will also bring its size into line with many other non-departmental public bodies. We are confident that our new appointments from today's sportsmen and women, disabled sport, governing bodies and the private sector will bring invaluable experience to enable them to play a full role on preparing British sport and recreation for the 1990s.

DEFENCE

Aircraft Noise

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the report of the Institute of Community Medicine of its findings on aircraft noise, following the realignment of the flight paths on Royal Air Force Upper Heyford.

Mr. Freeman: The report is being prepared in two parts. The first part covering the areas worst affected by noise to the west of Royal Air Force Upper Heyford has been completed and a copy has been placed in the Library. The second part covering areas to the east of the station is not yet available.

Royal Engineers

Mr. Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made with the formation of the Royal Engineers TA unit in Jersey announced during the Army debate on 26 January at column 189.

Mr. Freeman: Agreement has been reached with the States of Jersey authorities on the terms for establishment of the unit. Initial recruitment has been encouraging and I shall be visiting the new unit on 29 October.

Service Children's Education Authority

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reductions have recently been imposed in the level of cost-of-living allowance paid to teachers employed by the Service Children's Education Authority in the Federal German Republic; how these have been calculated; and what effect these have had on the pay of an average teacher.

Mr. Sainsbury: Although reductions in the order of 40 per cent. in the cost of living addition (COLA) for civilian staff serving in the FRG were originally published as a result of the regular monitoring of price levels, exchange rate variations and salary increases, and so on, the recent discovery of some incorrect local prices used in the earlier calculation has now resulted in a re-calculation of the allowance. The average reduction for married staff introduced at 1 October 1988 will now be about £200 per annum or 11 per cent. of the allowance.

Equipment Exports

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the countries to which the United Kingdom has exported defence equipment in each year from 1979 to 1987.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is not the practice to publish such detailed lists but statistics of United Kingdom defence sales by broad geographic regions are set out in volume 2 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates."

Sir Colin Chandler

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the appointment of Sir Colin Chandler as head of defence export services made for three years in 1985 has been extended; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I can confirm that the appointment of Sir Colin Chandler as head of defence export services has been extended to March 1989.

Defence Export Services Organisation

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the overseas offices of the defence export services organisation, giving in each case the date when the office was opened.

Mr. Sainsbury: DESO's interests are covered by MOD staff at embassies throughout the world, but specific defence sales offices have been set up in:

Washington
New Delhi
Riyadh
Kuala Lumpur
Seoul
Ankara
Kuwait

The latter three were established only this year while the remainder have been in existence for some time. The establishing of additional offices is a reflection of the outstanding performance of the DESO in supporting increased defence sales.

CIVIL SERVICE

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service whether any individuals from ethnic minorities are now enrolled in the top management programmes in 1988-89.

Mr. Luce: Yes. At least one of the participants on the top management programme course beginning in January 1989 will be from an ethnic minority, and we expect another participant from an ethnic minority to be on the programme beginning in April 1989. There may be others from ethnic minorities on these and other programmes in 1989, but as we do not know the ethnic background of most individuals put forward for the programme it is impossible to say at this stage. We remain keen to attract suitable nominations from a wide range of backgrounds to the top management programme.

Trade Unions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service when he next proposes to meet Civil Service trade union leaders to discuss terms and conditions of service.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 27 October 1988]: I have informal meetings from time to time with representatives of the Civil Service trade unions. I have no plans to discuss terms and conditions of service with them. These are mainly the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Paymaster General.

THE ARTS

Foco Novo Theatre

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he last saw a performance by the Foco Novo theatre company.

Mr. Luce: I have seen no performances by the Foco Novo theatre company.

Theatres

Mr. Amess: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he has recently visited any newly built theatres employing shared use facilities with sporting and other activities.

Mr. Luce: I visited the new Towngate theatre in Basildon just before its opening in April this year. I was impressed by the versatility of the facilities which allow for a wide variety of uses.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Business Investment

Mr. Speller: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate for the growth of business investment in 1988.

Mr. Major: As the Chancellor of the Exchequer stated in his Budget forecast, total business investment is expected to grow by 9 per cent. in 1988.

Pensions

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the uprating of public service pensions from 1989.

Mr. Brooke: Public service pensioners were affected by the understatement in the retail prices index announced in December 1987. In my written answer of 18 December, at column 845-6, I made it clear that, in order to ensure that these pensioners suffered no continuing loss, levels of public service pensions from April 1989 would be what they would have been if the error in the RPI had not occurred.

Under the Social Security Pensions Act 1975, the Treasury is required to increase public service pensions in line with state earnings-related pensions. In the forthcoming Pensions Increase (Review) Order public service pensions will therefore be uprated by the 5·9 per cent. increase announced yesterday by the Secretary of State for Social Security for SERPS. In consequence, they will have the value from April 1989 that they would have had if the RPI error had not occurred.

Survey Interviewers

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer why job advertisements for Government survey interviewers placed in The Observer specify that people should be aged between 20 and 50 years.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 27 October 1988]: The Civil Service applies age limits to recruitment only where they are necessary to ensure the requirements of the work and the needs of the Department are fully met.

The age limits for social survey interviewers are set in accordance with the demands of the work and the need to secure a reasonable period of service to justify the training investment.

My officials keep the matter of age limits for all competitions under continuous review.

PRIME MINISTER

Abortion (Amendment) Bill

Mr. Amess: To ask the Prime Minister what is the total number of representations, to date, she has received (a) supporting and (b) opposing the provision of additional parliamentary time for the remaining stages of the Abortion (Amendment) Bill; what percentage the latter represents of the former; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Following the debate of the Abortion (Amendment) Bill, I received over 15,000 letters on this matter. The great majority of these supported the provision of additional parliamentary time.

Zionism is Racism (Resolution)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government will support the overturning of the Zionism is Racism resolution (Resolution 3379 (XXX)) at the United Nations General Assembly; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom (in common with most Western countries) voted against the United Nations General Assembly resolution 3379 in the General Assembly in November 1975. Since then we have consistently opposed the resolution but there is no specific provision for repealing United Nations resolutions, and in our judgment there is therefore little prospect of obtaining an effective counter resolution.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received supporting the overturning of the United Nations General Assembly Zionism is Racism resolution; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have not received any recent representations concerning the overturning of United Nations General Assembly resolution 3379. I refer my hon. Friend to my answer to his previous question.

Mr. Raoul Wallenberg

Mr. Amess: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations she has made to the Government of the USSR concerning the case of Raoul Wallenberg; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 28 July to his question about Mr. Wallenberg.

The head of our delegation to the Vienna CSCE meeting referred to the unresolved questions surrounding Mr. Wallenberg's fate in a speech to delegates on 16 September. The leader of the American and Canadian delegations spoke in similar terms.

We continue to hope that the expressions of international concern about Mr. Wallenberg's fate, and increasing openness about the past in the Soviet Union itself, will make it possible for the Soviet authorities to give a full and frank account of the facts of the case.

Mr. Natan Shcharansky

Mr. Amess: To ask the Prime Minister when she last met Mr. Natan Shcharansky; what was discussed; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: As was announced at the time, I met Mr. Shcharansky in Downing street on 6 May last year. I was much impressed with his courage and conviction.

Jordan is Palestine Group

Mr. Amess: To ask the Prime Minister when she last met officials from the Jordan is Palestine group; what was discussed and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have not met officials from the Jordan is Palestine committee.

PLO

Mr. Amess: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will make a statement on the current policy of Her Majesty's Government towards official contacts with the Palestine Liberation Organisation.

The Prime Minister: At official level contacts are kept with the PLO. Ministerial contact with the PLO will remain difficult until it unambiguously renounces the use of violence, accepts UN Security Council resolutions 242 and 338 and recognises Israel's right to a secure existence.

Royal Society (Speech)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if she will arrange for a copy of her speech on the environment to the Royal Society on 27 September to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

The Prime Minister: I have arranged for a copy to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Prince Sihanouk

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Prime Minister when she last met Prince Sihanouk; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I had talks with Prince Sihanouk on 25 October. We discussed the current situation in Cambodia and the prospects for a negotiated settlement.

TRANSPORT

East London River Crossing

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the cost to public funds of the public inquiry into the east London river crossing.

Mr. Channon: Approximately £3·25 million, excluding the normal salary costs of departmental staff involved.

MV Ardlough

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has conducted an investigation into the safety implications for shipping of the sinking of the MV Ardlough, on 28 September, off the Lancashire coast; and what special container cargoes were released to the sea following the sinking.

Mr. Portillo: One of the Department's marine surveyors is investigating the circumstances surrounding this accident. To maintain safety for shipping, the wreck of the vessel is marked by three buoys and a racon radar beacon.

Twelve freight and tank containers are known to have floated free when the vessel sank. Of the eight washed ashore, two tanks contained ethyl acetate and dimethyl acetamide, both listed as dangerous substances. It is likely that the remaining containers eventually sank but it is not thought that they contaned dangerous substances. Other dangerous substances declared on the manifest are assumed to be trapped in the vessel. None of these is considered to pose a significant threat to the environment.

Vigilante Groups

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the policy of British Transport police towards possible co-operation with vigilante groups, including that known as the Guardian Angels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I understand that British Transport police have made clear that the force does not welcome and cannot support proposed patrolling of either the British Rail or London Underground systems by the Guardian Angels or similar groups.

A590 (Bypasses)

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made regarding the A590 bypasses at Dalton, Lindal and Swarthmoor, in Furness; when he expects building work to commence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We intend to publish statutory orders for the Dalton bypass very soon. If all goes well, construction might start in 1991.

We are considering the results of preliminary investigations into the Swarthmoor bypass.

The trunk road forward programme does not include a bypass of Lindal. We are considering whether there is any case for future inclusion of such a scheme.

Air Traffic Distribution

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether the review of London air traffic distribution will take account of the economic basis on which any future rule excluding charter airlines from access to peak-time slots at London airports would be made; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether the review of London air traffic distribution will take account of the current imbalance between scheduled and charter peak-time slot allocation at Gatwick before drafting any proposals on slot allocation or traffic distribution for comment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's letter of 22 June to the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority set out the considerations he wished the authority to take into account in advising him on traffic distribution policy for airports serving the London area. A copy of this was placed in he Library. Section 31(4) of the Airports Act 1986 requires the authority to consult, as it considers appropriate, airport and aircraft operators who appear to it likely to be affected, and organisations representing such operators. We have no doubt some of them will raise these questions. We are confident the authority will weigh them carefully in producing options for my right hon. Friend's decision.

A34 (Traffic Flow)

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the actual flow for the A34 near the Robin Hood roundabout, Newbury, based on a 12-hour period on a weekday in May 1988.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The 12-hour average weekday traffic flows on the A34 near the Robin Hood roundabout in May 1988 were:

	Traffic flow
A34 Ring Road	40,600
A34 Donnington Link	25,800

Public Utilities Street Works Act 1950

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will indicate the nature of the topics that require resolution prior to his publications of draft legislation to replace the Public Utilities Street Works Act 1950; and what timetable he envisages in resolving problems still outstanding between representatives of the interests principally concerned.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Work is substantially complete on the substance of the legislative proposals. Final decisions have still to be taken on the question of diversions of utilities apparatus consequential on highway works, and the related balance of liability as between the highway authority and utility. I hope that these matters can be resolved within the next few weeks.

Detailed drafting will be necessary before the terms of a Bill can be finalised. Submission of a Bill will depend on finding a suitable opportunity for it.

Hired Motor Vehicles (Offences)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many fines have been imposed under section 109 of the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984 on owners of motor vehicles in circumstances where the driver who committed the offence had hired the vehicle, but was not the owner.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have been asked to reply.

In 1986 in England and Wales, 14,322 convictions were recorded for the offence of failing to furnish the statutory statement of ownership following the issue of an excess charge notice. It is not possible to determine how many of these related to hired vehicles.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Education Reform

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to ensure that school governors are made aware of the health and safety provisions of the Education Reform Act before local financial management of schools is brought into operation.

Mr. Butcher: The Department's guidance on implementing local management of schools, circular 7/88, deals with responsibilities for health and safety. A copy has been sent to the chairmen of governing bodies of all primary and secondary schools. The guide to the law, being sent to all school governors, reminds them that schools with delegated budgets will have to comply with their local authority's policy for health and safety.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schemes under which industrial and commercial companies sponsor local schools are known to his Department; what assessment has been made of the value of such schemes; and whether he plans to encourage their development.

Mr. Butcher: There are many types of link activities between schools and industry. Some involve written agreements between employers and local schools, such as the new compacts initiative; others are less formal. In addition, the city technology college initiative provides an opportunity for the direct sponsorship of schools by companies. The Government welcome such activities as a valuable means of extending the experiences of pupils and teachers, and enriching the curriculum.

National Union of Students

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met representatives of the National Union of Students; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has not met the National Union of Students recently, but I met it on 29 February 1988 to discuss the membership of student unions.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he is yet in a position to announce the date of publication of the report of the inquiry now taking place into the activities of the National Union of Students; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: We shall analyse responses to the questionnaire issued to a sample of institutions on 29 July when these are received. Thereafter, as indicated by my right hon. Friend in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Thurrock (Mr. Janman) on 18 April, at column 292, we shall reach conclusions on the best action to take and consult all concerned about these conclusions. I cannot at present predict how long this will take.

University of Wales

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give details of the proposed method of funding of University of Wales college after 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Funding of the University of Wales colleges after 1990, along with all other British universities, will be a matter for the Universities Funding Council established under the Education Reform Act.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many undergraduate courses in the arts and science subjects are taught wholly or partly through the medium of Welsh in the University of Wales; and if he will list such subjects, with the colleges at which they are taught and the numbers of students registered under each subject in each college.

Mr. Jackson: According to the University of Wales registry, there are 25 departments in the university which offer courses wholly or partially in Welsh. In addition, 24 other departments can arrange seminars, tutorial classes and laboratory classes in Welsh if demand is sufficient. The number of students registered in 1987-88 was as follows:

	Students
University College of Wales, Aberystwyth
Education	72
Drama	46
History	28
Welsh History	23
Philosophy	4

University of Wales College of Cardiff
Home Economics	14
St. David's University College, Lampeter

Theology	1
Religious Studies	4

In addition, Welsh language and Welsh studies courses are taught in Welsh.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide a statistical breakdown of the characteristics of University of Wales' students in 1988-89 analysed by (a) age, (b) sex, (c) country of origin and (d) number of Welsh speakers.

Mr. Jackson: The latest available information for 1987 is shown in the following table. Information on the number of Welsh speakers is not collected.

Mr. Alan Clark: A table showing the top 10 countries, representing nearly 74 per cent. of total imports, from which knitted outerwear garments were consigned is as follows. A full list including the remaining 88 countries has been placed in the Library.

Overseas Votes

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the total number of persons resident overseas registered to vote in the United Kingdom as at 1 April in each parliamentary constituency.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested from the 1988 register has now been placed in the Library.

The 1988 register is effective from 16 February 1988 to 15 February 1989 and is based on a qualifying date of 10 October 1987 (15 September in Northern Ireland). Numbers on the 1989 register will not be available centrally until April-May 1989.

The total number of persons resident overseas registered to vote on the United Kingdom 1988 electoral registers is 2,092.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the number of hospital consultants and general practitioners giving unrestricted medical services who are female, both in absolute numbers and as a percentage of the total establishment.

Mr. Mellor: The information is given in the table:

Mrs. Currie: Approval of this unit was recently extended to 30 April 1989 following a routine inspection by the Department's social services inspectorate. The future of the unit is currently the subject of discussions between the London borough of Lambeth (which provides the unit) and the London boroughs children's regional planning committee.

Pensioners (Tameside)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the number of pensioners in Tameside who will be (i) obliged to pay for dental and optical tests and (ii) exempt.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health why items of dental service which are given an item number are approved at a lower fee than when the same items have been accorded no number.

Mrs. Currie: All items in the National Health Service scale of fees for general dental services are numbered, and the vast majority have fixed fees. In the case of a small minority of items the level of fees is left to the discretion of the Dental Estimates Board.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what have been the numbers of estimate forms for occasional treatment only that have been dealt with in each year from 1975 to 1987.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is set out in the table. After 1985 information is available for financial years only.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information centrally. Members of district health authorities are appointed by the relevant regional health authority and local authorities. The hon. Member may therefore wish to seek the information from regional health authority chairmen.

Dental Examinations and Eye Tests

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what would be the estimated cost to public funds of extending exemptions from charges for (a) dental examinations and (b) eye tests beyond those envisaged on Third Reading of the Health and Medicines Bill in the House of Commons to exempt all persons of pensionable age.

Mrs. Currie: The estimated annual cost in England of extending free dental treatment to all persons over pensionable age would be £5 million and the extension of free sight tests would be £22 million.

Premature Babies

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many units specially caring for premature babies have been set up by regional health authorities in England and Wales; and what is the earliest age from which such babies have been known to survive in these units.

Mrs. Currie: All regional health authorities in England and Wales have units at regional, sub-regional or district level for the medical care of the newborn. These units receive premature babies together with others who require special or intensive care.

It has been reported that babies have survived in these units from the 23rd week of gestation.

St. Thomas's Hospital (Cyclotron)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish any expert advice received by him in respect of the St. Thomas cyclotron.

Mrs. Currie: No. Successive Governments have accepted that the advice of officials to Ministers is given in confidence.

Mrs. Currie: We have not had time to study the report "Trends in Alcoholic Drink Consumption in the United Kingdom." Government action to combat alcohol misuse is being carried forward by the ministerial group on alcohol misuse under the leadership of my right hon. Friend the Lord President. We will make copies of the report available to all members of the group in due course.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. Amess: To ask the Lord President of the Council what sections of the Palace of Westminster are reserved for Members and Officers of the House only; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: No. Copies of "Erskine May" are readily available for reference purposes in the Library, the Division Lobbies and in the Chamber. It is therefore not considered necessary to supply copies for individual Members.

WALES

Toxic Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if his Department was informed about the cargo of 2,000 tonnes of Danish-origin toxic wastes refused at the port of Briton Ferry on 23 September, prior to the rejection by the port's authorities.

Mr. Grist: I am not aware of such a consignment's having been refused at the port of Briton Ferry. A consignment of waste from Denmark is currently being removed from the port for disposal to an appropriately licensed site.

River Loughor (Bridge)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of the final cost of the construction of the new bridge over the River Loughor is to be met by his Department; and what is his latest estimate of the sum involved.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Loughor bridge schemes including western approaches have been accepted for transport supplementary grant support since 1985-86 at the rate of 50 per cent. on estimated eligible expenditure: mainly land and works costs. Each year's grant settlement is based on the county's estimate of expenditure on all schemes accepted for grant support, with adjustment made for any net underspending in the previous two years. It is not therefore possible to attribute final grant receipts accurately to individual schemes, but on the present estimated cost of these schemes, TSG should not exceed £4·5 million.

SCOTLAND

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend met representatives of Elders IXL on 18 October in connection with their bid for Scottish and Newcastle plc. The meeting was at the request of Elders IXL. As well as my right hon. and learned Friend and I, the following were also present:

EMPLOYMENT

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list by jobcentre the number of people investigated for suspected fraud and the number who subsequently signed off in each year since 1984.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of claimants investigated by officers of his Department are found to be making fraudulent claims; and what estimates he has as to the total number of fraudulent claims which may be being made.

Mr. Nicholls: Based on figures for 1987-88, 20 per cent. of claimants investigated by officers from my Department withdrew their claims to benefit following investigation.

We do not know how many fraudulent claims to benefit are being made.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many lay members sit on industrial tribunals; how many such members are women; and how many are from ethnic minorities, respectively.

Mr. Nicholls: There are currently 1,802 lay members of industrial tribunals, of whom 397 are women. Thirty are believed to be from ethnic minorities.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many times since 1979 the method of calculating unemployment statistics has been altered; and if he will give the dates and the reasons which led to the recalculation in each case.

Mr. Nicholls: There have been only two changes to the method of calculating the monthly unemployment figures. The first was in October 1982 when there was a switch from counting registrants at jobcentres and careers offices to counting benefit claimants, following the introduction of voluntary registration at jobcentres. The old count would have become incomplete if continued.

A second change in calculation, which did not change the definition of unemployment, was the delay in the compilation of the unemployment figures by two weeks from March 1986. This removed mistaken over-recording caused by the late arrival of information about the status of claimants.

These changes have been taken into account in calculating the seasonally adjusted series which is based on the current definition, allowing for significant changes in coverage.

Single Union Deals

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to the total number of single union deals concluded to this date in Scotland showing (a) the unions and (b) the location and plants involved.

Mr. Nicholls: My Department does not hold the information requested.

Women (National Insurance Threshold)

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest figure for the number of women earning below the national insurance threshold.

Mr. Nicholls: The available information from the new earnings survey for April 1988 can only provide an indication of the maximum number of female employees whose gross weekly earnings, not affected by absence, were below the threshold. It is estimated that the number was less than 2 million at the time of the survey.

Factories (Decibels)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to seek to alter the current permitted levels of decibels in factories and other industrial sites; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: At the end of last year the Health and Safety Commission published draft proposals for regulations to implement European Community directive 86/188/EEC on the protection of workers from noise. It is now considering the comments made on those proposals. My right hon. Friend plans to introduce the necessary legislation on noise at work when he has received the Commission's final recommendations.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

London Dumping Convention

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting of the London dumping convention, held in London in October.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The 11th consultative meeting of contracting parties to the London dumping convention (LDC) was held in London from 3 to 7 October.

At this meeting it was agreed that detailed studies of scientific, legal, political, social and economic aspects of radioactive waste disposal at sea should continue to be carried out by an intergovernmental panel of experts at meetings in 1989 and 1990.

The meeting also adopted a resolution on the incineration of hazardous liquid waste at sea. This resolution provides for a re-evaluation of this practice to be undertaken in early 1992 with a view to proceeding towards the termination of marine incineration by the end of 1994. The re-evaluation is to take into account the scientific and technical aspects of incineration at sea and the practical availability of safer and environmentally more acceptable land-based alternatives.

It was agreed that guidelines and standards for the removal of offshore installations and structures prepared by the International Maritime Organisation were acceptable from the viewpoint of the LDC and that matters related to their disposal should be considered at the next meeting of the LDC's scientific group.

Other matters considered at this meeting were arrangements for the participation of non-governmental organisations in the LDC, various legal and scientific issues relating to the dumping of waste at sea and the interpretation of the convention, and co-operation and information exchange related to the work of the convention.

It was agreed that the 12th consultative meeting of contracting parties would be held in October 1989.

Cattle (Slaughter)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current cattle kill in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In 1987 the United Kingdom cattle kill (including calves) was 4,113,000 head.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Foods what is the current sheep and lamb kill in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In 1987 the United Kingdom sheep and lamb kill was as follows:

(1) Ewes and rams—1,535,000 head;
(2) Other sheep and lambs—14,228,000 head.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Soccer Matches (Police Presence)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will call for a report from the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary as to how many police officers were on duty at the Brandywell soccer ground on each date in September when matches were being played.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I understand that during September there were 58 members of the RUC at the Brandywell soccer ground on each date when matches were played by Derry City FC.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will call for a report from the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary as to how many police officers were on duty at Soccer matches in Northern Ireland on each of the following days—Saturday 3 September, Saturday 10 September, Saturday 17 September and Saturday 24 September; as to how typical these numbers are, and as to how many soccer grounds had a police presence on each of these days.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The information is as follows:

1. 3 September 1988—33 officers at six soccer grounds.
2. 10 September 1988—165 officers at seven soccer grounds.
3. 17 September 1988—175 officers at seven soccer grounds.
4. 24 September 1988—170 officers at six soccer grounds.

It is not possible to define any soccer match as typical in terms of policing requirements because of the various different factors which are taken into account by the Chief Constable in making his operational decisions.

Catholic Education

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the reasons for the delay in presenting legislation to make statutory provision for the new upper tier of administration in the Catholic-maintained sector of education in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement regarding the respective responsibility of the Roman Catholic Council and the board of governors of each Roman Catholic maintained school for the employment of teachers at present.

Dr. Mawhinney: There has been no delay. The necessary legislation will be included in a proposal for a draft Order in Council which the Government intend to publish next spring and which will also incorporate the education reforms for Northern Ireland. Pending statutory provision for the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools an interim council has been established.

Teachers in Catholic maintained schools will continue to be employed by individual boards of governors until the statutory council has been established.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Government of the USSR concerning the case of Raoul Wallenberg; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer he received today from my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

Soviet Jews

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make further representations to the Government of the USSR concerning the right of Soviet Jews to leave the USSR; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We take every suitable opportunity to raise the problem of Jewish emigration with the Soviet authorities.

I intend to use my forthcoming visit to the Soviet Union to make further detailed representations about human rights questions including the plight of the refuseniks.

Palestine Liberation Organisation

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it remains the policy of Her Majesty's Government to refuse to recognise the Palestine Liberation Organisation so long as it retains its intent to destroy the state of Israel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We recognise only states: the question of recognition of the PLO does not arise.

"Jordan is Palestine" Group

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met officials from the "Jordan is Palestine" group; what was discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. and learned Friend has not met officials from the Jordan is Palestine committee.

"Zionism is Racism" Resolution

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received supporting the overturning of the United Nations General Assembly "Zionism is Racism" resolution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I have not received any recent representations supporting the overturning of this resolution.

The United Kingdom (in common with most Western countries) voted against the United Nations General Assembly resolution 3379 in the General Assembly in November 1975. We have consistently opposed the resolution, but there is no specific provision for repealing United Nations resolutions.

Israel (40th Anniversary)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if any officials from his Department were present at official celebrations in Israel to commemorate the 40th anniversary of the creation of the state of Israel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Yes. Her Majesty's ambassador in Tel Aviv attended a number of functions to celebrate this anniversary.

Nuclear Safeguards Seminar (Vienna)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if there was any departmental representation at the one-day seminar on the implementation of nuclear safeguards hosted by the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna on 18 September; and what information he has received regarding the outcome of the seminar.

Mr. Waldegrave: The International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) held a meeting with journalists in Vienna on Sunday 18 September 1988 to explain the role and functions of the IAEA safeguards systems. There was no departmental representation at the meeting, but officials from the United Kingdom mission to the UN agencies in Vienna reported that it had taken place.

Missile Technology Control Regime

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the seven nations meeting held in Rome in September to review progress in the missile technology control regime.

Mr. Waldegrave: The seven members of the missile technology control regime (United Kingdom, United States, Canada, Japan, France, Italy, Federal Republic of Germany) met in Rome on 8-9 September to discuss the implementation of the regime and to consider future policy. The details of the discussions are confidential.

Plutonium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, during discussions between Her Majesty's Government and the Japanese Government over the detailed arrangements of International Atomic Energy Authority and bilateral safeguards to be applied to plutonium returned to Japan from British Nuclear Fuels Ltd., Sellafield, details of the exact intended use of the plutonium were sought from the Japanese Government.

Mr. Waldegrave: Plutonium from spent fuel reprocessed in the United Kingdom is returned to its country of origin or to any other destination only on receipt of assurances covering peaceful use, application of International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards, physical protection and controls on retransfer. No detailed arrangements have yet been made with the Japanese authorities for transfers of plutonium to Japan. These transfers are not envisaged to begin until the mid-1990s.

Prince Sihanouk

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met Prince Sihanouk; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend had talks with Prince Sihanouk on 26 October. They discussed the current situation in Cambodia and the prospects of a negotiated settlement.

Council of Ministers (Business)

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mrs. Chalker: The usual forecast was deposited in the House earlier today. At present 12 meetings of the Council are planned for November.

The Civil Protection Council meets on 4 November to discuss the exchange of data; glossary of technical terms; a common emergency telephone number; civil protection symbol; use of telecommunications; and a public information campaign.

The Economic and Finance Council will meet on 7 November to consider the economic situation in the Community; the draft directive on the own funds of credit institutions; the Commission's proposal for financing major Community infrastructure projects; and regulation 2892/77 concerning the collection of VAT own resources. The agenda may also include the provision of assistance to the earthquake-stricken area of Kalamata, Greece.

The Energy Council will meet on 8 November and will consider progress on the Commission's paper on completing the internal market in energy. It will re-examine the Commission's review of member states' energy policies in the context of the Community's energy objectives agreed until 1995, and discuss again the recommendation on co-operation between major electricity utilities and private generators based on renewable energy sources, waste energy, and combined heat and power. The Council will also discuss for the first time a set of recommendations on the Community refining industry. A report on the application of Community rules for state aid to the coal industry in 1987 and an action programme for improving the efficiency of the use of electricity will complete the agenda.

The Agriculture Council meets on 14-15 November to discuss the agricultural negotiations in the GATT Uruguay round; income aids; amendment of milk quota rules for certain producers; reform of the sheep and beef regimes; and definition of spirit drinks. It may also discuss other proposals in the internal market programme.

The Research Council meets on 17 November. Discussions will include aeronautical research and development, a communication on space; a plan to allow access to large-scale scientific facilities by European scientists; and a number of research projects, namely ECLAIR (agro-industrial research); JOULE (non-nuclear energy and efficient use of energy); SPES (stimulation plan for economic science); and BRITE/EURAM (research in the manufacturing technology and advanced materials fields).

The Internal Market/Consumer Council on 18 November will discuss a number of measures relevant to the completion of the single market.

The Foreign Affairs Council meets on 21-22 November. There will be discussion of the 1989 generalised system of preferences; the GATT Uruguay round Mid-term meeting of 4-7 December; a Commission report on social and economic cohesion in the context of co-operation between the Community and EFTA; the renegotiation of annual bilateral steel import agreements; and a Commission report of the Community's textile industry; and preparation for the EC/Cyprus Association Council.

The Budget Council is due to meet on 22 November to discuss the European Parliament's amendments and modifications to the 1989 draft budget and possibly the Commission's proposed amending letter to the 1989 budget.

The Education Council of 23 November will resume discussion of the COMETT and ERASMUS programme (tertiary education); and consider the basis for co-operation at Community level in certain areas of primary and secondary school education.

The Development Council meets on 23 November to adopt conclusions on food security in sub-Saharan Africa; annual guidelines for the Asia and Latin America aid programme; progress in the renegotiation of the Lomé convention; and the relationship between project aid and fast disbursing aid in support of economic adjustment.

The Environment Council will meet on 24 November. Discussion will cover the protection of habitats for endangered species; a resolution to sustain developments in the environment; export of waste; municipal waste incineration; three draft directives in the field of biotechnology; titanium oxide waste; and emissions from small cars.

The Fisheries Council meets on 28 November to discuss guide prices for 1989; and relations with third countries.

European Movement (1992)

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the work the European Movement is doing in increasing public awareness of the economic benefits of 1992; and if he will issue a statement on financial support.

Mrs. Chalker: The European Movement has a valuable role to play in drawing public attention and that of business men and industry to the advantages of completion of the single market.

Given the constraints on public resources, and our policy of encouraging non-governmental organisations wherever possible to seek private funding, we told the European Movement in 1985 that official funding would be phased out over the following three years. This decision was confirmed to the chairman in person in May 1986, and the final payment was made as planned this August. I am pleased that the European Movement has succeeded in raising significant private sector funding.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Family Credit

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the number of families with children eligible for family credit and the number who are drawing it.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to my replies to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 19 October at column 896 and to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 24 October.

Cohabitation

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will summarise the criteria used by his Department when deciding whether a man and a woman are living together as husband and wife.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The question whether a man and a woman are living together as husband and wife is decided by the independent adjudicating authorities. The Chief Adjudication Officer has published guidance on the factors which should be considered at paragraph 15021 et seq of the "Adjudication Officer's Guide", a copy of which is in the Library. The criteria are also summarised at pages 70-71 of leaflet SB20—"A Guide to Income Support"—a copy of which is also in the Library, and which is available free to the public. These rules are common to all relevant social security benefits.

Benefits

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the total number of people in receipt of sickness benefit for each month during the past two years and also the number of people in receipt of sickness benefit at the end of 1983, 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information is not available in the precise form requested. The total number of sickness benefit claimants each month between April 1985 and March 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, is given in the following table:

Date	Claimants (000's)
2 April 1985	227

The number of claimants and recipients of sickness benefit at the end of the statistical years 1983 to 1986 is as follows:

Date	Claimants (000's)	Recipients (000's)
2 April 1983	408	338
31 March 1984	247	190

5 April 1986	237	179

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will specify the number of people disqualified from receiving benefit on grounds of non-availability for work for each of the following years: 1983, 1984, 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The numbers of adjudication officers' decisions disallowing unemployment benefit on grounds of non-availability for work are as follows:

Year	Disqualified
1983	57,237
1984	49,043
1985	53,680
1986	68,773
1987	101,774
1988	[1]48,290

[1] To 30 June 1988 only. Later information is not available.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he has any plans to seek to recoup the full amount of social security benefits paid to accident victims from any damages they recover by legal action; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has any plans to recoup the full amount of social security benefits paid to accident victims whether they seek to claim damages or not; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are currently considering a proposal to recover benefits paid to a person as the result of an injury for which he has also claimed and is paid damages. This follows recommendations made by the National Audit Office and the Public Accounts Committee. No decision has yet been made about the proposal which would require primary legislation.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the savings of recouping the full amount of social security benefits paid to accident victims from any damages they recover by legal action; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Touche Ross management consultants have estimated that benefits totalling £57·5 million a year are paid to injured persons who receive damages for the same injury. A copy of their report is in the Library.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the impact on motor insurance premiums of seeking to recoup the full amount of social security benefits paid to accident victims from any damages they recover by legal action; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Touche Ross management consultants have estimated that motor insurance premiums would rise by an average of 0·7 per cent. A copy of their report is in the Library.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of increasing national insurance unemployment benefit for payment as long as a person was unemployed; and if he will present the data in gross and net terms, taking into account the savings on income support and housing benefit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The annual cost of unemployment benefit expenditure of removing the duration limit would be about £1,400 million. Savings on income support and housing benefit would be about £800 million. These costs and savings are calculated at 1988-89 benefit levels and assumed current levels of unemployment.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the numbers of unemployed claimants claiming unemployment benefit only, the numbers claiming unemployment benefit and income support/supplementary benefit, and the numbers claiming only income support/supplementary benefit for the latest available date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is in the following table:

Number of unemployed claimants as at 12 May 1988

Type of claim	Number
Unemployment benefit only	504,142
Unemployment benefit and income support	131,682
Income support only	1,254,417

Social Fund

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his policy towards allowing the purchase of equipment for his social fund officers to be paid for by moneys set aside for social fund grants and loans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The money allocated for the social fund is used exclusively for the provision of grants and loans. All administrative costs associated with the running of the social fund, including the purchase of equipment, are funded from the Department's administrative budget.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how quickly on average the Attendance Allowance Board deals with requests for a review of a refusal of attendance allowance; and what have been the comparable figures in past years.

Mr. Scott: The requested information is in the table.

Attendance Allowance: Average time taken to deal with requests for review of attendance allowance board decisions in the three months ended 30 September each year 1985-1988.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when Charles Eason of 12 Newport Close, Noctourn, Birkenhead, will receive a final decision from the Attendance Allowance Board on his claim (No. ZX 420791D) made in November 1987.

Mr. Scott: The Attendance Allowance Board has now reached a final decision on Mr. Eason's claim, and this will be notified to him within the next seven days. I regret that this decision took some time to finalise and I am writing to the hon. Member.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when John Fairclough of 1 Critchley Avenue, Birkenhead, will receive the final decision from the Attendance Allowance Board of his renewal claim (NP 042830C) made in February 1988.

Mr. Scott: The Attendance Allowance Board has now reached a final decision on Mr. Fairclough's claim, and this will be notified to him within the next seven days. I regret that this decision took some time to finalise and I am writing to the hon. Member.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when Mrs. Ann Norman will receive a final decision from the Attendance Allowance Board on the claim of her son, Paul, of 18 Naylor Road, Birkenhead, made in March 1987 (FY 571372A).

Mr. Scott: The Attendance Allowance Board is an independent adjudicating authority and I have no power to intervene in its decisions. However, I am writing to the hon. Member about Mrs. Norman's claim.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when Mr. Robin Cooper, of 697 New Chester Road, Birkenhead, will receive a final decision on his attendance allowance claim (WE 938515B) made in October 1987.

Mr. Scott: The Attendance Allowance Board is an independent adjudicating authority, and I have no power to intervene in its decisions. However, I am writing to the hon. Member about Mr. Cooper's claim.

"Law Relating" Books

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when publication of the Blue volumes will be complete.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The new social security "Law Relating" books—the Blue volumes—consist of 10 volumes. Volumes 1 to 8 were published by HMSO on 1 July 1988 and it is estimated that volumes 9 and 10 will be published early in 1989.

Personal Injuries Claims

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the number of claims under the Personal Injuries (Civilians) Scheme 1983 (S.I. 1983 No. 686), currently under consideration.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are currently 129 claims under consideration.

Maternity Grant

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the value of the maternity grant payable in 1969 at 1988 prices.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The 1988 value of the £25 maternity grant payable in 1969 would be £153·50[1].

[1] Based on movements in the RPI between November 1969 and September 1988.

Cash Limits

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether there have been any changes in the cash limits or running costs of his Department in 1988-89.

Mr. Scott: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for class XV, vote 6, (housing benefit administration) will be increased by £4 million from £127·635 million to £131·635 million. The revision takes account of local authorities' additional administrative costs due to the raising of the capital limit for entitlement to housing benefit from £6,000 to £8,000 (£2 million) and their preparation costs for taking on boarders (£1 million) and for implementing new rent officer procedures (£1 million). The increase will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for class XV, vote 7, (administration and miscellaneous services) will be increased by £7·395 million from £1,453·404 million to £1,460·799 million. The revision takes account of the additional administrative costs associated with the unit introduced to make transitional payments to certain housing benefit claimants, namely £11·965 million, the salary of an additional Minister (£35,000) and the cost of paying youth training scheme trainees (£183,000). These additional requirements are partially offset by an increase in receipts of £4·788 million to the vote. The balance of the increase will be charged to the reserve and will therefore not add to the planned total of public expenditure. As a result the running costs limit of the Departments of Social Security and of Health is increased by £6·609 million from £1,778·580 million to £1,785·189 million.

PRIME MINISTER

Neutron and Proton Therapy

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her written answer to the hon. Member for Motherwell, South (Dr. Bray) of 20 October, Official Report, column 980, if she will publish the text of Sir Raymond Hoffenberg's letter and her reply in the Official Report.

The Prime Minister: No. It is not my usual practice to publish exchanges of this kind.

Badgers

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister how many representations she has received concerning the case for affording greater legal protection to badgers; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have received a small number of representations concerning the welfare of badgers, including some from hon. Members.

GCHQ Cheltenham

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her reply to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) of 24 October, whether industrial action was taking place at Government Communications Headquarters during the weeks immediately preceding 26 December 1979 and on that date; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: A rolling strike involving the loss of 371 man days took place over the period 19 December 1979 to 13 February 1980. This strike hindered GCHQ's operations during the period of the Russian invasion of Afghanistan, although there was not a total stoppage.

Raoul Wallenberg

Mr. Amess: To ask the Prime Minister if, when she next meets the President of the Soviet Union, she will raise the case of Mr. Raoul Wallenberg; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Soviet authorities are already well aware of the interest shown by Her Majesty's Government and the British public in knowing what became of this brave man.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list the occasions since May 1979 when she met members of the Wallenberg family to discuss the case of Mr. Raoul Wallenberg; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have not met members of the Wallenberg family. I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 28 October to his question about Mr. Wallenberg.

Environment Policies

Mr. Wray: To ask the Prime Minister if, pursuant to her reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan of 24 October, Official Report, column 14, she will list the specific action Her Majesty's Government are taking in order to (a) prevent acid rain, (b) reduce the use of ozone layer depleting chemicals and (c) protect the North sea from further pollution.

The Prime Minister: The Government have initiated the second largest programme in Europe to combat the polluting emissions which contribute to acid rain. This includes a £1 billion programme over 10 years. In addition, substantial further expenditure will be needed to meet our obligations under the large combustion plants directive, which we agreed in June this year. This will lead to a progressive reduction in the emission of sulphur dioxide from such plants of 60 per cent. by 2003 and of NOX of 30 per cent. by 1998. The Government are also committed to a package of measures on vehicle exhaust emissions which will substantially reduce the emission of NOX from motor vehicles.

In June 1987, the Government signed the Montreal protocol which aims to control global emissions of ozone-depleting substances. The aim is to reduce the consumption of chlorofluorocarbon by at least 50 per cent. by 2000. We are pressing for these planned cuts to be accelerated, and extended to at least 85 per cent.

On the North sea, we are implementing the major package of measures agreed by the second international conference, which was held last November under the chairmanship of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. These include a reduction in discharges of dangerous substances to rivers by 50 per cent. by 1995; an end to the dumping of hazardous industrial waste into the North sea by the end of 1989; and an end to marine incineration by the end of 1994.

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Prime Minister which Minister has overall responsibility for negotiating entitlement in (a) the United Kingdom, and (b) England under the new structure fund of the EEC, under the heading "Objective 5(b)"; and what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards ensuring that the same criteria should apply in Devon as will apply in Scotland and Wales.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and Minister of Trade and Industry is responsible for co-ordinating policy in this area, in consultation with other departmental Ministers including my right hon. Friend the Secretaries of State for Scotland, for Wales and for the Environment and the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. On this issue, however, ministerial negotiations in the European Community take place in the Foreign Affairs Council where Her Majesty's Government are represented by the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and the Minister of State, my right hon. Friend the Member for Wallasey (Mrs. Chalker). The criteria for the selection of areas to benefit from assistance under objective 5(b) will be the same throughout the European Community.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Prime Minister if she will reopen the investigation into allegations of a plot to destabilise the Government of Lord Wilson in the light of further recently published allegations.

The Prime Minister: No.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Prime Minister if the inquiry disclosed by the Prime Minister on 6 May 1987 established on whose authority information about Lord Wilson was passed by the security services to members of the Central Intelligence Agency.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to my statement of 6 May 1987 about the inquiry into these matters.

Security (Information to Journalists)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Prime Minister what instructions govern members of the security services in relation to the conveying of information to journalists; and on what dates authority was given to members of the security services to convey information to (a) Chapman Pincher, (b) William Massie, (c) Patrick Marnham, (d) David Leigh and (e) Raymond Jackson.

The Prime Minister: I do not propose to comment on the activities of the security services beyond saying that members of the services are well aware of their obligations under both the criminal and the civil law to make no unauthorised disclosures relating to their work.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

St. Botolph's Church, Aldgate

32. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, how much the Church Commissioners spent on clergy stipends in the last financial year in respect of clergy serving St. Botolph's church, Aldgate, in the City of London.

Mr. Alison: I regret that this information is not available. Clergy stipends are, for the most part, paid out of diocesan stipends funds. The commissioners contribute to those funds by way of an annual allocation. The stipends of individual clergy are determined by the diocese.

Freedom of Speech

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to introduce further measures to impose obligations on universities and other higher education institutions to protect freedom of speech; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: As I indicated in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) on 26 April, at column 98, we plan to evaluate the working of section 43 of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986, now that it has been in force for a year.

School Leavers

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many school leavers there were in each of the past 10 years in (a) Langbaurgh, (b) Middlesbrough and (c) Cleveland.

Mr. Butcher: The figures for the Cleveland local education authority are as follows. Corresponding information for the Langbaurgh and Middlesbrough areas is not available centrally.

Maintained schools

Foreign Languages

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many passes were achieved in GCSE or A-levels last academic year in (a) Chinese, (b) Japanese, (c) Arabic and (d) Korean.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information in the table relates to all graded results at O-level/CSE and A-level in England in 1987. Korean is not identified separately in the data submitted to the Department. Comparable information for 1988 is not yet available centrally.

England—1987

	Chinese	Japanese	Arabic
Number of graded results[1] at O-level/CSE	350	10	120
Number of passes at A-level	350	80	nil

[1] O-level grades A-E, CSE grades 1-5.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many foreign language assistants are presently employed in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The number of foreign language assistants presently employed in England and Wales is 2,168.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met representatives from the Institute of Foreign Language Teachers to discuss the conditions of employment of foreign language assistants in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Neither I nor my right hon. Friend have met representatives of the Institute of Foreign Language Teachers. My Department however plans to undertake a review of the terms and conditions of foreign language assistant appointments, in consultation with the Central Bureau for Educational Visits and Exchanges and the local authority associations.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to increase the recruitment of foreign language assistants in maintained schools in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Responsibility for the recruitment of foreign language assistants in maintained schools lies with local education authorities. The Government accord a high priority to extending the study of modern languages in schools and attach value to the contribution such assistants can make. I hope that these appointments will be given their due priority by authorities.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the current salary scale in force for foreign language assistants in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The allowance currently paid to foreign language assistants is £3,212. The level is set by my Department and is uprated annually in line with the increase in the level of mandatory students' awards.

Public Relations

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many courses in public relations are run by institutions of higher education in the United Kingdom; and what comparable information he has for each of the member states of the European Community.

Mr. Jackson: Courses in public relations are not offered by any higher education institutions in the United Kingdom. However, public relations is sometimes included as an optional course in higher national diploma, degree or postgraduate courses in related subjects such as business or communications studies. Information regarding other member states of the European Community is not available.

Examination Statistics

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to how many students left secondary schools in the maintained sector last year with (a) no academic qualifications, (b) one CSE, (c) one to five CSEs, (d) one O-level, (e) one to five O-levels, and (f) five to 10 O-levels, in (i) England and Wales, and (ii) the Basildon area; and what were the comparable figures for each of the last six years.

Mr. Butcher: The figures are not readily available in the form requested. The table gives information for England. That for Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales. As figures for the Basildon area are not available centrally, those for the Essex local education authority have been given instead.

Secondary Schools

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many secondary schools were built in (a) the Basildon area, and (b) the United Kingdom in 1987, and in each of the previous five years.

Mr. Butcher: The Department does not hold this information in the form requested. However, in the period 1981-82 to 1986-87, the Department gave approval to major building projects for the provision of new or replacement maintained secondary schools as follows:

Number of approved major projects: Maintained secondary schools

Year	Number of projects (England)	Number of projects (Basildon area)
1981-82	1	—
1982-83	1	—

1985-86	5	—
1986-87	5	—
Total	22	—

Information for 1987-88 is not available. Schools in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are the concern of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, for Wales and for Northern Ireland respectively.

Student Union Membership

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many officials in his Department are engaged (a) full-time and (b) part-time in compiling, distribution and analysis of his Department's questionnaire on automatic student union membership; and what is the estimated cost of the exercise.

Mr. Jackson: The Department's current work on student unions is being undertaken by a team of five full-time officials, who include student affairs among their normal responsibilities. It is not possible to estimate the proportion of their time spent on, or the cost of, the particular activities referred to. Responses to the questionaire were requested by today and the task of analysis has not therefore begun.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science to which individuals, student unions or other organisations the results of his Department's investigation on automatic student union membership will be distributed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I refer to the reply which my right hon. Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Thurrock (Mr. Janman) on 18 April, column 292, in which he said that on the basis of information collected during the survey of a sample of institutions he would reach conclusions on the best action to take and would then consult all concerned about those conclusions. Those to be consulted will depend on the conclusions which are reached.

Natural Environment Research Council

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions he has had with the Natural Environment Research Council regarding staffing levels at the council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has had no discussions with the NERC on its staffing levels, which are for the council itself to determine. I am informed that the council has announced staff reductions involving 160 posts by April 1989, including some compulsory redundancies. I understand that only about 45 compulsory redundancies are now expected, half the number originally announced. These measures are part of the council's planning process to keep within its projected budget following a reduction in income from commissioned work.

Education Reform

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on how the implementation of the Education Reform Act 1988 is to be funded in Suffolk.

Mr. Butcher: The funding of education in Suffolk is for the local education authority to determine. However, the Goverment's spending plans for education in 1989-90 will give priority to those aspects of the service most affected by the Education Reform Act. Specific grants will also be available to support spending on activities relevant to the implementation of the Act: over £90 million of such expenditure will be supported through the education support grant programme and £65 million through the in-service teacher training grant scheme.

Pupil Insurance

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice his Department offers to local education authorities about insuring staff and pupils against death or injury arising from sport, cruises and other extra-mural activities.

Mr. Butcher: It is for each local education authority to decide whether to provide insurance cover for its staff or pupils taking part in sport or other out-of-school activities, but there is no general duty for it to do so. Some advice on insurance is given in the Department's safety booklet "Safety in Outdoor Pursuits" and other booklets in the safety series, obtainable from Her Majesty's Stationery Office.

High Energy Particle Physics

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's current attitude towards the high energy particle physics facilities at CERN in Switzerland; and whether Britain intends to maintain its annual subscription.

Mr. Jackson: The Government are studying the implications of the CERN council's decisions on the various recommendations made by the CERN review committee, chaired by Professor Abragam, and will make a statement before the end of this year.

Chemistry and Physics

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when it is proposed to publish a list of universities which do not subscribe to the criteria established by the University Grants Committee for chemistry and physics; and if he will give a date for compliance.

Mr. Jackson: I understand that the University Grants Committee reports on the general principles of rationalising university departments of physics and chemistry will shortly be published for consultation. Information about all university cost-centres is already published annually in the "Universities' Statistical Record."

Support Grants

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to encourage local education authorities to take up education support grants when they are required to take over full fundings of all education support grant initiatives.

Mrs. Rumbold: One of the main purposes of education support grants is to encourage local education authorities to undertake expenditure in areas which the Government consider to be of particular importance. In some cases, particularly, for example, those which involve supporting the purchase of specialised equipment, the objectives of the activity will be achieved during the lifetime of the project. In others the intention is that initiatives should be continued as part of mainstream funding after a few years of specific grant support. There seems to be little reluctance on the part of local education authorities to take up these grants: in 1988-89 bids totalling almost £84 million were received for a total of £50 million of new expenditure available.

Funding Councils

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress is being made towards the incorporation of the Universities Funding Council and the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council; and what initial guidance he intends to give to the two councils.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The UFC and PCFC are being incorporated tomorrow. They will be preparing to take up their main responsibility for funding institutions on 1 April next. I have today sent letters of guidance to the chairman of both councils, and am placing copies of both in the Library.

Member's Correspondence

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth will receive a reply to his letters of 13 April and 5 September referring to correspondence he has received from Simon Carney, chairman of the association members' group committee, British Medical Association.

Mr. Jackson: My hon. Friend's letters did not reach me. I have now seen a copy of his constituent's representations and have replied to my hon. Friend today.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Vehicle Access

40. Mr Jessel: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether he has any proposals to improve hon. Members' vehicular access to the House.

Mr. Wakeham: I have no such proposals at present. However, as my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister informed my hon. Friend the Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) in a written reply on Wednesday 19 October 1988, the Government have committed some £186,000 to studies commissioned by Westminster city council into ways of improving the environment and traffic conditions in Parliament square. I am sure that the authorities of the House will draw the attention to the Commissioner of the Metropolitan police and Westminster city council to any particular points which my hon. Friend has in mind.

Scottish Business

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many minutes in each year, from Session 1980-81 to 1986-87, were spent on the Floor of the House on Scottish business.

Mr. Wakeham: The information requested is as follows:

Session	Minutes
1980-81	5,135
1981-82	3,141
1982-83	1,813
1983-84	4,426
1984-85	2,458
1985-86	2,578
1986-87	2,614

Palace of Westminster (East Entrance)

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make representations to London Underground to have the east entrance to Westminster station reopened.

Mr. Wakeham: This is not a matter for me. However, I have asked the chairman of London Underground Ltd., to write to the hon. Gentleman about it.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Safer Cities Project (Nottingham)

Mr. Knowles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in developing his Department's safer cities project in Nottingham; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I visited Nottingham on 24 October and was pleased to note the progress which had been made since my right hon. Friend announced, on 9 July, that Nottingham had agreed to become a safer cities area. The first meeting of the local steering committee took place on 4 October, with representatives of the city and county councils, police, probation, chamber of commerce and industry, community relations council and council for voluntary service. The recruitment of a project co-ordinator, assistant co-ordinator and personal assistant is now under way. A crime profile of the area is being compiled to provide an objective base for decisions and will enable the local steering committee to agree priorities for local action to tackle these locally identified crime problems.

My hon. Friend will know that Home Office funding is available for the project staff, running costs and for some grant aid.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons charged with murder have subsequently pleaded guilty to section 2 manslaughter by reason of diminished responsibility in each of the past 20 years; and in how many of these cases the charges involved the killing of children.

Mr. John Patten: The numbers of persons indicted for murder and subsequently convicted of section 2 manslaughter by reason of diminished responsibility are published annually in table 4.7 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", copies of which are available in the Library. The number of such cases for the years 1982 to 1987 where one or more of the victims was less than 16 years of age are given in the following table. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were (a) charged with and (b) convicted of the killing of children in (i) England and Wales and (ii) the Basildon area for each year since 1965.

Mr. John Patten: The numbers of persons indicted and convicted for homicide offences are published annually in table 4.7 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", copies of which are available in the Library. The number of such cases where one or more victims was less than 16 years of age are given in the following table for the years 1982 to 1987. Information on homicides in the Basildon area is not available, but figures for the Essex police force area for the years 1982 to 1987 are included; corresponding figures for the years 1968 to 1981 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Prison Officers (Attacks)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many attacks were perpetrated upon prison officers in England and Wales in each year since 1970; what was the punishment meted out to each offender in each case; and what was the compensation paid to the injured officer in each case.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The readily available information on proven offences of gross personal violence to or assault on a prison officer, and the punishment awarded, in the years 1982 to 1986 was published in the annual command paper "Prison Statistics England and Wales" (tables 9.7, 9.8 and 9.9 of the latest issue, for 1986, Cm. 210) copies of which are in the Library. Figures for earlier years could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The Department does not award compensation to prison officers in connection with such incidents: this is a matter for the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board.

Seals

Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to make an order under section 3 of the Conservation of Seals Act 1970 to prohibit all killing of seals.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: With the agreement of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary will lay two orders under section 3 of the Conservation of Seals Act 1970.

The Conservation of Seals (Common Seals) Order 1988 will prohibit the killing, injuring or taking of common seals (Phoca Vitalina) in Great Britain and its coastal waters. The Conservation of Seals (England and Wales) Order 1988 will give the same protection to grey seals (Hailchoerus Grypus) in England and Wales in their coastal waters.

Both orders will come into effect in December and will run for two years. They will be reviewed next summer to ensure that they remain necessary.

Charity Commission

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether any changes will be made to the Charity Commission cash limit and running cost limit for 1988-89.

Mr. John Patten: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit on class XX, vote 4 will be increased by £910,000 from £6,895,000 to £7,805,000. As a consequence, the running costs limit will be increased by £782,000 from £6,743,000 to £7,525,000. This will enable the commissioners to carry forward those proposals arising from the efficiency scrutiny of the supervision of charities which do not require primary legislation.

The cash limit increase will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planning total of public expenditure.

Electronic Tags

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps will be taken to ensure that prisoners who have electronic tags fitted to them will be capable of being monitored at all times.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 26 October 1988]: We are planning pilot schemes to verify compliance by unconvicted defendants with certain conditions of bail. The precise methods of monitoring will be announced when the areas for the experiment have been selected and a detailed specification for the equipment has been prepared.

Children (Fruit Machines)

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what estimates he has as to the number of children under 18 years who are addicted to playing fruit machines;

(2) what estimates he has as to the number of children under 16 years who are addicted to playing fruit machines.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 24 October 1988]: The information requested is not available. The research carried out in 1987 by the Home Office research and planning unit ("Amusement Machines: Dependency and Deliquency", Home Office Research Study No. 101) does not estimate the number of young people addicted to amusement-with-prizes (fruit) machines. The report estimates the extent to which young people under the ages of 17 may be at risk of becoming dependent upon the playing of these machines, using three indicators of risk. These are described and the results set out in full in chapter 4, showing that only a small minority of players appear to be at any risk of dependency.

Vigilante Groups

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will issue guidance to senior police officers concerning the implications for the maintenance of law and order of the establishment of vigilante groups in the United Kingdom and as to whether policemen will be encouraged to co-operate with them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 24 October 1988]: Chief officers of police are well aware of the need for the support of active citizens in preventing and detecting crime. They know that effective voluntary action against crime must have meticulous regard to the law and to the responsibilities of the police themselves. They know how important it is for such action to have genuine local support, and to unite not divide the community. Good examples of how members of the public can support the police are through membership of the special constabulary or active participation in neighbourhood watch schemes.

ENERGY

Electricity and Gas Consumption

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will estimate the number of households consuming (a) electricity and (b) gas in the latest year for which statistics are available; what were the comparable figures (i) five and (ii) 10 years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: The figures requested are shown in the table.

Estimated number of household consumers in the United Kingdom

at 31 March	Electricity (millions)	Gas (millions)
1978	20·3	13·9
1983	21·2	15·2
1988	22·4	16·5

Electricity Generation

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give figures for the cost of generation of electricity from Central Electricity Generating Board coal-fired stations since 1978, both as an average national figure and for the 10 most efficient stations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is an operational matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many households in (a) England, and (b) Wales he estimates will be affected by the recently announced increase in electricity prices.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The April revision of electricity prices included all households in England and Wales. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland is responsible for the Scottish electricity industry.

Lead-free Petrol

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when lead-free petrol will be made available at current octane ratings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: All unleaded petrol on sale in the United Kingdom meets the minimum 95 octane rating specified for premium grade in British Standard 7070, which itself conforms to the agreed European standard. Unleaded petrol is now available at more than 2,200 petrol stations in the United Kingdom.

Drilling Rigs (Inspections)

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what was the precise nature of the fault which led to his Department instructing seven jack-up rigs to be taken to dry dock for inspection;

(2) which organisation is the certifying authority in respect of each of the seven jack-up rigs instructed by his Department to be taken to dry dock for inspection;

(3) if, in respect of each of the seven installations instructed by his Department to be taken to dry dock for inspection, he will specify the nature of any repairs which were necessary;

(4) whether, in respect of his Department's instructions that seven jack-up rigs be taken to dry dock for inspection, it is his intention to issue any guidance or directions to the industry in relation to any general matter or specific items of equipment utilised on these installations.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Following the discovery in June of unexplained cracking in the lower leg sections and load bearing supports for the bottom of the legs of several jack-up drilling installations my inspectors instructed owners to undertake a dry dock inspection of the seven CFEM 2005C and CFEM 2600 type installations.

Det Norske Veritas is the certifying authority for five of these installations and Offshore Certification Bureau for the other two.

Inspection of four of the seven installations has been completed; a further one is currently being inspected and arrangements have been made for the inspection of the remaining two. The precise nature of necessary repairs is a matter between the certifying authorities and the owners of the installations. However, two of the installations have been found to have severe cracking and two have minor cracks. The method for treating severe cracking is for the cracks to be ground out deeply, or gouged out using electric arc/air methods and then repaired by weld filling. Minor or shallow cracking is ground out to eliminate all signs of defect. Any repairs undertaken will be supported by non-destructive testing techniques and by heat treatment and must be completed to the satisfaction of the relevant certifying authority.

The Department has already published guidance to the industry on corrosion protection and hydrogen attack. Nevertheless, my officials intend to issue a safety notice impressing upon operators the need for vigilance in this area.

Corrosion Inhibitors

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to on which installations on the United Kingdom continental shelf the impressed current type of corrosion inhibitor is in use.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My Department does not maintain these records. For totally submerged steel, all offshore installations on the United Kingdom continental shelf have either the impressed current type of corrosion inhibitor complemented by the use of alternative cathodic protection systems such as sacrificial anodes, or have sacrificial anodes alone.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has concerning the impressed current type of corrosion inhibitor presently in use on the United Kingdom continental shelf.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My inspectors are satisfied that the impressed current type of corrosion inhibitor is generally effective. It employs inert and non-galvanic anodes with an external source of direct current to impress a current on the steel to be protected. This is complemented by the use of alternative cathodic protection systems, such as sacrificial anodes, to ensure adequate polarisation of critical regions when the impressed current may have to be de-energised for operational reasons.

Research

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will list the reasons for his decision to discontinue fusion research in the United Kingdom; and whether Her Majesty's Government will participate in any joint project on the continent after 1992 along the lines of Joint European Torus;

(2) on what technologies he proposes that research should be undertaken at Culham, Oxfordshire, apart from lasers.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my right hon. Friend the Member for Henley (Mr. Heseltine) on 27 October 1988, at column 319.

Fast Reactor Research (Scotland)

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are his reasons for phasing out the fast reactor research in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement made in the House by my right hon. Friend on 21 July 1988, at column 1288.

Nuclear Scientists

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made as to the effect on the nuclear commitment in electricity privatisation of current redundancies among nuclear scientists in forward projects.

Mr. Michael Spicer: There is no reason to expect recently announced decisions on United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority research programmes to affect the nuclear requirements of the privatised distribution companies for the foreseeable future.

Solar Heating Research

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what Government expenditure has been on solar heating research, development and demonstration in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom in each of the last five years; and what is the planned expenditure in these areas in the next three years.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Government expenditure on the solar energy programme in each of the last five years has been as follows:

	£ million
1983-84	0·9
1984-85	0·5
1985-86	0·7
1986-87	0·9
1987-88	1·1

In the current year it is expected to be around £1·4 million.

Energy paper 55, "Renewable Energy in the UK: The Way Forward", which was published in June this year and is available in the Library of the House, envisages a future programme lasting about 10 years at a total cost to Government of around £13 million. Precise figures for each of the next three years are not available.

The principal activities in the programme are field studies, which provide evidence of the costs and benefits of passive solar design from measurements in real buildings, and design studies, which provide an opportunity for design practices to explore passive solar techniques in a wide range of building types to produce a range of exemplar designs. Both activities cover the whole country including Scotland in order to allow for the full range of climatic variation. However, the research which relates to Scotland is not covered by separate contracts for which separate expenditure figures can be given.

British Coal Enterprise Ltd.

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether further funding is to be made available to British Coal Enterprise Ltd. for its job creation activities in coalfield areas.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government intend to continue their support of BCE's valuable work in helping to provide new job opportunities for coalfield communities. I am satisfied that BCE has made effective use of the £40 million previously provided, which has now been fully committed. Accordingly, the Government have agreed to British Coal's request that a further £20 million be made available to the company.

Pipeline and Storage System

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what progress has been made concerning the transfer of the Government pipeline and storage system to the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence and I have agreed, with the approval of the Prime Minister, that his Department will take over the Government pipeline and storage system from 1 April 1989. An Order in Council will be laid before the House as soon as possible.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Set-Aside Schemes

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the European Economic Community countries which (a) have and (b) have not introduced set-aside schemes; if he will state the major differences between the European Economic Community and United Kingdom schemes; and what steps have been taken to ensure that the United Kingdom farming industry is not disadvantaged.

Mr. Ryder: The United Kingdom, the Federal Republic of Germany and the Netherlands have already put national set-aside schemes into force. All other member states except Portugal have submitted draft schemes to the Commission, and I expect the details of these to be finalised shortly so as to allow implementation. Portugal has no obligation to introduce set-aside until 1994.

The United Kingdom scheme conforms to the framework of detailed rules laid down by Community legislation. It is the responsibility of the Commission to ensure that the schemes of other member states are within these uniform rules. The Government will be keeping a watch on developments in other member states.

Advisory Committee on Pesticides

Mr. Wray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the names, qualifications and employment of the members of the Advisory Committee on Pesticides.

Mr. Ryder: I have arranged for a copy of the details requested to be placed in the Library of the House.

Cunliffe Report

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has reached a decision on the implementation of the Cunliffe report on the licensing of animal medicines.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I am very grateful to Mr. Peter Cunliffe for his extremely thorough examination of the use of resources for the control of animal medicines. I am glad to be able to say that I have accepted almost all Mr. Cunliffe's recommendations. In particular, a new veterinary medicines directorate will be set up on 1 April 1989 within the Ministry. This directorate will incorporate the three separate units currently involved in licensing work. The post of director will be advertised shortly.

Most of Mr. Cunliffe's recommendations on procedures and on personnel matters either have already been implemented or will shortly be implemented. On finance also, I have accepted most of Mr. Cunliffe's recommendations—in particular the need for fees to be increased to cover the cost of the licensing operations. I consider that the setting of the directorate's budget should remain a ministerial responsibility rather than being transferred, as Mr. Cunliffe suggested, to a committee including representatives of the pharmaceutical industry. However, I shall be arranging for consultation with the industry to take place each year before the budget is set.

The question of exemption for the directorate from gross running cost controls, which Mr. Cunliffe recommended, is under consideration.

THE ARTS

Children's Books and Comics

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has as to which books and children's comics are banned from public libraries in London, Manchester and Liverpool on the grounds of racism or sexism.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 28 October 1988]: No comprehensive information on this subject is maintained centrally. The choice of what material to stock is a matter for local library authorities who should take account of the needs and wishes of the local community. When I receive complaints about choice of material it is my normal practice to raise them directly with the library authorities concerned.

I am aware that some authorities are reported to have discouraged reading material which has given pleasure to generations of adults and children because of supposedly racist or sexist overtones and I deplore this.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Radiotherapy Staff

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Belfast, South on 28 July, Official Report column 293, he will give in tabular form the number of physicists and technicians, giving the establishment, those actually working on site, in training on site and on maternity or prolonged sickness leave, in the radiotherapy physics division and in other sections of Belvoir Park hospital.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is as follows:

Physicists and technicians in the radiotherapy physics division and other sections of Belvoir park hospital at 25 October 1988

Grade	Establishment	Number of staff in post[1] Working on site	Training on site	Long-term sick leave	Maternity leave
Physicists	8	3	1	1	1
Technicians	14	12	—	—	—

[1] In addition to the numbers quoted, 2 physicists and 2 technicians have recently been appointed to fill vacant positions and will be in post within one month.

Social Fund

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide figures for the amount of social fund allocated to each local office for (a) grants, and (b) loans.

Mr. Needham: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question by the hon. Member for Belfast, South (Rev. Martin Smyth) on 3 December 1987 at column 692.

Development Grants

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many projects were grant aided in Newry through the urban development grant scheme; how much in total was paid to these projects in Newry; what was the name of each project; and how much was granted to each individual project;

(2) how many projects were grant aided in Armagh City through the urban development grant scheme; how much in total was paid to projects in Armagh City; what was the name of each project; and how much was granted to each individual project.

Mr. Needham: These are matters for the Board of the International Fund for Ireland. I have arranged to have the questions referred to the chairman.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Fiji

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government are making to the Fijian regime about procuring acceptance by the political parties and people of Fiji of the proposed constitution of 22 September; and whether such acceptance will be made a condition of continuing diplomatic relations.

Mr. Eggar: Future constitutional arrangements in Fiji are for the people of Fiji to resolve among themselves, free from external intervention. We have however made clear to the Government of Fiji on a number of occasions our earnest hope that a new constitution will be acceptable to all communities in Fiji. We will continue to offer advice and assistance in a spirit of friendship and without conditions.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what help and advice was provided by Her Majesty's Government in the drawing up of the new Fijian constitution of 22 September; and what representations Her Majesty's Government made to the Government of Fiji on the communalisation of Fiji proposed in that constitution.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister discussed with the Fiji Prime Minister when she met him on 29 March possible options open to Fiji in its search for new constitutional arrangements. My right hon. Friend also offered Fiji advice on the preparation of a new constitution.

The Government of Fiji have since asked for a legal draftsman to assist with framing a new constitution in proper legal language, but we understand that the Fiji Government are unlikely to require the services of the candidate we have offered before March 1989.

We have made no representations to the Government of Fiji on the contents of the draft constitution. We have however consistently expressed the hope that the new constitution will prove acceptable to all communities in Fiji.

Israel

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of the state of Israel concerning the effects of the Arab boycott on relations between the United Kingdom and Israel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Israeli Ministers have not raised this issue since 1986. It is a matter of record that we deplore the boycott.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the Israeli ambassador; what matters were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. and learned Friend hosted a farewell lunch for the ambassador and his wife on 7 October. It was a friendly occasion and we now look forward to welcoming his successor.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last visited Israel; what matters were discussed at the official level; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State last visited Israel from 28-30 October 1984. There have of course been numerous high level bilateral contacts since then, most recently my right hon. and learned Friend meeting the Israeli Foreign Minister on 26 September.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to visit Israel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. and learned Friend has no such plans at present.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information his Department has on the number of British citizens who visited Israel in 1987; and in each of last six years.

Mr. Waldegrave: Israeli sources give the following approximate figures for United Kingdom tourists only:

	Numbers
1980	141,000
1981	150,000
1982	127,000
1983	122,500
1984	132,000
1985	162,000
1986	160,000
1987	185,580

Arab Boycott

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to those Arab states which operate the Arab boycott; what response was received; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: None. It is a matter of record that we deplore the Arab boycott.

European Community (Decision-making)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy on developing the contribution of the smaller member states of the European Community to Community decision making.

Mrs. Chalker: The treaties establishing the European Communities provide for all member states to contribute on an equitable basis to Community decision-making.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his assessment of the role played by the smaller member states of the European Community in the major issues that affect the Community.

Mrs. Chalker: All member states, irrespective of their size, play an important role in the process of development of the Community.

India

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will use his good offices to seek to persuade the Indian Government to grant the hon. Member for Hayes and Harlington an entry visa to enable him to visit the Punjab to make contact with relatives and friends of his constituents.

Mr. Eggar: The issuing of visas is entirely a matter for the Indian authorities.

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will receive a deputation from the Sikh community in Britain to discuss with them the alleged violation of human rights in India as reported recently by Amnesty International.

Mr. Eggar: No. We are concerned about human rights violations wherever they occur and we recognise the concern of Sikhs here about their relatives and friends. But India is a democratic country, and the problem posed by the activities of extremists in the Punjab is a challenge to her security and integrity.

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the evidence on which Her Majesty's Government base their view that the judicial system in India protects the rights of minority groups such as the Sikhs.

Mr. Eggar: No. India is a secular state and its constitution prohibits discrimination on grounds of religion, requires equality for all before the law and protects the freedom to practise and propogate religion and to manage religious affairs. Individuals, or their families, who believe that they have been treated illegally may take advantage of the remedies available to them under India's independent legal system.

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent report by Amnesty International entitled "India —A Review of Human Rights Violations", a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Eggar: No. The Indian Government are aware of our concern about human rights abuses wherever they occur.

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Indian Government regarding the alleged violation by that Government of basic human rights as reported recently by Amnesty International.

Mr. Eggar: None. We have noted the contents of Amnesty International's recent report. We regularly make clear in public and in private our views on the need for all governments to respect human rights.

EC (Technical Standards)

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the chairmanships and memberships of sub-committees on technical standards by nationality within the European Commission and within the Economic and Social Committee.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him on 27 October.

HEALTH

Patient Treatment

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give for each district health authority the number of non-resident, non-emergency patients treated for each year since 1980.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that I cannot answer this question without incurring disproportionate costs.

Tranquillisers

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made as to how many adults in the United Kingdom are addicted to tranquillisers; and how many of these are prescribed for them within the National Health Service.

Mrs. Currie: There are no precise figures to show the level or trend in benzodiazepine dependence, but it was estimated in a report published in the Adverse Reaction Bulletin of June 1986 that perhaps half a million people in the United Kingdom were dependent on benzodiazepines. A copy of the report is in the Library.

Information on how many of those dependent on benzodiazepines receive their prescriptions under the National Health Service is not available. However 25·5 million prescriptions for benzodiazepines were dispensed by community pharmacists in Great Britain in 1987.

Recent studies show that about 70 per cent. of hypnotic benzodiazepines (those to treat insomnia) are prescribed to women, and about 40 per cent. of these to women over 65.

Infant Mortality (Colchester)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make arrangements for a detailed study into the increased rates of infant mortality amongst children of soldiers based in the Colchester area; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: No. I understand that representatives of North East Essex health authority, together with Army medical personnel, are planning to meet on 9 November to consider what action is required locally to follow up a recent review of post perinatal mortality in the North East Essex health district. Other districts in England have higher rates of infant mortality than Colchester.

Dental Services

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dental reference services references in each year over the last five years have been for examination-only cases.

Mrs. Currie: Information is not available in the form requested, but the number of such examinations is extremely low.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what formal arrangements exist for the work of dental reference officers to come under professional review; and whether general dental practitioners have any input into this process.

Mrs. Currie: Dental reference officers are the subject of the usual yearly performance appraisal review system which applies throughout the Civil Service. The work of the dental reference service is the subject of professional review as part of an overall management accountability process. We do not consider that input to either of the above by general dental practitioners would be appropriate.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many disciplinary cases his Department brought against dental reference officers in each of the last five years; and with what outcome.

Mrs. Currie: None.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has about research undertaken at Southampton university implying a correlation between the incidence of Alzheimer's disease and aluminium in drinking water; and what conclusions he has drawn from it.

Mrs. Currie: We are aware that a report on this study by the Medical Research Council's environmental epidemiology unit at Southampton has now been prepared for publication. We have asked the expert Committee on the Medical Aspects of the Contamination of Air, Soil and Water to advise on the conclusions which should be drawn from the results.

Nursing Posts (Regrading)

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the manner in which district health authorities are conducting the regrading of nursing posts.

Mr. Mellor: Health authorities have been asked to implement the new grading structure consistently in accordance with the letter and spirit of the agreement reached by the nursing and midwifery staff negotiating council.

Hospital Support Staff

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to include hospital support service staff, including pharmacy, pathology laboratory and health physics staff in the pay review body.

Mr. Mellor: No.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give, for every December since 1970 and for each regional health authority and England as a whole, the number of cases on (a) the urgent in-patient waiting lists, (b) the urgent lists, waiting over a month, (c) the non-urgent in-patient waiting lists, (d) the non-urgent lists, waiting over a year and (e) the total in-patient waiting lists.

Mrs. Currie: The available information is given in the table. However, the waiting list figures are generally at a seasonal peak at 31 December. The March and September figures give a better indication of annual trends in the demand for hospital in-patient treatment.

Numbers of patients on in-patient waiting list at 31 December

Notes:

Figures prior to 1974 relate to Regional Hospital Boards and Boards of Governors.

Because of National Health Service restructuring in 1974 and 1982 the regional figures are not strictly comparable over the whole period.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give, for each ambulance authority, the percentage of emergency calls which meet response time standards, giving for each authority its ranking in England.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is available in the package of health service indicators produced by the Department. The latest information, for 1986-87, is in the Library.

Doctors

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give, for each district health authority, the number of senior doctors per 100,000 in-patient cases, giving for each district health authority its ranking in England.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is available for the specialties of general medicine, trauma and orthopaedics, gynaecology and obstetrics, general surgery and paediatrics and is in the package of health service indicators produced by the Department. The latest information, for 1986-87, is in the Library.

Nurses

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give, for each district health authority, the number of nurses per acute bed, giving for each its ranking in England.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is available in the package of health service indicators produced by the Department. The latest information, for 1986-87, is in the Library.

Dalkon Shield

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department will initiate a public information campaign to inform women of any rights they may have in regard to any injuries caused by the Dalkon shield contraceptive device.

Mrs. Currie: No. The Dalkon shield contraceptive device, which was manufactured in the United States, is currently the subject of compensation litigation in the United States courts. I understand that those courts directed the manufacturer to publicise the procedures and the court subsequently expressed satisfaction with the way the company complied.

Cook-chill Catering

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is his policy on the grant by regional health authorities of direct financial assistance to district health authorities introducing cook-chill systems of catering;

(2) why the Yorkshire regional health authority has made a grant of £350,000 to the Wakefield health authority for the introduction of a cook-chill system of catering.

Mrs. Currie: There is no central policy on such matters, nor do I see a need for one. Such decisions quite properly rest with the regional health authority concerned. The hon. Member may therefore wish to approach the chairman of the Yorkshire regional health authority for the information he is seeking.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the calculation of the figure of £200,000 per annum revenue savings as a result of the introduction of a cook-chill catering system in the Wakefield health authority, referred to by the Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie) on 25 October, Official Report, column 275, took into account (a) the additional electricity supplies required to run the system, (b) the servicing of equipment, and the maintenance of distribution transport and (c) the cost of microbiological monitoring and monitoring staff.

Mrs. Currie: The figure was taken from the report to the Wakefield health authority on 25 January 1988 and that was made clear in the debate. May I suggest that the hon. Member pursue his inquiry with the district general manager whose finance director wrote the report. The report was accepted by the health authority. I am satisfied that savings can be made on the current catering system in Wakefield while maintaining patient services.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) why the Yorkshire regional health authority inquiry into the management of Wakefield health authority did not examine the circumstances leading up to the introduction of cook-chill catering in Wakefield's hospitals;

(2) why the Yorkshire regional health authority chose Mr. Brian Birchall, the district general manager of Wakefield health authority, to chair the regional health authority's catering sub-committee which recommended the introduction of cook-chill catering across the Yorkshire region;

(3) what is the total capital cost of the installation of the cook-chill catering system within the Wakefield health authority;

(4) why the Yorkshire regional health authority has not responded to representations concerning the cost of the implementation of cook-chill catering in Wakefield made to it by Wakefield health authority's former consultant microbiologist, Professor Richard Lacey.

Mrs. Currie: These are matters for the regional health authority. The hon. Member may therefore wish to approach the Yorkshire regional health authority chairman for the information.

Measles, Mumps and Rubella Vaccine

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he has taken to ensure that there is sufficient measles, mumps and rubella vaccine available to meet the demands resulting from the recent Government publicity campaign.

Mrs. Currie: There are about 1·2 million children eligible for this vaccine in the course of a year (those aged 15 months and those called up for pre-school diphtheria, tetanus and polio boosters).

By the start of the campaign 300,000 doses of MMR had been distributed to health authorities. That number has now been increased to 500,000 and by Christmas we shall have made more than 1 million doses available. That is several times more vaccine than is needed to immunise the children expected to come forward in that time.

Wakefield Health Authority

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to be in a position to name the new chairperson of the Wakefield health authority.

Mr. Mellor: Soon.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the paper referred to by the Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie), on 25 October, Official Report, column 275, was presented to the Wakefield health authority.

Mrs. Currie: On 25 January 1988.

NHS Ancillary Staff

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has costed the financial implications of the reduction from 40 to 39 hours in the working week for National Health Service ancillary staff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 28 October 1988]: The reduction of one hour in the hours of the standard working week from 12 December was part of the settlement agreed for improvements in the pay and conditions of service of NHS ancillary staff for 1988-89. The agreement provides for hours actually worked by full-time staff to be reduced and for the change not to lead to increases in overtime working. There is a requirement for the reduction to be achieved at minimum cost and for agreements to be reached locally on the necessary changes in working arrangements. Precise costs will depend upon the outcome of these local agreements.

SOCIAL SECURITY

British Pensioners Overseas

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated cost of extending to all British pensioners living overseas the right to receive (a) United Kingdom pensions and (b) United Kingdom pension increases in full.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: United Kingdom retirement pensions and widows benefits are already payable to British pensioners living overseas. About 40 per cent. of these pensioners have their pensions uprated. The extra cost of fully uprating the pensions of the remaining 60 per cent. would be about £205 million a year at current rates.

Reciprocal Social Security Agreements

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has concluded negotiations with Barbados and the Philippines over reciprocal social security agreements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The United Kingdom has not yet concluded negotiations with Barbados and the Philippines on the subject of reciprocal social security agreements.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many designated equal opportunities officers carry out recruitment monitoring throughout his Department; how many of them are male, how many female and how many from ethnic minorities, respectively; and whether he has taken, or whether he proposes to take, any positive action by reason of the results of such monitoring.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Designated equal opportunities officers in each of the 10 personnel units provide a joint service for the Department of Health and Social Security, and recruitment monitoring is one of their responsibilities. Including designated deputies and the central unit, 15 are female and eight are male; one of these is from an ethnic minority. Several positive action initiatives, not depending on the results of ethnic monitoring, are under consideration, for example access training in the north eastern region.

Benefits

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to raise the level of disregards in respect of all state benefits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. Friend provided details of the new disregards on 27 October, at columns 478-84.

Family Credit

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the monthly total of claimants of family credit (a) nationally, (b) in each standard region and (c) in each of his Department's office areas, for April and each succeeding month.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The total number of families in receipt of family credit at the end of each month was as follows:

	Number
April	194,000
May	215,000
June	236,000
July	243,000
August	255,000
September	[1]242,000

[1] Distorted by the effects of the postal dispute.

Family credit is dealt with centrally, and information is not available on a regional or office area basis.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the number of claimants estimated to qualify for family credit at the time of the April social security changes; what was the basis for that estimate; and what was the likely distribution of claimants in each standard region on the basis of the estimate.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It was estimated that 450,000 families would receive family credit. This was based on an assumption that take-up would be 60 per cent. Reliable estimates can be made only on a national basis.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the projected cost of family credit if all claimants estimated to be entitled claimed it; what was the actual expenditure projected for 1988-89; and what is present estimated outturn expenditure for family credit in the year 1988-89 on the basis of present numbers of claimants.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Estimates were made only on the basis of the number of families who were expected actually to receive family credit. The expenditure projected for 1988-89 was £409 million. The estimated outturn for 1988-89 will be given in the 1989 public expenditure White Paper.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many sufferers from myalgic encephalomyelitis received (a) mobility allowance, (b) attendance allowance, (c) statutory sick pay and (d) housing benefit yearly since 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that this information is not available.

Housing Support

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing public expenditure in 1987-88 prices on (a) assistance with housing costs for supplementary benefit recipients between 1977-78 and 1982-83, (b) rent allowances and rebates between 1977-78 and 1982-83, (c) certificated housing benefit between 1982-83 and 1987-88, (d) housing benefit for income support recipients between 1988-89 and 1990-91 and (e) housing benefit for people not on income support between 1988-89 and 1990-91.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is in the table. The figures are consistent with those published in successive public expenditure White Papers between 1983 and 1988.

Child Benefit

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the numbers of (a) mothers and (b) children who are recipients of child benefit in (i) Great Britain, (ii) England, (iii) Scotland, (iv) Wales, (v) Northern Ireland, (vi) each Department of Social Security region and (vii) each constituency.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is not available in the exact form requested. However, the numbers of families and children to whom and for whom child benefit was in payment at 31 December 1987 is as follows:

	(a) Families	(b) Children
(i) Great Britain	6,681,000	11,961,000
(ii) England	5,710,000	10,242,000
(iii) Scotland	623,000	1,099,000
(iv) Wales	348,000	620,000

Child benefit is normally paid to the mother. It is administered centrally and information is not collected for specific regions or constituencies. The Northern Ireland child benefit scheme is administered separately and is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

"Help with Hostel Charges"

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received concerning the consultation paper "Help with Hostel Charges"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris) on 27 October at column 337.

Christmas Bonus

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current value of the £10 pensioners Christmas bonus, as in 1972 prices; and what is the value in 1988 prices, had the bonus been uprated by (a) the rise in the retail prices index and (b) average earnings since its introduction.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is not yet possible to determine the real value of the 1988 Christmas bonus as compared with the 1972 bonus. If it had been increased in line with prices since its introduction it would have been worth £45·93 at December 1987. If increased in line with average male manual earnings, the 1987 bonus would have been worth £52·78.

Single Payments

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the single payment expenditure for 1986-87.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to my predecessor's reply to the hon. Member for Clydesdale (Mr. Hood) on 4 May at column 504.

Social Fund

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the number of applications received by social security offices from persons in the Stalybridge and Hyde area for a grant or loan from the social fund during the last six months; what is the proportion of these to whom a grant or loan was given; what is the total value of the grants and loans; and what was the total value of single payments made by the offices during the same period in 1987.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The local offices which deal with Stalybridge and Hyde area are Hyde and Ashton-under-Lyne. Information on numbers of applications for social fund loans and grants received, awards made and the total value of such grants and loans, listed by local office, is available in the Library.

For the period starting on 8 April 1987 and ending on 20 October 1987 the total value of single payments made by Hyde and Ashton-under-Lyne local offices was £270,916 and £191,424 respectively.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security to what extent local social security offices are entitled to issue supplies of social fund claim forms to advice agencies and local authorities; and if he will encourage offices to make the forms available to bona fide agencies and authorities.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Local social security offices are already authorised to issue representative samples of social fund claim forms and social fund application forms to advice agencies and local authorities. I am satisfied that the arrangement is operating effectively. This service has long been an important part of local liaison arrangements, and I do not consider that further encouragement is required at the present time.

To issue other than representative quantities of these forms to agencies would be counter productive as both the forms and the information contained within them are constantly under review.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list all the social security offices in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Glasgow which have so far underspent their social fund budget.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The 1988-89 social fund budget allocations for each of the Department's local offices, together with records of expenditure to the end of September 1988 are in the Library. Details of the national profile of anticipated expenditure were given in my predecessor's reply to the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 11 July 1988 at column 61.

Budgets are allocated to local offices on a yearly basis and whilst managers profile expenditure for loans and for grants on a monthly basis there is no commitment to spend a specific amount in any given month.

For details of offices in the Strathclyde and Glasgow areas I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 24 October 1988 at column 56.

By 30 September 1988 of the offices in the Strathclyde area Airdrie local office had spent its loans budget to the profiled level and in Glasgow expenditure at the offices at Provan and Springburn had reached the projected levels.

In the case of community care grants no office in these areas had achieved expenditure in line with the percentage profiled by 30 September 1988.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his reply of 24 October, Official Report, columns 61-62, how many vouchers as payment in full or in part for social fund loans made out to a named retailer have been issued by offices of his Department; what has been the total sum involved; how the named retailers are chosen; what consultation takes place with recipients before a decision is taken; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Local offices liaise with and are aware of those local retailers who are prepared to accept vouchers. The decision to issue a voucher to an applicant payable to a retailer is not made routinely. It is an option available to officers where there is good reason to believe that such a course will assist the applicant in the management of their personal finances. Where it is the intention to issue a voucher the reasons for this are discussed with the applicant, as is the choice of retailer.

I regret that the requested information on numbers of vouchers made out to named retailers either in full or in part payment for social fund loans by the offices of the Department could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will publish in the Official Report the social fund expenditure of each local office in the midlands region for loans and grants, respectively, and the same figures expressed as percentages of monthly profiles, for July, on the same basis as the information for Northern Ireland offices for April to June given in the answer of 13 July to the hon. Member for Redcar (Mrs. Mowlam), Official Report, columns 249-52.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 27 October 1988]: The information available is given in the table. The figures for July take account of corrections from computer errors in earlier months, and therefore may not be representative.

Vacancies (London)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what are the latest available figures for Her Majesty's Treasury in the London pay area of the number of vacancies by grade and the proportion this is of the grade complement in London;

(2) what are the latest available figures for the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency in the London pay area of the number of vacancies by grade and the proportion this is of the grade complement in London.

Mr. Brooke: The information is as follows:

Staff Vacancies in the London Pay Area

Grade level Equivalents	HM Treasury (inclusive of CCTA) No. of Vacancies Net[1]	HM Treasury (inclusive of CCTA) Net Vacancies as a percentage of Budgeted Complement	CCTA only No. of Vacancies Net[1]	CCTA only Net Vacancies as a percentage of Budgeted Complement

Senior Executive Officer	17	8	9	11
Higher Executive Officer	30	10	9	15
Administrative Officer	7	1	11	24
Administrative Assistant	44	12	6	32

[1] vacancies netted against surpluses within grade levels.

Family Incomes

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish figures setting out the net incomes, after payment of mortgage interest, of a married couple with two children in March 1988 and in October 1988, in each of the following circumstances (a) the father earns £200 and has a mortgage of £30,000, (b) the father earns £300 and has a mortgage of £45,000, (c) the father earns £500 and has a mortgage of £75,000, and (d) the father earns £500, the mother earns £200, and the mortgage is £100,000.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer, 27 October 1988]: The information requested is shown in the table.

Net weekly income after payment of mortgage interest of a married couple with two children

	March 1988	October 1988
(a) Father earns £200 Mortgage=£30,000	£119·04	£111·02
(b) Father earns £300 Mortgage=£45,000	£153·92	140·24
(c) Father earns £500 Mortgage=£75,000	£237·71	£216·23
(d) Father earns £500 Mother earns £200 Mortgage=£100,000	£318·39	£291·52

The examples in the table, in which the mortgage is approximately three times the annual income, are not typical. Outstanding mortgages of three times annual income and above represent about 5 per cent. of mortgagors and 2 per cent. of taxpayers.

Private Hospitals (VAT)

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the implications for the liability of new private hospital buildings to value added tax of the recent court ruling.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 24 October 1988]: The European Court of Justice ruled on 21 June that the United Kingdom could not continue to zero-rate the construction of industrial and commercial buildings; this includes private hospital buildings. As I announced in my statement to the House that day, there is no right of appeal against this judgment and the Government are obliged to comply with it. No legislative changes to give effect to the judgment will take effect before 1 April 1989 and building contracts signed prior to 21 June 1988 will continue to be zero-rated, whenever the work is completed. No detailed estimates of the likely additional tax charge on private hospitals are available.

Mortgage Interest Relief

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing his estimate of the number of cases in which higher rate relief will be given on mortgage interest payments in the current financial year together with (a) the gross amount of interest qualifying for relief, (b) the amount of higher rate relief, and (c) the number of recipients of working age and their distribution by personal tax category and by range of total income together with the average amount of relief given by the standard and higher rate of tax;

(2) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing by range of income and tax status an estimate of the saving to the Exchequer in a full year from abolishing, respectively, the upper earnings limit for national insurance contributions and higher rate relief on mortgage interest.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 29 July 1988, c. 732-34]: The removal of the upper earnings limit for employees' national insurance contributions is estimated to yield £1·45 billion in a full year at 1988-89 levels: I regret that the figure of £1·7 billion published in the Official Report was incorrect. Of the £1·45 billion, it is estimated that £0·2 billion would be from single persons, £0·65 billion from one-earner married couples and £0·6 billion from two-earner married couples. A more detailed breakdown of the yield is not available.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Automated Teller Machines

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has met representatives of the banks and financial institutions to discuss failures of automated teller machines; if he has any plans to shift the burden of proof from consumers towards the bank or building society concerned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: No. Questions of liability for the failure of automated teller machines and for the misuse of ATM cards are matters for the agreements under which consumers have access to those facilities. The European Commission is shortly to publish a recommendation on these matters and I shall be consulting the banks and building societies in due course. The review committee on banking services law may also address these questions, and it would be premature for me to comment until the Government have seen the committee's report, which is expected to be completed by the end of this year.

Israel

Mr. Ames: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what discussions he has had with the United States Administration about the application of United States laws to subsidiaries in the United Kingdom of United States corporations, in particular in relation to the countering of the Arab trade boycott of Israel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: None. But the Government recently made a formal protest to the United States Administration in response to a fine imposed on a United Kingdom subsidiary of a United States corporation of alleged violations of the anti-boycott provisions of the United States Export Administration Act. The Government reject the extraterritorial assertion of United States jurisdiction over companies in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ames: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what discussions he has had with the Government of the state of Israel concerning the effects of the Arab boycott on trade with Israel on trade between the United Kingdom and Israel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: At the June 1988 meeting of the United Kingdom-Israel Joint Commission, the Israeli delegation drew attention to the deleterious effects of the Arab boycott of Israel on bilateral trade. The United Kingdom delegation restated Her Majesty's Government's opposition to the boycott and explained the action they take to counter misapprehension about its effects, when approached by relevant bodies. The boycott has not figured in recent bilateral exchanges between Ministers.

Mr. Ames: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met the Israeli ambassador; what matters were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: I met the ambassador in June in company with the Israeli Minister for Energy and Infrastructure. We discussed bilateral trade relations and co-operation.

Mr. Ames: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last visited the state of Israel; what matters were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Neither I nor my departmental colleagues have visited Israel.

Mr. Ames: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what guidance his Department issues to companies in respect of the Arab boycott of trade with Israel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department issues written guidance on the Arab boycott of Israel to British companies on request; I am placing a copy in the Library of the House.

North East Shipbuilders Ltd.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make it his policy to include in his guidance to the British Shipbuilders disposals committee for the assessment of bids for North East Shipbuilders Limited closure costs arising from (a) redundancies in companies dependent on business with North East Shipbuilders Limited, (b) unemployment benefit and social security benefits paid to redundant (i) North East Shipbuilders Limited employees and (ii) employees of other companies dependent on North East Shipbuilders Limited, (c) the loss of taxation from (i) North East Shipbuilders Limited employees and (ii) employees of other companies dependent on North East Shipbuilders Limited, (d) the effect on local authority finances and (e) the cost of any measures taken by the Government to replace jobs lost by the closure of North East Shipbuilders Limited.

Mr. Newton: I have invited the chairman of British Shipbuilders to advise me on financial and commercial matters relevant to the assessment of bids for the British Shipbuilders facilities. Wider considerations are a matter for the Government.

European Space Agency

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the United Kingdom will increase its contribution to expenditure by the European Space Agency.

Mr. Forth: The United Kingdom's contribution to expenditure by the European Space Agency was £79·6 million in 1987-88 compared with the latest estimate of £87·3 million in the current financial year. We are reviewing our contributions to the agency's science programme, Horizon 2000.

SCOTLAND

Joint Police and Fire Services

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he is yet able to announce conclusions reached on recommendations made by the Montgomery report to base the contribution towards the costs of financing joint police and fire services on actual costs incurred, rather than the existing system of standard penny rate product.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No. The existing system is based not on a standard penny rate product but on population. I am still awaiting a response to the invitation which my right hon. Friend, the then Secretary of State for Scotland, issued to the Northern joint police committee and the Highlands and Islands joint fire board in 1985 to provide further information so that informed decisions could be taken on this matter.

Haddington Sheriff Court

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will establish an inquiry into the percentage of criminal cases reported by the police which are brought to trial and the average period between pleading diet and trial at Haddington sheriff court; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Steps have already been taken to provide an additional courtroom at Haddington sheriff court and it is anticipated that after this new facility comes into operation at the beginning of January 1989 the average period between pleading diet and trial will be progressively reduced.

Criminal Cases (Statistics)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will produce a table showing (a) the percentage of criminal cases reported by the police which are brought to court and (b) the average period between pleading diet and trial for each sheriff court in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Figures relating to the number of cases reported by the police resulting in proceedings in the sheriff court are not centrally held. The figures in the table, supplied by Crown Office, show the percentage of cases reported by the police and other agencies in respect of which proceedings were taken in each fiscal area for the period April 1987 to April 1988. They do not include cases which were diverted from the court system and dealt with by other means than prosecution such as conditional offers of a fixed penalty in terms of the Transport Act 1982 or section 56 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1987, warning letters and other alternative methods of diversion from prosecution.

Information on the maximum period between pleading diet and trial for summary criminal cases is also given in the table for each sheriff court. Statistics on average periods are not held centrally.

Property Modernisation (Glasgow)

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many dwellings were modernised by Glasgow district council; and what was the average cost per dwelling to the council of modernisation in each year since 1978-79.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested for 1979-80 onwards is set out in the table. Details for 1978-79 are not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Housing Statistics

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the number of police sector houses (a) within the area covered by Glasgow district council and (b) for Scotland as a whole which suffer from dampness and require extensive remedial work.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Returns submitted by local authorities indicate that at 31 March 1987, a total of 38,131 local authority dwellings in Scotland required some form of treatment for dampness. Of this total, 16,700 dwellings are located in the area covered by Glasgow district council.

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many elderly people are living in the private rented sector in Scotland; and how many of these are living in properties which fall below the tolerable standard.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The latest available information is from the 1981 census which indicates that approximately 57,800 people of pensionable age were living in private rented furnished and unfurnished accommodation. It is not possible to identify from the returns how many of the dwellings in which they lived were below the tolerable standard.

Rents

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the level of average unrebated rent in Scotland in 1987-88 prices for each year between 1967-68 and the latest date available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not available. The data on rent levels collected by the Scottish Development Department are limited to rents in the public sector and to those rents in the private sector which have been registered. The lack of information on unregistered rents in the private sector would make it difficult to assess accurately the average rent in Scotland. Furthermore, changes in such an average over time, particularly over periods of more than several years, would not only reflect changes in the level of rents, but would reflect changes in the pattern of housing tenure.

Rates

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the level of average domestic rates in Scotland in 1987-88 prices for each year between 1967-68 and the latest date available.

Mr. Lang: The figures requested for 1975-76 to 1988-89 are shown in the table. Figures for earlier years could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Health Boards (Cleaning and Catering Contracts)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has concerning the means by which health boards will maintain cleaning and catering contracts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Contracts contain various provisions for the supervision of contractors' performance. These arrangements have been drawn up by boards to reflect their individual requirements and to enable them to ensure that adequate levels of service are maintained.

Pupils (Special Education)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total number of Scottish school pupils at the latest available date who are registered in schools providing special education; and if he will express this as a percentage of total school rolls.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In September 1987 there were 10,700 pupils in education authority, grant-aided and independent special schools in Scotland; this is 1·3 per cent. of all school pupils. Of the 10,700 pupils 9,020 were in education authority schools, 180 in grant-aided schools and 1,510 in independent schools.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total number of Scottish school pupils at the latest available date who are registered in schools providing special education by (a) region, (b) division and (c) main area of impairment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information as at September 1987 on pupils in local authority special schools in Scotland is set out in the table.

An impairment is considered significant where it is a major factor in determining the educational approach to the pupil. Thus a pupil may have no, one or several such impairments.

Barley

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimates he has of the reduction in quality malting barley production which will result from set-aside schemes; whether he expects that set-aside schemes will reduce the amount of barley available to the malting industry from Scottish sources; and what effect set-aside will have on barley imports.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Until applications from farmers wishing to join the set-aside scheme from 1988-89 have been processed and data on applicants' 1988 cropping patterns and future cropping proposals have been analysed, it will not be possible to estimate the extent of any reduction in future levels of malting barley production in Scotland, or of any consequential impact on malting barley supplies or imports. Any reduction would, however, be minimal, since the total area so far proposed for withdrawal from production (which also includes land previously used for oilseed rape and cereals other than barley) is equivalent to less than 4 per cent. of the area used for barley production in Scotland in 1988.

Set-aside Schemes

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state the number of hectares and the number of farms involved in set-aside schemes stating the number of farms for which 100 per cent. set-aside has been requested.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Provisional returns indicate that over 400 farmers in Scotland have applied to enter the set-aside scheme in 1988-89 and that the total area of eligible land proposed for set-aside is about 14,800 hectares.

About 140 applicants have proposed to set aside all the eligible land on their holdings: in total some 5,000 hectares representing an average of about 44 per cent. of the total area of their holdings; the average set-aside area per applicant is about 36 hectares.

Stepps—Haggs (M80)

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has yet determined the line of the M80 motorway between Stepps and Haggs; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Following a draft feasibility report by consulting engineers in April 1987 further investigative work was commissioned, including ground and aerial surveys and an update of the traffic study. A report of the findings is due in summer 1989 and it is anticipated that a decision on a preferred route will be made shortly thereafter.

Industrial Rates

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what response he proposes to make to the briefing paper from the Chemical Industries Association and the United Kingdom Petroleum Industry Association entitled "Scottish Industrial Rates, The Need for Change", a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Lang: I am grateful to the Chemical Industries Association and the United Kingdom Petroleum Industry Association for the work they have put into the briefing paper. It is our clear objective to see harmonisation between the Scottish and English valuation systems and I will consider the recommendations in the paper with this in mind. I look forward to discussing the paper with representatives of the associations in due course.

Sewage

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if his Department has made any financial contribution or is currently contributing to research that would determine the fate of viruses discharged to the sea in sewage.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Not directly; in addition to its own research programmes the Scottish Office participates with other Government Departments in appropriate programmes of United Kingdom research. In particular the Scottish Development Department is involved in the Department of the Environment's research programme on water, promoted on behalf of all environment departments. New studies on the health effects of sea bathing are being considered for this programme in 1989-90 and may touch on the specific issue raised.

Cash Limits

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he proposes to make any further changes to the cash limits within his responsibility for 1988-89.

Mr. Rifkind: Yes. I intend to make changes to five of the cash limits within my responsibility. As already announced on 21 July 1988—Official Report columns 725-28—the cash limits for Class XVI, Vote 14 (Prisons, hospitals and community health services, etc, Scotland) and Class XVI, Vote 15 (Education, Arts, Libraries and Social Work, Scotland) were increased by £7,253,000 and £73,000 respectively to reflect the carry forward of capital underspends in 1987-88 allowed under the end-year flexibility scheme.

Subject to parliamentary approval the necessary Supplementary Estimate for the following increase will also be made. There will be a further increase of £12,700,000 in the cash limit for Class XVI, Vote 14 (Prisons, hospitals and community health services, etc, Scotland) from £1,877,006,000 to £1,889,706,000 for the nurses' and midwives' pay.

The cash limit for Class XVI, Vote 10 (Privatisation of the Electricity Supply Industry, Scotland) will be increased by £3 million to £4 million. This reflects a higher than expected level of fees and the involvement of additional advisers, in preparation for the privatisation of the North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board and the South of Scotland Electricity Board. The increase will be partly met from a reduction in the cash limit for Class XVI, Vote 3 (Regional and general industrial support, Scotland) of £2,000,000 from £136,954,000 to £134,954,000.

The cash limit for Class XVI, Vote 6 (Roads, transport and environmental services) will be increased by £380,000 from £170,897,000 to £171,277,000 to take account of grant in aid to the Housing Corporation. This increase, together with an increase on the non-cash-limited Class XVI, Vote 8 (Housing) will be partly offset by a net reduction of £1,803,000 on the non-voted cash limit SO/LA2, which covers mainly housing capital expenditure by public sector agencies in Scotland. The cash limit will therefore be reduced from £525,553,000 to £523,750,000.

These changes will be met from the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Training

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has happened to the Keep Britain Tidy Group national community programme agency under employment training.

Mr. Nicholls: On 20 May 1988 the chief executive of the Keep Britain Tidy Group informed the Training Commission that the company's board of directors had taken the decision not to participate in employment training.

In order to assist with the orderly wind down of their community programme activities it was agreed that their CP contract which was due to end on 4 September 1988, could be extended until 28 October 1988.

The company made every effort to transfer both its CP projects and participants to other providers who were moving forward into employment training.

Ethnic Monitoring

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he has taken to encourage the adoption of the recommendations of the Commission for Racial Equality and Equal Opportunities Commission's codes of practice including those relating to monitoring and positive action, in 1987 and so far in 1988, respectively.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State takes every opportunity to commend the codes of practice issued by the Commission for Racial Equality and Equal Opportunities Commission and to encourage adoption of their recommendations. My Department's race relations employment advisory service continues to give specific advice and encouragement to employers on the adoption of the recommendations of the Commission for Racial Equality's code of practice including those relating to monitoring and positive action. Advisers also give general advice on the recommendations of the Equal Opportunities Commission's code of practice when asked to do so.

The service is currently giving particular emphasis to the positive action provisions within the Race Relations Act and is encouraging their greater use whenever appropriate. In the year ended 31 March 1988 advisers made 1,082 visits to employers. In the period from 1 April-30 September 1988, 529 visits have been made.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether his Department's race relations advisory service reviewed the results of the ethnic monitoring exercises introduced by the 79 major private sector employers visited by it between April 1985 and December 1987.

Mr. Nicholls: My Department's race relations employment advisory service is essentially an advisory service and has no regulatory function. It would therefore be inappropriate for the service to undertake a review of this nature. However the research project to investigate the benefits that accrue from the introduction of ethnic monitoring systems by employers which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State mentioned in a previous reply to the hon. and learned Member on Thursday 31 March at column 526, will begin on 1 January 1989.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what he estimates are the resource implications involved in seeking detailed information on the full extent of race and sex monitoring in the work place.

Mr. Nicholls: A comprehensive exercise to seek and evaluate the full extent of race and sex monitoring in the work place would be prohibitively costly.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what he estimates to be the likely burdens on employers involved in any inquiry to seek detailed information on the full extent of race and sex monitoring in the work place, in the case of employers who already carry out monitoring in accordance with the codes of the Commission for Racial Equality and of the Equal Opportunities Commission, respectively; and what he estimates to be the likely additional burdens on employers who do not already carry out the recommendations in those codes.

Mr. Nicholls: Given the variations in size of organisations and their differing approaches to monitoring data, it is not possible to provide such estimates.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether his Department's race relations advisory service is planning any further visits to private sector employers which will include inquiries into the introduction of ethnic monitoring.

Mr. Nicholls: It continues to be normal practice for my Department's race relations employment advisory service to discuss the subject of ethnic monitoring in all their contacts with employers in either the public or the private sector.

Water Companies

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many visits were made by health and safety executives to (a) water authority and (b) statutory water company premises during the last 12 months; how many notices were issued as a result; how many prosecutions were made under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974; and for what reasons.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive's records do not distinguish between water authority and statutory water company premises.

Between 1 April 1987 and 31 March 1988 inspectors from the Health and Safety Executive's factory and agricultural inspectorates made 498 visits to activities in the water supply industry. Information about other Health and Safety Executive visits cannot be obtained without incurring disproportionate costs.

During this period one improvement notice was issued and two prosecutions taken. A contractor was prosecuted for the unsafe removal of asbestos at a water supply premises and a water authority was prosecuted for failing to prevent access to disused plant containing water.

Training Schemes

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employment training schemes are operated in conjunction with the Ministry of Defence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not held by the Training Agency and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will investigate the speed of delivery of employment training literature from his Moorfoot, Sheffield office, particularly to provincial training centres including Salisbury.

Mr. Nicholls: The normal delivery time for bulk supplies of leaflets (which are held centrally by distribution companies) is three to five days depending on the weight and size of the consignment. Individual or small quantities of leaflets are normally sent by first class post. Urgent requests can be delivered within 24 hours if there is stock of the material available.

Deliveries to individual training managers and training agents are normally made by the local training agency area office and not directly from the Moorfoot office in Sheffield.

The area office covering the Salisbury area is located at Gloucester, and most literature would come from there or the out-station at Swindon.

Health and Safety

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the cost to the Health and Safety Commission under paragraph (e) of the agreement between them and the Department of Energy in respect of the exercise of the Commission's functions under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 for each year since the agreement came into operation.

Mr. Nicholls: The sums paid each year by the Health and Safety Commission to the Department of Energy under paragraph (e) of the agreement are as follows:

	£(000)
[1]1977-78	111
1978-79	214
1979-80	282
1980-81	421
1981-82	503
1982-83	461
1983-84	466
1984-85	505
1985-86	557
1986-87	606
1987-88	553

[1] September 1977 to 31 March 1978.

In addition—following extension of the Department's responsibilities under the agreement to include advising on policy, particularly the development of regulations, approved codes and other material under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act—a PES transfer of £0·1 million was made from the Commission to the Department in 1981.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the parliamentary constituencies on which the number of people out of work and claiming benefit declined by (a) less than 10 per cent. and (b) between 10 and 20 per cent. between August 1984 and August 1988, including in the data for each constituency the total for (i) August 1984, (ii) August 1988 and (iii) the percentage reduction.

Mr. Nicholls: The following information is in the Library. Table A shows the parliamentary constituencies in Great Britain where the number of unemployed claimants has fallen by less than 10 per cent. between August 1984 and August 1988 together with the number of unemployed in each constituency at the requested dates. Table B gives the corresponding figures for the constituencies where unemployment has fallen between 10 and 20 per cent. The figures are affected by the change in compilation of the count in March 1986 to reduce over-recording.

Opencast Mining (Health)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether, since the west Glamorgan medical survey linking opencast mining to high levels of serious illness, he has come across any similar evidence for the County Durham area; what action he intends to take to protect public health; and whether he will consider conducting such a survey in the Durham area.

Mr. Nicholls: I am not aware of any authoritative medical survey linking opencast mining to illness. There is no evidence to suggest that a study in Durham would be worthwhile or likely to find any such connection.

Business Burdens

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what further proposals he has to ease burdens on business referring to his departmental responsibilities.

Mr. Nicholls: As soon as parliamentary time permits, we intend to implement the proposal put forward for public consultation earlier this year. This would give chairmen of industrial tribunals the power, either on their own initiative or at the request of one of the parties, to make an order for a deposit of up to £150 as a condition of proceeding to a full hearing before the tribunal where the case appears to have no reasonable prospect of success, or where it seems to be frivolous, vexatious or otherwise unreasonable. We also intend to take steps to enable tribunal awards of compensation to carry interest.

In addition, we intend to implement proposals to extend from six months to two years the qualifying period of employment after which employees become entitled to a written statement of the reasons for their dismissal; to exempt firms with fewer than 20 employees from the requirement to provide an additional note on disciplinary and grievance procedures with the written statement of the main terms and conditions of employment; and to limit the range of industrial relations duties for which trade union officials have a statutory entitlement to paid time off to the scope of union recognition by the employer.

Redundancy and Insolvency Payments

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans the Government have relating to redundancy and insolvency payments.

Mr. Nicholls: As soon as parliamentary time permits it is proposed to abolish the rebate payable on statutory redundancy payments made by employers with less than 10 employees. It is also proposed to facilitate the direct payment by the Department of certain debts to employees whose employers have become insolvent and to clarify the Department's debt recovery rights in such cases.

Cash Limits

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether any changes will be made to Department's cash limits or running costs limits for 1988-89.

Mr. Fowler: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary winter Supplementary Estimates, the following changes will be made. There is a token £1,000 increase in the employment programmes cash limit (Class VII, Vote 1) where a reduction of £19,000,000 on community programme has been transferred to Vote 7 for employment training, and provision of £600,000 for local enterprise agency project schemes is offset by a reduction in small firms loan guarantee scheme expenditure.

The cash limit on Class VII, Vote 2 remains unchanged at £265,170,000.

The cash limit on Class VII, Vote 5 (Training Commission) will be reduced by £2,558,000 from £1,938,737,000 to £1,936,179,000. This is the net effect of the following: a token increase of £1,000 to effect the transfer of funds from the Training Commission to the Department of Employment so that it may carry out the training functions formerly carried out by the Training Commission; a reduction of £2 million due to revised costings on employment training, and a reduction of £559,000 for capital expenditure under the end-year flexibility scheme which has been transferred to a new Vote 7.

There is also a token £1,000 increase in the cash limit on Class VII, Vote 6, sale of professional and executive recruitment, to enable the final costs of the sale to be reflected.

There is a new net £559,000 cash limit on Class VII, Vote 7. This is in respect of the transfer of the previously announced and agreed additional capital expenditure under the end year flexibility scheme from Class VII, Vote 5. The net cash limit takes account of the training functions (and its related expenditure) transferred from Vote 5.

There are also token increases of £1,000 on Class XVI, Vote 4, Industry Department for Scotland and Class XVII, Vote 4, Welsh Office to enable payments to be made to the Department of Employment for training programmes instead of to the Training Commission.

The Class VII, Vote 2: Department of Employment's administration running costs limit has been reduced by £4,454,000 from £611,296,000 to £606,842,000. This is the net outcome of the following changes: final adjustments between the Department and the Training Commission in respect of the transfer of employment services in October 1987; transfer of some functions from the Training Commission; transfer of some staff to the Training Agency; and increased running costs from the delay in the anticipated date of sale of PER.

The Class VII, Vote 5: Training Commission's running costs limit has been reduced by £77,904,000 from £223,658,000 to £145,754,000 whilst the Class VII, Vote 7: Department of Employment—training programme's new running costs limit has been set at £74,265,000. These changes result from the transfer of training functions from Training Commission to the Department.

There is an overall reduction in the DE group's running costs limit of £8,093,000 from £944,525,000 to £936,432,000. This is the net effect of £8,480,000 surplus superannuation provision in respect of former Training Commission staff being surrendered to the Consolidated Fund (Class VII, Vote 7) and an increase of £387,000 for PER (Class VII, Vote 2).

DEFENCE

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what was the closest distance to ground zero experience by (a) scientific, (b) military, (c) non-scientific British civilian and (d) indigenous civilian personnel (i) wearing and (ii) not wearing protective clothing with and without film badges during British nuclear tests in the Pacific in the 1950s;

(2) what was the closest distance to ground zero experienced by (a) scientific, (b) military, (c) non-scientific British civilian and (d) indigenous civilian personnel (i) wearing and (ii) not wearing protective clothing, with and without personal dosimeters during British nuclear tests in the Pacific in the 1950s.

Mr. Sainsbury: The same type of personal film badge dosimeter was used throughout the test programme in the Pacific for all personnel to whom it was issued. Protective clothing was supplied and worn by personnel whose duties required or might have required them to enter areas in which loose radioactive material was or might be present. For the megaton tests at Christmas Island the closest distance any test personnel were located from the detonation point in the open was 28km. The numbers at this location amounted to only a handful of radar operators. Some, mostly scientists with some service personnel, were located in protective shelters at a closer distance of 24km. The vast majority of test personnel and all of the indigenous population for all tests were located at a distance of 43km or more. For the tests at Malden Island, all of which were megaton, test personnel were at a distance of 44km or more. Malden Island had no indigenous population. For the kiloton range of tests at Christmas Island, the closest distance at which test personnel were located was 13km or more. All these locations were such that fall out from the detonations could not have affected personnel situated there.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence at which British nuclear tests in the Pacific during the 1950s radiation levels were not monitored (a) before, (b) during or (c) after the test.

Mr. Sainsbury: The levels of ionising radiation to which personnel were exposed were monitored by issuing radiation monitoring devices—personal film badge dosimeters—to those who were liable to be exposed before, during and after every United Kingdom atmospheric nuclear test in the Pacific. Throughout the Pacific test series film badges were not issued to personnel whose duties were such that they were extremely unlikely to experience exposure to levels of radiation, other than naturally occurring background radiation. Some of those to whom film badges were issued also did not experience exposure to levels of radiation, other than naturally occurring background.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what type of weapon tests were undertaken on Christmas Island, between 25 March 1958 and 18 March 1959; what nuclear materials were involved; and at what height these explosions occurred;

(2) if he will release information on the megatonnage of nuclear test devices tested between 25 March 1958 and 18 March 1959;

(3) if he will release information on the megatonnage of all British nuclear devices tested in the 1950s and the 1960s;

(4) if he will release information on the type of nuclear test and height of explosion for all British nuclear tests in the Pacific in the 1950s and 1960s.

Mr. Sainsbury: The table describes the type of each test undertaken at or near Christmas Island and in Australia, the height at which the explosions took place and information concerning the yields. For security reasons, I am not able to provide detailed information on the nuclear materials involved in individual tests, but can say that the fissile materials used include plutonium 239 and uranium 235.

The table is reproduced by kind permission of the compiler, Mr. W. N. Saxby and of the Director of the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what action he has taken to investigate the links between differing sorts of nuclear tests, such as fission and fusion, and the incidence of cancer amongst nuclear test veterans;

(2) what action he has taken to investigate the links between differing nuclear test megatonnages and cancer incidence amongst nuclear test veterans;

(3) if he has investigated the incidence of cancer afflicting British nuclear test veterans, relative to the length of time spent in the test areas;

(4) if he will investigate the incidence of cancers afflicting British nuclear test veterans, relative to the length of service of such veterans in test areas; and if he will provide such information, together with details of the types of cancers involved, to the House.

Mr. Sainsbury: The NRPB report examined whether associations between mortality or cancer incidence rates and various categories of participation could be identified using statistical analyses. The results are described fully in their report. They did not distinguish between fission and fusion tests or investigate whether length of service or length of time spent in a test area was significant or relate the data to the yields of individual tests. In examining these associations, what they did discover was that the principal concentration of leukaemia (excluding chronic lymphatic) and multiple myeloma was amongst men not present for a major trial nor known to have been involved with the programme of minor trials at Maralinga.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the personnel who served during British nuclear tests were identified for the purposes of the National Radiological Protection Board report; and what action is being taken to bring this figure up to 100 per cent. accuracy.

Mr. Sainsbury: Table 5.5 of the NRPB report shows that the best estimate of the proportion of personnel identified as participants was 83 per cent. overall, with the missing participants mainly confined to the Army (84 per cent. coverage) and the RAF (69 per cent.). Consideration is being given by the NRPB to improving coverage in both these groups during the follow-up study.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the average length of service visits to nuclear test areas by military personnel during British nuclear tests in the Pacific.

Mr. Sainsbury: The records of the lengths of visits to nuclear test areas do not allow an accurate estimate to be made of the average. Service personnel posted to Christmas Island generally served there, or in the vicinity for about a year. Many service men, particularly RAF flying crews, paid only short visits depending on their duties.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the level of accuracy of detection and reporting of cancer incidence amongst British nuclear test veterans; and if he will take steps to improve and update this information.

Mr. Sainsbury: The methods by which the NRPB obtained data on mortality and incidence of cancer from the United Kingdom centralised record sources for the participants in the study are regarded as well established and reliable. The NRPB is continuing to receive data on those who have been identified as participants. I have no plans to seek improvements.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will release figures for cancer incidence amongst British nuclear test veterans, from 1983 to the last year for which figures are available;

(2) if he will make an annual report on cancer detection, incidence and cancer types involved, with regard to the continuing investigations of British nuclear test veterans' mortality and morbidity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: When the NRPB report was published, the NRPB recommended, and the Ministry of Defence agreed, that it would be appropriate to conduct a further follow-up study when data on mortality and cancer incidence among participants had been accumulated for a further 10 years from December 1983. The NRPB is continuing to receive data and will examine the position next year and from time to time thereafter, and will advise whether the major effort of a full-scale statistical exercise would be justified. I am not prepared to release the data until the NRPB has completed its validation and conducted its statistical analysis.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide the figures for the number of British military personnel present on Christmas Island in the years 1962 to 1967 inclusive, giving a total for each individual year.

Mr. Sainsbury: Apart from the small numbers of United Kingdom service personnel present during the United States Brigadoon series in 1962, shown as 344 in the NRPB report, only very small numbers of United Kingdom military personnel were present in subsequent years up to 1964 when the need for United Kingdom personnel to be present ceased.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give a scrap value for military vehicles and other metallic objects, presently dumped on Christmas Island.

Mr. Sainsbury: There is no significant value of scrap material arising from the United Kingdom test programme now present at Christmas Island.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide a figure for the number of British vehicles buried on Christmas Island; and what is their cumulative tonnage.

Mr. Sainsbury: I am not aware that any British vehicles were buried on Christmas Island.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the residual radiation levels detected at Maralinga for the years 1960, 1970 and 1980 or for the years nearest to these dates, whichever are available.

Mr. Sainsbury: The residual radiation levels at Maralinga for the years stated are:

	milliGrays per hour
1960	0·1
1970	0·03
1980	0·015
1988	0·01

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the level of competence and accuracy of devices used to detect radiation levels among British personnel serving in the Pacific during the 1950s; and how the effectiveness of such detection methods varied with regard to gamma, beta and alpha radiation particles.

Mr. Sainsbury: The personal film badge dosimeters used during the test programme to measure the levels of radiation to which personnel were exposed were virtually identical to those in use widely throughout the nuclear industry today. The results generally were given in terms of gamma exposure and in some cases of surface exposure with beta aggregated. The minimum recordable level generally varied from 0·2 to 0·5 mSv. Film badges were not used to record alpha particles. Numerous other radiation detectors were used to check radiation levels in order to exercise control of exposure to personnel in areas in which radioactive material might have been present. The competence and accuracy of these methods were fully in accord with contemporary standards.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on the number of sea birds on Christmas Island since British nuclear tests.

Mr. Sainsbury: I understand that the survey conducted by the New Zealand Department of Health national radiological laboratory, Christchurch in 1981 did not make any reference to the sea bird population. I must therefore assume that it was neither unexpectedly low nor high. I have no other information on the subject.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what level of monitoring took place to safeguard against the contamination of freshwater supplies on Christmas Island, what levels of radiation were detected and what level of contamination was considered safe during British nuclear tests in the Pacific.

Mr. Sainsbury: The fresh water drinking supplies which were monitored, were drawn from treated surface water and no radioactivity associated with the tests was detected.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions British nuclear test veterans were entered into the documentary evidence of radiation contamination for each individual twice or more than twice; and what effect this has on the accuracy of these records.

Mr. Sainsbury: The original documentary evidence of exposure records was thoroughly examined by the NRPB during the course of its recently published study. Out of a total of 1,804 individuals thought to have been exposed, the NRPB checked the original material for the 349 whose total recorded doses exceeded 10mSv. They found discrepancies of more than 0·5mSv in a total of 19 cases. The effect of correcting these errors was to reduce their collective dose by 5 per cent. These errors may have been as a result of multiple entries, transcription faults or other inadvertent mistakes.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the original purpose of the documentary evidence of radiation contamination for each individual; and whether individual nuclear test veterans will be permitted to have access to their own records within it.

Mr. Sainsbury: The requirement to record the radiation exposure of individuals arose from legislation, currently incorporated in the Ionising Radiation Regulations 1985, governing the use of radioactive materials and work involving ionising radiation. Individuals are entitled under suitable privacy arrangements to receive information on their dose records.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on compensation payments made to United States nuclear test veterans due to their medical conditions arising from contamination by radioactive materials during American nuclear tests in the 1950s.

Mr. Sainsbury: I am aware of the United States legislation—Radiation Exposed Veterans Compensation Act of 1988, which came into force on 1 May 1988—regarding compensation to veterans. I have no information as to payments made under this legislation.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on the current condition and contamination levels of Monte Bello and Emu.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have nothing to add to the answer given to the hon. Member on 26 July at column 232.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how film badges were used to monitor radiation levels; whether badges were coded to individual service personnel; what proportion of the film badges went missing, for whatever reason; and what quantity of film badges were issued to military personnel during British nuclear tests in the Pacific.

Mr. Sainsbury: Each personal film badge dosimeter issued to an individual was coded so that the exposure measured could be entered in his record. Although the proportion of badges which went missing was very small indeed, standard techniques for assessing exposure, such as using exposures measured for accompanying personnel, were applied to ensure that the record of exposure for all exposed individuals was as complete as possible. The precise total number of badges issued during the operation cannot be ascertained, but it is known that during the whole test series in the Pacific, at least 500 personnel were subject to their issue. Since many of these would have received two badges, the total issued was probably in excess of 1,000.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to what extent his Department is able to ascertain where any named individual was placed at the time of a particular detonation during the 1958 to 1959 Christmas Island tests; what is his policy on responding to correspondence from nuclear test veterans seeking assurances as to their exposure to residual radiation; and if he will make a statement on his Department's correspondence with Mr. A. Dickson on this matter.

Mr. Sainsbury: The test records of the locations of personnel at the time of each detonation do not extend to a comprehensive list of the names of all individuals at each location. It may be possible to establish where some individuals were located from these records, or by inference establish the location of members of particular groups where the record shows where that group was located. However, the locations were all recorded and their distance from "ground zone" is known.

Individuals are entitled to the information contained in their own personal radiation dose record if one exists. If no dose was recorded, their duties were unlikely to have exposed them to radiation other than natural background.

Mr. A. Dickson has conducted an exchange of correspondence with this Department. It has included information about his exposure to radiation, and his probable location during the tests which he witnessed.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the annual level of mortality among British military personnel serving in the Pacific in each year since 1958; and what were the causes of those mortalities.

Mr. Sainsbury: The mortality rates for all test participants were examined by the NRPB in its recent study. Since the report does not itemise annual levels since 1958 and the analysis of the reported causes was not done on a year-to-year basis, I cannot supply the information which the hon. Member seeks.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many post-mortems were carried out annually among British military personnel serving in the Pacific in each year since 1958.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information about the number of post-mortems carried out annually since 1958 is not available.

Porton Down

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what quantities of simulant and analogous CBW agent has been delivered to universities undertaking research on behalf of CDE Porton Down.

Mr. Sainsbury: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to give precise details on such matters. I can say however, that very small samples of such agents have on occasion been provided to nominated specialists at United Kingdom universities to meet the requirements of MOD-sponsored research.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what quantities of CS gas were manufactured at CDE Porton Down over the last 10 years.

Mr. Sainsbury: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to give exact details, but I can say that CS has been produced by the chemical defence establishment (CDE) Porton Down from time to time over the last 10 years.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what guidelines are adopted for the standards and practices applied to the transport of chemical weapon agents from the decontamination site to CDE Porton Down.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my answer of 18 July 1988 at column 503. In addition, the guidelines for the movement of these finds of old CW material are set out in MOD(PE) explosive regulations and similar service regulations.

Defence Secrets (Unauthorised Computer Access)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to protect defence secrets from unauthorised computer access; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A range of measures is taken to protect secret MOD information from unauthorised computer access, but for security reasons I am not prepared to disclose details.

Bureau West, Devizes

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for how long his Department's Bureau West at Devizes was left unattended overnight in respect of remote operation of VME; what were the implications for the operation of the system and security of information; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The VME computers at Bureau West are routinely left unattended overnight so that information can be processed outside normal working hours and in order to maximise the life and reliability of the systems. The appropriate security precautions are taken.

Defence Statistics Organisation

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on proposals to privatise his Department's defence statistics organisation.

Mr. Sainsbury: As part of the on-going commitment to expose MOD activities to competitive tendering wherever possible, a report was commissioned earlier this year to examine the potential for using the private sector in the work of the defence statistical organisation (DSO). It concluded that some segments of the DSO could in principle be suitable candidates. Subsequently a follow-up study has been examining the availability and capability of the private sector to discharge such work cost-effectively. No decisions have yet been reached.

Advertising Budget

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much is the advertising budget for the current campaign for the Territorial Army and the Volunteer Reserves.

Mr. Freeman: The cost of the campaign is expected to be some £10 million spread evenly over five years. This comprises direct mailing, television, newspaper and poster advertising.

Woolwich Arsenal

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he now expects to be able to define the boundaries of the riverside area at the Woolwich Arsenal west site which he proposes to release for redevelopment.

Mr. Freeman: The riverside area, including the grand store, New Laboratory square, riverside guardroom and mallets mortar, will be released for development whatever decision is taken regarding the future location of the directorate general of defence quality assurance. The precise boundaries have not yet been fully defined and I will write to the hon. Gentleman shortly with a map.

Woolwich (Houses)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) houses and (b) flats his Department owns in the Woolwich area; how many of these were unoccupied at the most recent convenient date; how many he plans to sell in the open market; and what is the estimated income expected from such sales.

Mr. Freeman: The Ministry of Defence owns 460 houses and 319 flats in the Woolwich area. As at 21 October 1988, a total of 115 properties were vacant and it is expected that 91 properties will be offered for sale on the open market over the next 18 months. It would not be appropriate to give an estimate of the expected income prior to tender action being taken.

Meteorological Office

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what military purposes his Department uses the services of the Meteorological Office; if he is considering any proposals to remove the Meteorological Office from the direct control or management of his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Accurate meteorological information is vital to the operation of all the armed services, and particularly for flying activity. The Meteorological Office meets these defence requirements by the production of specialised forecasts to cover particular locations and ranges of operation and, when necessary, by the provision of staff at local military units. As has already been announced, the Meteorological Office is under consideration for establishment as an executive agency as part of the "next steps" initiative. The precise nature of such an agency is still under investigation. It is however clear that meteorology is a discrete executive function which would benefit from a greater degree of local responsibility within a centrally set broad framework.

ENVIRONMENT

Water Authorities (Sale)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement in respect of his timetable for selling the water authorities.

Mr. Moynihan: Subject to the passage of the necessary legislation, my right hon. Friend intends that there should be simultaneous flotation of all 10 water authorities towards the end of 1989.

Water Authority Expenditure

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the capital spending plans of the 10 water authorities for the next five years.

Mr. Moynihan: The capital spending plans of the 10 water authorities in England and Wales were set out at table 10.30 of the White Paper "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1988-89 to 1990-91 Volume II" Cmn. 288-II, published in January 1988. It is not normal practice to publish plans for years beyond the end of the public expenditure survey period.

Housing Action Trust Areas

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the statement in the Minister for Housing and Planning's personal letter to tenants in housing action trust areas promising a rent freeze before improvements means that, in cases where houses are already improved, those rents will go up.

Mr. Trippier: Under clause 64 of the Housing Bill, a housing action trust will be required to prepare a statement setting out its proposals for its area and to consult the local authority and local residents about them. Until this has been done, and the trust reaches a view on what improvements are necessary, the timing of rent movements for individual properties cannot be forecast.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will explain his Department's definition of the term "approved social landlord", referred to in the Minister for Housing and Planning's personal letter to tenants in housing action trust areas.

Mr. Trippier: Clause 79 of the Housing Bill requires that landlords other than local housing authorities to whom housing action trust tenants transfer must be approved by the Housing Corporation. The corporation will require them to demonstrate stability, viability and a commitment to the long-term provision of rents accommodation. The corporation issued a consultation document on the criteria for approval in August and is now considering responses.

United Kingdom Nirex

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to what action United Kingdom Nirex proposes to take about the unauthorised disclosure to the Lincolnshire Anti-Nuclear Waste Campaign of a map entitled, "Nirex 1st. Option Class 2 Waste"; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have no information about an unauthorised disclosure of any material to the Lincolnshire Anti-Nuclear Waste Campaign. I understand that Nirex considers this to have been a hoax.

Rating Reform

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether community charge officers will trace individuals by asking for information concerning an individual's name and address from British Telecom.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend gave to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 24 October, Official Report, column 89.

Water Privatisation

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he now proposes to introduce legislation to privatise the water authorities.

Mr. Moynihan: Subject to the Gracious Speech, early in the coming Session.

Lead-free Petrol

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in view of new evidence of health risks to young children, he will now announce a date for the introduction of mandatory lead-free petrol.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government are firmly committed to the changeover to unleaded petrol. It would not, however, be practicable to make the new fuel mandatory because some current cars cannot use it.

Hospital Sites (Redevelopment)

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to revise his Department's policy on the redevelopment of redundant hospital sites in green belt areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: We have no plans to revise the guidelines for the reuse of redundant hospital sites in the green belt set out in DOE circular 12/87 and repeated in planning policy guidance note 2.

Radiation

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the collective radiation dose to people in the United Kingdom from (i) nuclear generation of electricity and (ii) generation of electricity by fossil fuels.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The National Radiological Protection Board reviews radiation doses to people in the United Kingdom. Its best estimate is that annual collective radiation doses to people in the United Kingdom from (i) nuclear generation of electricity and (ii) generation of electricity by fossil fuels are as follows:—

	Workers	Public
(i) Nuclear	100 man.SV	50 man.SV
(ii) Coal	95 man.SV	5 man.SV

Housing (Newham)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the criteria he applied to the total indicative cost limit for housing association schemes in the London borough of Newham for each of the years commencing 1 October 1987 and 1 October 1988, respectively, and the appropriate percentage of dwellings planned which will exceed the Housing Corporation maximum permitted limits.

Mr. Trippier: Total indicative costs (TICs) are guidelines, not cost limits, and housing association schemes may be approved with costs above the TIC figures provided they represent value for money. The TIC levels derive from professional judgments of representative costs of providing housing to published standards in each local authority area. The Housing Corporation has discretion to approve new build schemes up to 30 per cent., and rehabilitation schemes up to 40 per cent., above the relevant TIC. No schemes in the London borough of Newham with costs above these discretionary levels have been referred to the Department for approval since 1 October 1987.

Beaches

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his Department's plans to clean up beaches in England.

Mr. Moynihan: The Government's policy is that all significant coastal bathing waters should meet the standards laid down in the EEC bathing waters directive. We have identified almost 400 such waters in the United Kingdom covering all the main seaside resorts. Responsibility for cleaning up the 360 identified waters in England and Wales rests with water authorities. All those authorities with coastal bathing waters have in recent years developed capital programmes designed to achieve the directive's standards. Typically, schemes involve some resewering and the construction of long sea outfalls to replace existing unsatisfactory discharges. We are currently discussing with authorities the implications of bringing all their remaining waters up to EEC standards by 1995.

Council House Sales

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to monitor the performance of the London borough of Greenwich on right-to-buy sales and to reduce the current delays in providing valuations to intending purchasers.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend has recently reviewed the right-to-buy performance of all London boroughs. He considers that while there is room for improvement by Greenwich, the borough's performance does not warrant the imposition of formal monitoring; and that the measures included in the Housing Bill will be sufficient to reduce the current delays. My Department will continue to take up individual complaints with the council.

London Boroughs (Boundary Changes)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when any he expects to receive recommendations from the Local Government Boundary Commissioner on changes to London borough boundaries; and when such changes will be brought into force.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Subject to an overall requirement to complete reviews of London borough boundaries by 31 March 1992, it is for the Local Government Boundary Commission to set its own timetable. I understand that it expects to report on the first of these reviews in 1989-90. Proposals approved by the Secretary of State are normally implemented within the same or the following financial year.

Dogs

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what restrictions are applied to the presence of dogs in Greenwich park; and how these are enforced;

(2) how many complaints have been made about the extent of dogs' excrement in the grassed areas of Greenwich park in each of the past five years; and what action has been taken to reduce the problem.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The number of formal complaints about dog excrement in Greenwich park in each of the past five years is as follows:

Year	Number
1984	0
1985	1
1986	4
1987	5
1988	3 to date

The Royal and Other Parks and Gardens Regulations make it an offence to permit an animal to foul a pathway or mown lawn. Notices in all the royal parks, including Greenwich, exclude dogs from children's playgrounds and oblige any person in charge of a dog to keep it on a lead in the area of flowerbeds and fine grass. The regulations are enforced by the Royal Parks Constabulary who have cautioned 275 people for dog nuisance in Greenwich park over the past five years.

We recognise and share public concern about the unpleasantness and health risks and will, therefore, be considering more effective ways to tackle the problem. These include a new regulation requiring a person in charge of a dog to remove any excrement deposited on specific areas of a royal park, improved enforcement of the regulations, the provision of special waste bins and improved publicity to remind all those in charge of dogs of the regulations and of their responsibilities.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he proposes to take to reduce the nuisance and danger caused by stray dogs in urban areas.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Provisions, which came into force on 24 May, were included in the Local Government Act 1988 giving duly authorised officers of local authorities in England and Wales the same powers as the police to deal with stray dogs.

Genetically Engineered Micro-organisms

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions his Department has had with research departments in United Kingdom universities on the productions of genetically engineered micro-organisms and on their release into the environment; if he will identify those universities; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has had contacts with a variety of universities on such matters. The Department's research programme includes research contracts with the universities of Bristol, Kent, Newcastle, Liverpool, Oxford and York for work related to the release of genetically engineered organisms into the environment.

Unrebated Rent

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the level of average unrebated rent in 1987-88 prices for each year between 1967-68 and the latest date available.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe) to the hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) on 27 June, Official Report, at column 160.

Chelsea Football Ground

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive the report of the inspector and to announce his decision on the planning application for the Chelsea football ground at Stamford bridge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The report of the inspector is expected shortly. The decision will be issued as quickly as possible thereafter.

Water

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish the model appointment for water services plcs.

Mr. Moynihan: Early in the new Session of Parliament.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether there will be any reduction in local authority rents for council tenants participating in the compulsory water-metering trials.

Mr. Moynihan: No. However, in those trial areas where the local authority acts as the water undertaker's billing agent and collects water charges with rents, tenants will pay their measured water charges direct to the water undertaker.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of listed buildings owned by the water authorities in England and Wales and their locations.

Mr. Moynihan: I regret that this information is not held by the Department.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the advisers retained by his Department to date in preparation for the privatisation of the water industry and the reasons for which each is retained.

Mr. Moynihan: I give in the table below a list of the advisers the Department has appointed to advise on the privatisation of the water industry, together with their responsibilities.

Touche Ross & Co., Chartered Accountants
Clifford Chance, Solicitors
Rowe & Pitman Ltd., Stockbrokers
Deloitte, Haskins & Sells, Financial assessment advisers
Binnie & Partners, Consulting engineers
Professor Michael Beesley, Economic consultant
National Westminster Bank PLC, For advice on the receiving bank function

We have also appointed, jointly with the Water Authorities Association, Dewe Rogerson Ltd. as marketing advisers.

In addition to advisers, the Department has appointed, jointly with the appropriate water authority, the following firms to act as reporting accountants:—

Price Waterhouse (for North West, Yorkshire, Anglian, Severn, Trent and South West water authorities).

Coopers and Lybrand (for Thames, Northumbrian and Wessex water authorities).

Deloitte Haskins and Sells (for Southern water authority), whom my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales has appointed jointly with Welsh water authority, as reporting accountants for Welsh Water.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what response he has had from (a) the 10 water authorities and (b) the Water Authorities Association to his letter requesting them to take action with regard to the John Lawrence report on the incident at Lowermoor water treatment works of the South West water authority;

(2) whether he has any plans to commission an independent inquiry into the incident at Lowermoor treatment works of the South West water authority on 6 July.

Mr. Moynihan: A thorough and impartial inquiry into the causes and effects of the incident at the Lowermoor treatment works including health and safety aspects has already been carried out by Dr. John Lawrence, director and head of the ICI group environmental laboratory at Brixham and a non-executive member of the board of South West Water. We have no plans for a further inquiry. South West Water has accepted the findings in Dr. Lawrence's report and is now in the process of implementing the recommendations. In the light of the Camelford incident, my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, has asked water undertakers to carry out a thorough review of their management and operating procedures at water treatment works (particularly unmanned installations) and to report to him by the end of the year. Reports have so far been received from two water undertakers.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to commission a market valuation of the assets of the water industry prior to its proposed privatisation.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department is in discussion with representatives of the water authorities about how best to ensure that the prospectuses of the successor companies properly reflect the value of their land assets. No decision has been taken on the extent to which new valuations should be undertaken.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what form of national and regional negotiating machinery he intends to establish for water industry staff transferred to the shadow National Rivers Authority and those retained within the remaining structure.

Mr. Moynihan: Until the NRA and the water utilities are established on vesting day, existing water authority staff remain as employees of the water authorities, and will be covered by the authorities' existing negotiating machinery.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the advisers retained so far by each of the 10 water authorities in preparing for the privatisation of the water industry and the reasons for which they are retained.

Mr. Moynihan: The appointment of advisers for each water authority is a matter for that authority.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the advisers retained so far by the Water Authorities Association in preparing for the privatisation of the water industry and the reasons for which each is retained.

Mr. Moynihan: The appointment of advisers to the Water Authority Association is a matter for the association.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to merge the South West water authority and Wessex water authority; and if he will state the date of the merger.

Mr. Howard: I have made no such plans.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to write off the capital debts of (a) the 10 water authorities and (b) 28 statutory water companies prior to the proposed privatisation of the water industry.

Mr. Moynihan: No decisions have yet been taken on the capital structures of the companies which, subject to the necessary legislation, will succeed the 10 regional water authorities. The statutory water companies are already in the private sector. They are not indebted to the Exchequer and the question of the Government's writing off their debts does not arise.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has made any estimate of the risks to groundwater of (a) accidental spillages of solvents and petrochemicals and (b) motorway drainage soakaways.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department has not made any quantitive estimate of these risks to groundwater. We will however be examining these particular problems amongst others in the context of the Halcrow report on groundwater quality, which will be published shortly.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what urgent measures are being taken to reduce levels of the cancer-causing substance polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbon in London drinking water.

Mr. Moynihan: Investigatory work commissioned by the Department and published by the Water Research Centre (WRc) has shown that public drinking water supplies can very occasionally contain concentrations of polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons (PAH) above the standard of 0·2 microgram per litre set by the EC directive relating to the quality of water intended for human consumption (80/778/EEC). Medical experts advise that there is unlikely to be any significant health risk from drinking water which occasionally exceeds the standard. Nevertheless, in view of the WRc findings, the Department is writing to all water undertakers asking them to carry out surveys for PAH in drinking water beyond present monitoring requirements, and providing guidance on how to conduct the surveys. The information provided by these surveys should enable water undertakers to develop remedial programmes should these prove necessary.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what specific measures designed for the protection of the health and well-being of domestic consumers of drinking water he will introduce in his proposals for water privatisation regarding unacceptable levels of dieldrin, polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons and nitrates.

Mr. Moynihan: The proposed legislation to privatise water authorities will establish drinking water quality standards in regulations, incorporating the requirements of the EC drinking water directive and will cover dieldrin, polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons and nitrate. All water utilities will be required to adhere to the standards, and to fulfil programmes of improvement agreed with the Department wherever any are not met. Local authorities will retain their existing duties to check the quality of drinking water and will also have a duty to check that there is no general deterioration in quality. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will appoint technical assessors who will ensure that the water utilities are monitoring water quality properly and are complying with the standards.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the growth of water table levels under London, as reported on by the Construction Industry Association; and what proposals he has for remedial action.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department has been aware for some time that water levels in the deep aquifer beneath London are rising and has contributed to a study of the engineering implications by the Construction Industry Research and Information Association. The final report is not yet available though I understand that, on present trends, the study predicts that damage to some buildings and tunnels could be sustained in 20 to 40 years if no preventive action is taken. We shall consider the final report carefully with a view to deciding whether further research and monitoring is needed to ensure that appropriate and timely action can be taken to prevent such damage.

Mersey Basin

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to produce a review of work undertaken as part of the Mersey basin campaign, subsidised by his Department.

Mr. Moynihan: The 25-year, £4 billion campaign to clean up the whole of the Mersey basin is one of the Secretary of State for the Environment's most important initiatives. He supports it in a variety of ways, but does not subsidise it within the normal meaning of that word. He keeps the campaign under constant review and makes announcements about its progress from time to time. In August 1987, for instance, a review report was issued which highlighted the achievements of the campaign to date—with a total investment of £425 million over its first three years. I am sending the hon. Gentleman a copy of that report.

Planning Inquiry (Gunton)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the results of the planning inquiry held in March into development proposals at Gunton, Lowestoft, reference APP/T/3535/A/87/75702, to be made available.

Mr. Chope: The decision on this planning appeal was issued on 27 October. A copy of the letter has been sent to my hon. Friend.

Air Pollution (London)

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many times carbon monoxide levels in London's air have exceeded World Health Organisation guidelines in the last 12 months; what steps he is taking to ensure that guideline breaches will not increase in the next 12 months; and what actions are in process to ensure that London's air does not exceed World Health Organisation guidelines for carbon monoxide or nitrogen dioxide levels during the next four years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The air quality monitoring data for London are being analysed to answer the hon. Member's specific question. I will provide a substantive answer when this analysis is completed.

Local Government Staff (Political Activities)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has for each Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development country as to whether they place, by law or by contract, any restrictions on the political activities that may be undertaken by any local government staff; and if he will show, where appropriate, (i) the nature of the restrictions imposed, (ii) the level or grade of staff affected and (iii) the number of staff affected.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information has not been systematically collected, since the patterns of organisation and political traditions of local government differ so widely between countries.

Local Authorities

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he proposes in relation to a general economic development power for local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: I am at present considering further the precise form of the proposals and I shall make a statement in due course.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to publish a summary of responses received to his Department's consultation paper, "Local Authorities' Interests in Companies".

Mr. Ridley: I shall do so in due course.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish those responses to his Department's consultation paper, "Local Authorities' Interests in Companies", published on 13 June, which respondents indicated they would wish to be made available.

Mr. Ridley: I shall do so in due course.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing public expenditure on general subsidies to local authorities, new towns and housing associations between 1977-78 and 1990-91 in 1987-88 prices.

Mr. Trippier: The table shows certain subsidies on housing made by the Department between 1977-78 and 1990-91. These are all revenue subsidies towards housing provision (broadly equating to section A of the housing, England Vote). They have been described as "general subsidies" in the past, although this terminology is now no longer used.

Mill Hill School (Planning Permission)

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, under article 4 directions, he will call in for determination the application by Mill Hill school for planning permission to build a management training centre in the green belt area of Mill Hill village; and if he will take steps to ensure that no irrevocable decision will be taken by the borough of Barnet until he has considered all aspects of the wider green belt policy implications.

Mr. Chope: My Department has issued a direction to the London borough of Barnet directing it not to grant permission on the application without special authorisation by the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State will consider the matter further when he receives relevant documents requested from the council.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals against the decisions of local planning authorities were made to him in respect of land within green belts, conservation areas and agricultural areas in each of the years 1979 to 1988, inclusive; and how many of these he upheld in each of those years.

Mr. Chope: The information is not available in the form requested. The annual reports of the chief planning inspector identify numbers of appeals received and allowed by development type. Copies of the reports for the period 1981 to 1986-87 are in the Library.

Residuary Bodies

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to lay before Parliament the 1987-88 annual reports and accounts of the London and metropolitan residuary bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The 1987-88 annual reports and statements of accounts of the London and metropolitan residuary bodies were laid before Parliament today. A copy of the Secretary of State's direction under section 78(2) of the Local Government Act 1985 as to the content and structure of the accounts has been placed in the Library of the House.

All the residuary bodies' reports demonstrate the impressive progress which has been made in discharging the functions inherited from the Greater London council and the metropolitan county councils. Particularly valuable contributions have been made in the disposal of surplus property. Over £219 million in capital receipts were realised from sales of surplus property in 1987-88 alone.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the first residuary body will complete its work and be wound up; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Tyne and Wear residuary body was formally wound up today by an order made under section 67 of the Local Government Act 1985. The order transferred the remainder of the RB's property, functions, rights and liabilities to successor authorities, the city of Newcastle upon Tyne and the metropolitan districts of Gateshead, North Tyneside, South Tyneside and Sunderland, on 11 October 1988. Its final report is being laid before Parliament today.

The Tyne and Wear residuary body is the first of the seven residuary bodies to wind up. Much credit goes to the chairman, board members and staff for their work in winding up the affairs of the former Tyne and Wear metropolitan county council in such a relatively short period of time with the full co-operation of the district councils. The residuary body has achieved a great deal in a short time. During the two and a half years since abolition it has sold, or transferred to successor district authorities, some 10,000 former county council property interests, generated and distributed £10·3 million of capital receipts, with a further £2·8 million still to be received by successors from sales which have not yet reached completion. This is in addition to the distribution of some £11 million in revenue balances and £2·5 million of capital receipts previously held by the former county council.

The other five metropolitan residuary bodies and the London residuary body are all on target to complete their work well within the statutory time scales.

Cash Limits

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any changes to announce to his Departments cash limits for 1988-89.

Mr. Nicholas Ridley: Yes, I propose the following changes, subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates.

The cash limit for Class X, Vote 2 (Central environmental services, etc) will be increased by £5·571 million from £244·612 million to £250·183 million, primarily to enable an endowment to be made to the Zoological Society of London. This endowment has in part been financed by offsetting savings within the Vote.

The cash limit for Class X, Vote 5 (Department of the Environment: administration) will be increased by £5·9 million from £123·437 million to £129·337 million to cover additional administrative expenditure, in relation to the privatisation of the regional water authorities. The Department's running costs limit will be increased by £4·8 million from £155·062 million to £159·862 million.

The cash limit for Class X, Vote 9 (Sale of shares in the water services public limited companies, etc) will be increased by £2·7 million from £2·44 million to £5·14 million to cover increased costs of advisors.

The non-voted cash limit for urban aid (DOE/UAI) will be increased by £20 million from £526·496 million to £546·496 million to provide for an increase in the external finance limit of the London Docklands development corporation of £38 million. This increase has been met in part from within the present cash limit.

These increases, together with other increases in non-cash limited public expenditure (primarily in relation to housing subsidies paid to local authorities), have been offset by reductions, and will not therefore add to the total of planned public expenditure. The non-voted cash limit for the new towns (DOE/NTI) has been reduced by £100 million from minus £289·743 million to minus £389·743 million to take account of disposals of property which are higher than forecast. The cash limit for Class IX, Vote 2 (Miscellaneous housing administration and grants) has been reduced £1·709 million from £73·075 million to £71·366 million, primarily to take account of lower than expected expenditure by housing action trusts.

Water Authorities (Discharges)

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of consents given to each water authority by each water authority to permit otherwise unlawful discharges into the water courses for which they are responsible during 1987-88.

Mr. Moynihan: [holding answer 26 October 1988]: During the period 1 April 1987 to 31 March 1988, my Department has issued the following consents to water authorities in England under the Control of Pollution Act 1974: Anglian 374; Northumbrian 33; North West 78; Severn Trent 178; Southern 29; South West 31; Thames 15; Wessex 52; Yorkshire 63.

Most of the consents issued, other than to Anglian and South West, were for new or previously unconsented storm and emergency overflows. Those issued to Anglian and South West Water were mainly a backlog of applications from the review of consents agreed in 1985 for implementing the Control of Pollution Act 1974. A number of the consents issued for sewage treatment contained less stringent conditions based on current performance, but generally only where there was no appreciable effect on the receiving waters. In a few cases, relaxed consents conditions have been issued pending planned capital investment. These consents are subject to early review.

New Council Houses (London)

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the average build cost, excluding land of (a) two bedrooms and (b) three bedrooms council houses in Greater London for each of the past six years.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 26 October 1988]: The estimated average construction costs, excluding land, site works and ancillary buildings and fees, of four bed-space and five bed-space local authority houses in the Greater London area are as follows:

Average construction costs

Year	4 bed-space houses	5 bed-space houses
1983	24,700	25,600
1984	20,800	24,700
1985	25,300	34,100
1986	29,000	31,200
[1]1987	30,600	36,800
[1]1988	35,000	45,600

[1] Data for 1987 refers to the second half of that year while data for 1988 only includes schemes up to the present date.

The estimates are not directly comparable from year to year because of the variation in the average floor area per dwelling.

Water Pollution

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what percentage of total public expenditure has been spent on water pollution research for each year since 1978 in (a) Belgium, (b) Canada, (c) Denmark, (d) the Federal Republic of Germany, (e) France, (f) the Netherlands, (g) Norway, (h) Sweden and (i) the United Kingdom;

(2) what is the total amount of public funds spent on water pollution research, in 1988 funds, for each year since 1978 in (a) Belgium, (b) Canada, (c) Denmark, (d) the Federal Republic of Germany, (e) France, (f) the Netherlands, (g) Norway, (h) Sweden and (i) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 26 October 1988]: The information is not readily available.

Storm Damage

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's latest estimate of the cost of the trees that were damaged in the October 1987 hurricane; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 27 October 1988]: Such estimates have not been made.

Ozone Layer

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received a report, or will ask the United Kingdom ambassador in Washington to obtain details, on the international conference held in Washington DC on 12 October, concerning the greenhouse effect and prospective international solutions; and whether any departmental officials were invited to attend this conference.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 27 October 1988]: A report has been received from the British embassy in Washington concerning an international meeting held in Washington DC from the 10 to 12 October 1988. The meeting was arranged for non-governmental environmental groups to discuss the greenhouse effect. No invitation was received by Government officials.

Toxic Waste (Briton Ferry)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment under what regulations 2,000 tonnes of the toxic waste from Denmark were ordered to be shipped out of the port of Briton Ferry, West Glamorgan, on 23 September; when and in what way Her Majesty's pollution inspectorate was informed of the nature of the waste rejected at Briton Ferry; and on how many occasions since 1 September consignments of imported wastes, once having docked at ports in England and Wales have subsequently been rejected.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 28 October 1988]: I understand that the port of Briton Ferry is licensed under the Control of Pollution Act 1974 by Neath borough council as a transfer station. The waste referred to was considered by the council, on analysis, to be outside the terms of the licence. It ordered the removal of the waste, which is being sent to a facility licensed to deal with it. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution was kept informed.

I am not aware of any occasion since 1 September 1988 when a shipment of waste, having docked, has been rejected.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the nature of the powers which he proposes to allocate to the National Rivers Authority in relation to water purity, testing and monitoring.

Mr. Moynihan: The National Rivers Authority will have a duty to monitor and test the quality of all surface, underground, and coastal waters. It will also have powers to take samples of effluent or other matter discharged into these waters, in pursuance of its general regulatory responsibilities.

Sewage

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has made any financial contribution or is currently contributing to research that would determine the fate of viruses discharged to the sea in sewage.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department has let a contract to the Water Research Centre at a cost of £93,000 to determine the fate of rotavirus in sewage discharges. The contract is due for completion next year and we are considering what further research should be commissioned.

WALES

Health Authorities

1. Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new proposals he has to improve the work of Welsh area health authorities.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend is carrying out a thorough review of the NHS in Wales, the results of which will build on our achievement of record levels of activity.

Labour Statistics

10. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest unadjusted figures for unemployment in (a) Newport, (b) Gwent and (c) Wales; and if he will give the equivalent figures for 1979 on the most nearly comparable basis.

Mr. Peter Walker: On 8 September 1988 the number of unemployed claimants in Newport district, Gwent and Wales were 6,815, 20,394 and 125,825 respectively. Unadjusted figures for 1979 are not available on a basis that enables a valid comparison to be made.

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of people unemployed in (a) Wales, (b) Neath and (c) west Glamorgan in each of the quarters in 1988.

Mr. Peter Walker: On 10 March 1988 there were 141,403 unemployed claimants in Wales; 3,331 in Neath district; and 18,944 in west Glamorgan. On 9 June 1988 the respective figures were 127,116; 2,964 and 17,428; and on 8 September 1988, 125,825; 2,864; and 17,360. Figures for the last quarter of 1988 will be published on 19 January 1989.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of people living in (a) Dyfed, (b) Clwyd, (c) Powys, (d) Gwynedd, (e) mid Glamorgan, (f) south Glamorgan, (g) west Glamorgan and (h) Gwent who have never worked since leaving school; and how many people under the age of 18 years in this situation are in each area.

Mr. Wyn Roberts [holding answer 28 October 1988]: The following table shows, for each Welsh county the number of unemployed claimants who had not entered employment since leaving full-time education, along with those aged under 18 in this group on 8 September 1988. These figures include some temporary over-recording.

Unemployed school leavers, 8 September 1988

	Total	Aged under 18
Clwyd	1,165	221
Dyfed	1,144	191
Gwent	1,574	262
Gwynedd	842	175
Mid Glamorgan	1,895	414
Powys	227	42
South Glamorgan	1,674	258
West Glamorgan	1,528	190

Water Industry

13. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the future of the water industry in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Government's policy was set out in the White Paper of February 1986 and the policy paper on the National Rivers Authority published in December 1987. The Government have made clear their intentions to privatise the industry towards the end of 1989.

Asset Sales

17. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what have been the total assets realised in Wales in terms of (a) privatisation and (b) the sale of Government land and buildings since 1979; and by how much he expects this figure to increase in the next five years.

Mr. Peter Walker: Between April 1979 and April 1988 sales of land and buildings by the Welsh Office and its agencies, and by health authorities, realised £200 million. I expect sales over the next five years to yield at least a further £130 million. Figures for privatisation proceeds are not available.

West Wales (Employment)

21. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action is being taken by his Department to bring new employment to west Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: A full range of measures is being deployed, aimed at sustaining and increasing economic activity and jobs throughout Wales. Since 1986 regional aid has brought forward capital investment of some £60 million in Dyfed which is estimated to create or safeguard nearly 4,000 jobs. In addition there is the substantial support from the Welsh Development Agency and Mid Wales Development, and, as appropriate, through the urban programme. Over the past two years unemployment in the county has fallen by 4,500.

Lakes and Rivers

22. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what meetings he has had with voluntary organisations concerned with the use of lakes and rivers in Wales (a) in general and (b) in respect of fishing interests; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have had no such meetings since the Government's policy paper on the National Rivers Authority was published in December 1987.

Prices

23. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the level of house prices in each district in Wales during the first half of 1988; and what was the level in each of the last five years.

Mr. Grist: Information about house prices at district level is not held centrally.

Industrialists (Discussions)

24. Sir Anthony Meyer: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had during the summer adjournment with representatives of Welsh industry.

Mr. Peter Walker: During the adjournment I visited 12 companies and had 14 meetings with representatives of industry. In addition I met members of the CBI in Wales and opened the North Wales business club enterprise exhibition.

Northop and Mold Bypasses

25. Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on when he expects the Northop bypass to be completed and the Mold bypass to be started.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The contract completion date for the Northop bypass is late summer 1989. Work is currently ahead of programme and earlier completion may be achieved. Scheme preparation for the Mold bypass continues in accordance with the roads in Wales programme for start of works by the end of 1990.

Transport Links

26. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the need for improved road and rail transport links between Wales and England and with the continent in order to provide an adequate communications system for the economy of south Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: There are already good road links between south Wales and England. These will be enhanced by the second Severn crossing.

Rating Reform

27. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any proposals to introduce a system of identity cards in connection with the collection of the community charge.

Mr. Grist: No.

29. Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest estimate of the average poll tax per household in (a) the Rhondda and (b) Wales.

Mr. Grist: The community charge is a personal charge and not a charge on households.

CEGB

28. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Peter Walker: I am in regular touch with the chairman of the CEGB on matters which affect the Principality.

Water Standards

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many derogations from the European Economic Community directives for drinking water and bathing water have been granted to the Welsh water authority.

Mr. Grist: Derogations concerning mainly the iron and manganese parameters for 14 sources have been notified to the European Commission in respect of drinking water. In addition, derogations in respect of a further 17 sources serving small populations (which do not have to be notified to the Commission) have been approved by the Department. No derogations have been applied for in respect of bathing waters.

European Regional Development Fund Grants (Gwynedd)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much in the form of grants Gwynedd county council will receive under the eighth allocations of grants from the European regional development fund.

Mr. Peter Walker: None. Future funding from the European regional development fund for Gwynedd county council will be awarded through the recently approved national programme of community interest for Dyfed, Gwynedd and Powys.

Crossville Wales Motor Company

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the value of the Crossville Wales Motor Company when privatised in 1987.

Mr. Peter Walker: This information is confidential to the parties involved.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the value of the conditional offer for Crossville Wales by National Express; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: This is a matter for the two companies. I have no information.

A487 (Bypasses)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received during the past six months (a) from local authorities, (b) from individual councillors and (c) from members of the general public concerning the need for a bypass for the villages of Llanllyfni, Penygroes and Groeslon on the A487 trunk road in Gwynedd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: There have been representations from Gwynedd county and Arfon borough councils and approaches from three councillors. Following discussions with Gwynedd county council, the county surveyor has been asked to review and report on the trunk roads in the area, updating earlier work in the light of current highway standards.

Sewage Disposal

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if his Department has made any financial contribution, or is currently contributing, to research that would determine the fate of viruses discharged to the sea in sewage.

Mr. Grist: The Department is co-operating in the establishment of research work into the seawaters contaminated by sewage. The project should start soon and the Department will be making a financial contribution.

Bypasses

Sir Raymond Gower: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which new bypass schemes will be commenced during the next five years.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Government's plans for new bypass schemes in Wales are set out in "Roads in Wales 1985". The latest position on bypasses will be announced in the next edition of "Roads in Wales".

Young People (Rented Accommodation)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy concerning the provision of rented accommodation for young people living in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 28 October 1988]: I am concerned to ensure that there is an adequate supply of rented accommodation for young people in Wales. In addition to housing provided by local authorities I have asked the housing corporation to treat single people as a priority group. Deregulation provided for in the Housing Bill will increase the supply of accommodation in the traditional private rented sector and I am working with local authorities to improve the standards and safety of existing houses in multiple occupation. Vulnerable single young people are entitled under the Housing Act 1985 to help from their local authority to secure accommodation.

YTS

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people were on YTS in each of the constituencies of Wales at the most recent convenient date.

Mr. Wyn Roberts [holding answer 28 October 1988]: Figures for YTS trainees are not available on a constituency basis. The training agency in Wales provides statistics on an area office basis only which refer to the area in which training takes place, rather than that in which the trainee lives.

At the end of September 1988 the numbers in training in Wales were 25,791. In South and Mid Glamorgan 7,863, in Gwent 4,395, in West Glamorgan and Dyfed 6,928 and in Gwynedd, Clwyd and Powys 6,605.

Adult Education

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to ensure sufficient funding to maintain the facilities offered to mature students returning to education as adults at Coleg Harlech.

Mr. Wyn Roberts [holding answer 28 October 1988]: The warden was informed in February 1988 that the Welsh Office would be undertaking a review of Coleg Harlech's functions. A similar review is being carried out of the long term residential colleges in England. These reviews have not yet been completed, but I will discuss the matter with the hon. Gentleman before reaching any conciusions.

Physical Handicap

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received during the past six months on the case for an all-Wales strategy for physical handicap; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 28 October 1988]: I have received several representations in the past six months calling for an all-Wales strategy for physically handicapped people. One of these has been in the form of a discussion document submitted by the Wales Council for the Disabled and the Spastics Society in Wales which Welsh Office officials are currently considering.

Special Schools

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many special schools he has visited since becoming Secretary of State for Wales;

(2) if he will visit Ysgol Belmont special school, Buckley, to meet the headmaster, his staff, senior students and parents to discuss difficulties relating to the school's work experience scheme; if he will seek sponsors to fund the Belmont school work experience scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 27 October 1988]: Until a fortnight ago I had not received any invitations from education authorities to visit a special school. I have now received an invitation to visit Ysgol Belmont special school from a member of Clwyd county council, which I am considering. It is for the local education authority and the school to consider future plans should the North-East Wales Institute decide not to accommodate the current work experience project within the new employment training scheme.

TRANSPORT

Light Rail/Train Systems

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information his Department has as to the location of proposed (a) light rail/train systems and (b) trolleybus systems in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Portillo: We have received information from the promoters of the following:

(a) Light rail/metro systems in:
- London Docklands and Croydon
- Greater Manchester
- South Yorkshire (Sheffield)
- West Midlands
- West Yorkshire (Leeds)
- Avon
- Southampton
- Tyne and Wear (Metro extension)

(b) Trolleybus systems in:
- West Yorkshire
- South Yorkshire

Buses (Deregulation)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the effect of the deregulation of local bus services in England and Wales on (a) the number of buses in service since October 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Information is not available on the number of routes or the overall number of buses of all types used on local services. It is, however, known that the number of bus miles operated on local services in England and Wales was 917·6 million in 1985-86 and 1,070·6 million by May 1988—an increase of 16·5 per cent. Research by the Polytechnic of Central London has also shown that over the country as a whole the number of minibuses on local services has increased from 400 operating in 40 places before deregulation to 5,600 in over 400 places.

New Carriageways

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department's preparations of traffic flow predictions on new carriageways include an estimate for extra traffic generated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes, where appropriate.

The Department's appraisals of inter-urban road improvements do not normally include an allowance for any traffic generated by the improvement itself. They do allow for the reassignment, or diversion, of traffic from unimproved roads to the improved one, for traffic growth, and for the effect on traffic of known or expected local developments. Experience suggests that traffic generation from any one inter-urban improvement is likely to be small.

In urban areas where the demand for road space exceeds the supply for much of the time, or where travel conditions are especially difficult, as with crossing major estuaries, then road improvements can be expected to generate traffic, and current appraisal techniques can allow for such generation.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the average extra traffic generated by a new carriageway, if he has any plans for changing the method of preparing traffic flow predictions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Where road improvements generate traffic, the extent of the generation differs significantly with the circumstances. No average can be given.

The Department monitors the effects of improvements on traffic, and is sponsoring research into the best way of modelling traffic in congested urban areas, with a view to improving its methods where that can be justified.

City Traffic

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will review methods of restructuring traffic within Britain's major cities; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what measures he proposes to take to improve traffic movement within the central areas of cities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Local highway authorities have wide-ranging powers to introduce appropriate traffic management measures in city centres. Computer technology is increasingly available for advanced traffic control systems. These can help to reduce congestion, as can the careful use of parking controls.

London (On-street Parking)

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to seek to reduce on-street parking in the central area of London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: London boroughs are encouraged to develop coherent policies on parking, waiting and loading which have regard to the needs of the area and which limit parking provision on the strategic road network. It is up to the boroughs, as local highway authorities, to decide on the extent of on-street parking provision.

Investment Tests

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he takes to ensure that the investment tests applied to road and rail projects are clear and consistent; whether cost-benefit analysis is applied to both types of projects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Value for money is the main criterion in the assessment of road and rail investment projects. Improvements in both road and rail are appraised in terms of what people would be willing to pay, but with rail projects the fare box provides the means for realising these user benefits.

User benefits from road schemes are assessed by applying COBA or other similar cost-benefit techniques of evaluation. External effects such as the benefits of a rail project on road congestion can be taken into account when there is evidence that these are significant.

Airports

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list, for each year since 1976, all the airports in the United Kingdom which have received funds from central Government in order to improve their road and rail links, with an indication of the money allocated to each of them in 1988 prices.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No airport has received Government funds for this purpose.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many fully operational airports serve at present the routes to Europe.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Scheduled air services to one or more points in Europe were operated from 30 United Kingdom airports during the 1988 summer season.

Light Dues

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much money has been collected by way of light dues in each of the past three years, specifying the amounts paid by the different types of vessels.

Mr. Portillo: Light dues receipts to the general lighthouse fund in respect of the last three financial years were as follows:

1985-86	42,496,896
1986-87	48,804,040
1987-88	55,109,657

An analysis by different types of vessel is available only for 1985-86 and is as follows:

Tankers (Oil)	13,308,897
Tankers (Other)	1,585,544
General Cargo	8,449,257
Bulk Carriers	4,733,613
Container Ships	10,529,134
Passenger (inc. cruise)	549,922
Ferries	461,715
Towed	12,052
Pleasure (over 20 NRT)	2,421
Yachts (over 20 NRT)	12,153
Tugs	9,299
Other	2,842,889

Buses

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what organisations representing passengers are regularly consulted by him on matters of bus transport (a) in general and (b) particularly about the quality of services and fare prices after deregulation.

Mr. Portillo: We have consulted the following bodies representing passenger interests from time to time about specific proposals affecting the bus industry:

National Association of Public Transport Users
National Federation of Bus Users
Transport 2000
London Regional Passengers Committee
Buswatch

Quality of services and fares were not a major subject of these consultations since they are essentially a matter for the operators.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates he has available as to changes in the level of use of buses since deregulation in (a) Engand, (b) Scotland and (c) Wales.

Mr. Portillo: Between 1985-86 and 1986-87 long established downward trend in bus usage continued with the number of passengers carried on local bus services falling by 8 per cent. in England, 4 per cent. in Scotland and 9 per cent. in Wales.

Bedford Bypass

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to commence work on the bypass to the town of Bedford; and what is the reason for continued delays in outlining a route.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The preferred route was announced on 10 March 1987. Since then the Department has been looking very carefully at suggested alternatives. We plan to make our views known shortly.

Draft orders will be published early next year.

If all the statutory procedures are completed satisfactorily and funds are available, construction could start towards the end of 1990.

Clapham and Milton Ernest Bypass

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes to commence the bypass of the villages of Clapham and Milton Ernest, Bedfordshire, both on the A6; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Construction of the Clapham bypass is scheduled to start in the spring of 1991, subject to the satisfactory outcome of statutory procedures and the availability of funds. We have no plan for a bypass of Milton Ernest.

Cruise Ships

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if any steps are taken by his Department to discourage the use of cruise ships which were built many years previously.

Mr. Portillo: None. However, all United Kingdom ships are subject to the same inspection procedures.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many cruise ships are registered under United Kingdom regulations; and if he will give a breakdown of the use of such ships.

Mr. Portillo: There are eight cruise ships on the United Kingdom register. The use of these ships is a matter for their owners and operators.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what facilities exist for cruise ships to be inspected at regular intervals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: All cruise ships registered in countries which have ratified the international safety conventions must undergo a thorough survey of their hull, machinery and equipment each year. In additional all cruise ships are subject to random inspection under port state control procedures. Foreign cruise ships operating from the United Kingdom undergo an inspection to determine passenger capacity if no reciprocal agreement exists with the flag state.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the most recent findings of the International Maritime Organisation on the safety of older cruise ships.

Mr. Portillo: The International Maritime Organisation considers reports of casualties to ships, but I am not aware of any recent findings by the organisation on the safety of older cruise ships.

Buswatch

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what response he proposes to make to the report of the consumer group Buswatch, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Portillo: The findings recorded in the Buswatch report are based on incomplete and impressionistic responses. A survey of public opinion in the shire counties, carried out recently by the transport and road research laboratory and to be published in the near future, indicates that people are generally satisfied with their bus services. Buses are now running more frequently and few complaints were recorded about the availability of information.

London Underground (Feet on Seats)

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will introduce legislation to make it a punishable offence for passengers on London Underground trains to place their feet on the seats.

Mr. Portillo: No. This is a matter on which the LRT board might make byelaws if it thought this desirable.

Buses (Manchester)

Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, in view of the decision by the Greater Manchester passenger transport authority to discontinue the bus services from Saddleworth serving the Hulme grammar school, he will review arrangements for the oversight of bus services in Greater Manchester.

Mr. Portillo: Decisions on the provision of subsidised local bus services are entirely a matter for local authorities, in this case the Greater Manchester passenger transport authority.

I understand that its policy is to discriminate against children at independent schools.

However, I am told that a private operator has now introduced services which should meet the need.

Welsh Water Authority

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how much land in acres is owned by the Welsh water authority in England and Wales.

(2) what types of land, urban, rural and mountain, are in Welsh water authority ownership in Wales and England;

(3) what estimate he has of the value of land in Welsh water authority ownership;

(4) how much land is in Welsh water authority ownership (a) with outline planning permission, (b) with planning permission or (c) currently submitted to local authorities for planning permission.

Mr. Grist: These are matters for the Welsh water authority. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Gentleman.

TRANSPORT

A2 (Bexleyheath-Dartford)

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the carriageway restrictions on the A2 between Bexleyheath and Dartford to end; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Weather permitting, work is expected to be completed by the end of January.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning delays on the A2 between Bexleyheath and Dartford.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: One representation has been received about delays resulting from the contract on the A2 between Bexley and Dartford.

Rail Electrification (Lichfield-Redditch)

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has yet received British Rail's submission for the electrification of the cross-city line from Lichfield to Redditch via Birmingham New Street.

Mr. Portillo: I have not.

M1

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will reconsider the policy stated in the answer of 12 November 1987, Official Report, column 252, and authorise the use as an additional lane of the stretch of disused offside lane hard shoulder on the north-bound carriageway of the M1 from the junction with the M25 to its most northerly point.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. This extra lane is not long enough to be useful and safe.

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether, in the light of the answer of 12 November 1987 to the hon. Member for Derby, North, Official Report, column 252, concerning the non-construction of a stretch of additional vehicle carriageway on the north-bound side of the M1, he will explain the criteria used for deciding to construct a shorter length of carriageway on the south-bound side of the same motorway between junctions 4 and 5.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The new southbound crawler lane between junctions 4 and 5 was constructed because slow-moving heavy goods vehicles on this incline were causing delays to traffic, particularly during the morning peak period.

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the length of fourth lane carriageway on the south-bound side of the M1 motorway between junctions 4 and 5.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The crawler lane is 1·4 km long.

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the length of disused offside lane hard shoulder on the north-bound carriageway of the M1 north of the junction with the M25.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Approximately 2½ miles. It has less than two miles as a continuous length.

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many motor vehicle accidents have been reported on the stretch of fourth lane carriageway on the south-bound side of the M1 between junctions 4 and 5 since this south lane was constructed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There have been no personal injury accidents recorded since the crawler lane was opened to traffic on 14 August 1988.

Rear Brake Lights

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what alterations are planned or are being considered with regard to the regulations affecting the provision of rear brake lights on motor vehicles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Better vehicle conspicuity can reduce accidents and save lives. New draft vehicle lighting regulations on which we are currently consulting propose improved lighting on heavy lorries and a requirement that brake lights fitted in car rear windows should be only half as bright as normal brake lights. This would overcome the problem of eye-level glare.

We are also discussing internationally with a view to agreeing new European standards, other ways of making brake lights more effective, for instance by separating them from other rear lights.

Cherished Registration Numbers

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether it is yet possible to reduce the five-year delay before the cherished registration number from a stolen car can be re-issued.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: From today, the last registered keeper of a stolen and unrecovered vehicle with a cherished number can have that number reinstated on another vehicle only one year after the date of theft. Those motorists known to be able to benefit from the change are being informed individually by the driver and vehicle licensing centre.

Railway Inspectorate

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why, pursuant to his answer of 27 October, his Department's review of the railway inspectorate of April 1987 states in paragraph 6-22 that as a matter of policy the inspectorate has deliberately refrained from making any preventative checks on railway maintenance, whether of operating equipment or permanent way; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Paragraph 6.22 of the review report went on to recommend that inspections under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act should include "checks as to whether track and equipment have been maintained adequately as a matter of routine".

This is receiving careful consideration, along with the other recommendations in the report.

Shipping (Reflagging)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many foreign reflaggings to the ensign have occurred since the strengthening of the Armilla patrol in late 1986.

Mr. Portillo: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Unlicensed Vehicles

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide a breakdown by London boroughs of reported unlicensed vehicles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. The figures are not available.

Egremont Bypass

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will explain the circumstances leading to the cancellation of the public inquiry into the proposed Egremont bypass; when he proposes that the inquiry should resume; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The public inquiry was abandoned because of a procedural flaw in the arrangements for the inquiry. We forgot to publish the official notice of the inquiry. I apologise. Arrangements for a fresh inquiry will be made as quickly as possible.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 1 November.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 1 November.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 1 November.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 1 November.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for 1 November.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Correspondence (Leaks)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the progress of the inquiry into the leak of a letter from the Secretary of State for Social Security to the Chief Secretary to the Treasury; what inquiries are being undertaken to establish the circumstances in which a copy of the letter was destroyed; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The normal procedures are being followed. It is not the usual practice to comment further on matters of this kind.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing Action Trust Areas

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the statement in the Minister for Housing and Planning's personal letter to tenants in housing action trust areas that councils will have the resources to enable them to buy back the houses from the trust means that there will be a separate and additional provision in that local authority's housing investment programme.

Mr. Trippier: As well as writing to prospective tenants, I wrote to the leaders of the local authorities being considered for housing action trusts. In those letters I said that authorities which wish to repurchase HAT property when the trust has completed its improvement work would be given the necessary approvals to enable them to raise sufficient funds for acquisition. Under the present system, there would be an in-year addition to the council's housing investment programme allocation. Under the proposed new financial system, set out in the consultation paper, "Capital Expenditure and Finance", a supplementary credit approval would be issued.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether the reference in the Minister for Housing and Planning's personal letter to tenants in housing action trust areas to rents moving in line with council rents takes account of the proposed charges to the housing revenue accounting system as set out in the consultation document published by his Department;

(2) if he will clarify whether the statement in the Minister for Housing and Planning's personal letter to tenants in housing action trust areas means rents will move in line with council rents or with market rents.

Mr. Trippier: Rents payable by tenants of housing action trusts will move in line with council rents. My letter to prospective tenants takes into account the proposals in the Government's consultation paper "A New Financial Regime for Local Authority Housing in England and Wales." One of the objectives of the proposed new system is that council rents generally should not exceed levels within the reach of people in low-paid employment.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how a social landlord, as referred to in the Minister for Housing and Planning's personal letter to tenants in housing action trust areas, is to be registered.

Mr. Trippier: Clause 79 of the Housing Bill requires the Housing Corporation to maintain a register of approved landlords which shall be open to inspection.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the legally binding guarantee about rent and long-term security referred to in the Minister for Housing and Planning's personal letter to tenants in housing action trust areas, is an assured tenancy as set out in the Housing Bill.

Mr. Trippier: Housing action trust tenants transferring to landlords approved by the Housing Corporation will be offered assured tenancies subject to the terms of part I of the Housing Bill and the tenants' guarantee or its equivalent. The Housing Corporation has issued a draft of the tenants' guarantee, "Guidance for Registered Housing Associations on Housing Management Practice." Such assured tenancies will provide long-term security of tenure. The draft guarantee also states that rents should be at levels within the reach of those in low-paid employment. The initial rent levels will be set out in the tenancy agreement which should also state the procedure and framework for altering rents.

Palace of Westminster (Terrace)

Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if there are any plans to return to its original level the Terrace of the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Chope: There are no proposals to restore the Terrace to its original level. The work involved would be substantial and for the foreseeable future there are more pressing priorities to be met from the parliamentary works vote.

Planning Applications

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many planning applications called in and subject to public inquiry have been (a) granted and (b) refused in each of the past eight years.

Mr. Chope: The number of called-in planning applications granted and refused is as follows:

	Granted	Refused
1980	33	24
1981	36	17
1982	23	25
1983	33	30
1984	32	35
1985	27	17
1986	25	24
1987	27	26

The importance of most called-in development proposals means that most of these cases will have been subject to a public local inquiry, but the Department has no record of the number.

Childhood Cancer

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution to publish its report into the incidence of childhood cancer in north Humberside.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution is completing its investigation of the radioactive discharges from the Capper Pass factory on north Humberside and related issues including possible health effects. We expect its report will be submitted to Ministers in November.

Right-to-Buy Legislation

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the number of properties sold under the right-to-buy legislation since 1980 by each local authority in England and the percentage of each authority's housing stock these figures represent.

Mr. Trippier: A table giving the information requested on sales up to March 1988 as reported by each local authority in England was placed in the Library on 13 September in response to an earlier question by my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon (Mr. Amess) on 29 July at column 819. An updated version of this table, giving information up to June 1988 is to be produced shortly, and will also be laid in the Library.

Leasehold Reform Act 1967

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to publish his response to the consultation paper on disputes about valuations under the Leasehold Reform Act 1967.

Mr. Trippier: The responses to our consultation paper are still being considered by the Department and by the Welsh Office. I hope to be able to announce decisions soon.

Inner Aid Programme Funding

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 26 October on the subject of inner aid programme funding, if he will list those local authorities that supplied information to his Department in respect of a part of their application too late to qualify for such funding.

Mr. Trippier: I am writing to my hon. Friend.

National Parks

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, following his decision not to pursue Her Majesty's Government's previous intention to give national park authorities in England and Wales powers to make landscape conservation orders, what steps he now intends to take to introduce new laws giving extra protection to the landscape of national parks.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: As I explained when announcing my right hon. Friend's decision not to proceed with the landscape conservation orders proposal, we see no need for further legislation in this area at present.

Livestock Units (Planning Permission)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give a date on which he now expects to lay the proposed consolidated General Development Order to include a provision requiring planning permission for the siting of livestock units within 400 m of most existing permanent buildings.

Mr. Chope: The Town and Country Planning General Developent Order 1988 was laid on 31 October and will come into effect on 5 December. It incorporates new planning controls over livestock units and associated structures proposed to be erected within 400 m of most types of permanent buildings.

Water Supply (Nitrates)

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current level of nitrates in water in Derbyshire; and how this compares with the safety limits proposed by the European Community.

Mr. Moynihan: The current level of nitrate in drinking water supplies in the Derbyshire area is well below the limit for nitrate of 50 mg per litre set in the EC drinking water directive, except for a small part of south Derbyshire where the level is around 70 mg per litre. About 1,000 people receive this water. However, there is no danger to health and the water is safe to drink. A remedial programme is in hand.

Radon Gas

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he has concerning levels of radon gas in the east midlands; what assessment he has made of the need to inform the owners and occupiers of private dwelling houses built on, over or near granite of the potential danger therefrom; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The results of indoor exposure to radon have been published by the National Radiological Protection Board in two documents, "Exposure to Radon Daughters in Dwellings" (NRPB-GS6, January 1987) and "Natural Radiation Exposure in UK Dwellings" (NRPB-R190, May 1988), copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House. There is no need to restrict home building on, over or near granite provided adequate measures are taken to avoid high levels of radon.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider amending the powers of the Nature Conservancy Council to provide a right of independent appeal against a proposed designation of a site of special scientific interest to the proprietor or other affected persons; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. The question of a right of appeal was considered and rejected during the passage of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 and subsequently by the Environment Committee of this House (first report Session 1984-85). We are satisfied that the existing procedures are appropriate.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider amending the powers of the Nature Conservancy Council to require it to publish the scientific criteria which it applies in designating a site of special scientific interest; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Nature Conservancy Council's explanatory pamphlet, "The Selection of Sites of Special Scientific Interest," gives details of the selection guidelines currently in use. It is available to the public and a copy is held in the Library of the House. I am advised that the Nature Conservancy Council intends to publish a more detailed exposition early in 1989.

Rating Reform

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for publicity on the implementation of the Local Government Finance Act 1988 (a) around the time of the compilation of the community charges register, (b) around the time of the publication of the community charges register and (c) around the time of issue of the first community charge bills; and how much he plans to spend in (i) 1988-89, (ii) 1989-90 and (iii) 1990-91 on such publicity.

Mr. Ridley: I have not yet taken any decisions on what Government publicity will be needed at any of the stages mentioned. £1 million has been allocated this financial year to paid publicity to inform the public of the measures in the Local Government Finance Act 1988. No decisions have been taken on expenditure for subsequent years.

Dieldrin

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to support the introduction of rules to control levels of dieldrin in fish, in line with proposals supported by the European Community.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 31 October 1988]: The European Community adopted a directive in June setting limit values and quality objectives for discharges to water of dieldrin and related substances. The directive sets water quality standards for these substances in order to protect aquatic life, and provides that concentrations in fish and other aquatic life should not increase over time. It will come into effect on 1 January 1989.

Dieldrin is a highly persistent pesticide. In the United Kingdom most of the dieldrin remaining in the aquatic environment derives from past use and levels can therefore be expected gradually to decline. None the less, the Government have recently announced that the few remaining authorised agricultural uses of dieldrin will be phased out. All approvals for the use of products containing dieldrin will cease after 30 March 1989. This will ensure that further amounts of the substance do not reach the aquatic environment as a result of spillages or misuse.

Waste Disposal

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his departmental officials have made any assessment of the paper submitted by Friends of the Earth International, by George C. Kasoulides to the October consultative meeting of the 1972 London convention on the prevention of marine pollution by dumping wastes and other matters (the London dumping convention), entitled "Procedures for the Assessment of Liability Concerning Damage to the Environment Caused at Sea."

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 27 October 1988]: I have been asked to reply.

The paper submitted by Friends of the Earth International on the assessment of liability concerning damage to the environment caused at sea was one of a number of papers considered at the 11th consultative meeting of contracting parties to the London dumping convention in October.

Some contracting parties like the United Kingdom questioned the need to establish a liability regime or considered it premature to do so. Contracting parties agreed, however, to set up a small task team of legal experts to take stock of existing domestic law and public international law on civil and state liability applicable to damage resulting from dumping at sea.

The task team will report to the 12th consultative meeting in October 1989.

10, Downing Street

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been (a) expended, and (b) allocated for (i) furnishings and (ii) decoration in No. 10, Downing street in 1988-89.

Mr. Chope: This is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

The information is not available in the precise form requested. As regards the allocation of expenditure in 1988-89, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 29 July 1988, Official Report, column 628. Actual expenditure to date in 1988-89 on furnishings and decorations in 10, Downing street, including the restoration and refurbishment of the state rooms is £213,318.

DEFENCE

HMS Hermes

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to converting a merchantman into a commando carrier so as to provide a replacement for HMS Hermes.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply of 24 October at column 62, to my hon. Friend the Member for Shrewsbury and Atcham (Mr. Conway), which announced the issue of an invitation to tender for an aviation support ship to provide dedicated helicopter lift in support of amphibious operations. Tenderers will be free to offer varying options for meeting the requirement, not just by new design and build. Other options might include new build to an existing but suitably modified merchant ship design, or the conversion of an existing merchant hull.

Ulster Defence Regiment

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the Ulster Defence Regiment are currently estimated to be Catholics; what is the total recruitment since 1985; and what proportion of recruitment since 1985 has been Catholic.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: About 3 per cent. of the Ulster Defence Regiment's current strength have declared their religion as Roman Catholic. Since the beginning of 1985, about 3,000 men and women have been recruited into the regiment of whom just over 4 per cent. declared their religion as Roman Catholic.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the costs of the Ulster Defence Regiment, and its Reserve, divided between wages and salaries, other personnel costs, costs of construction and buildings, investment in military equipment and other costs for the fiscal years 1985-86, 1986-87, 1987-88 and the projected costs for the years 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Estimated costs for the financial years 1985-86 to 1988-89 are as follows:

	(£ million, current prices)
Financial year	Wages and salaries	Support costs	Capital expenditure on equipment	Total
1985-86	48·2	3·9	0·7	52·8
1986-87	48·8	4·1	0·6	53·5
1987-88	48·3	4·1	0·6	53·0
1988-89	49·5	4·7	0·6	54·8

Figures for 1989-90 are not yet available.
The figures for works costs are not readily available.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the military equipment of the Ulster Defence Regiment, and its Reserve, listing separately firearms and the type of firearms, motor vehicles, armoured vehicles and type and number of radio, radar and electronics surveillance equipment with which the regiment is equipped.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The current establishment of weapons and vehicles for the Ulster Defence Regiment is outlined as follows. The UDR has no reserve.

	Number
5·56mm rifle SA 80	5,977
5·56mm rifle Light Support Weapon (LSW)	989
0·38in revolver	[1]275
0·22in pistol	[1]1,901
9mm pistol	[2]901
7·65mm pistol	[3]39
Shotguns	3
Landrovers	274
4 ton Trucks	12

	Number
Trailers	61
Recruiting Trailer	1
Other vehicles	232

[1] Personal Protection Weapons (PPWs).
[2] 481 of which are issued as PPWs.
[3] 25 of which are issued as PPWs.

The SA 80 and LSW are replacing the SLRs, LMGs, GPMGs and SMGs with which the regiment has previously been equipped. Other equipment can be issued when commitments or circumstances dictate. The radio allocation varies from week to week, dependent upon the tasks and commitments of each battalion.

Northern Ireland

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the manpower strength of the British Army in Northern Ireland, giving details of the number of operatives for the categories Ulster Defence Regiment, Regular British Army and British Territorial Army, on 30 September.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The figures are as at 30 June 1988, the latest available.

	Number
Ulster Defence Regiment	6,310
Regular Army/Royal Marines[1]	9,868
Territorial Army	3,762

The figures for the Ulster Defence Regiment include both full time and part-time soldiers. Soldiers of the Territorial Army are not used in support of the RUC in counter-terrorist operations.
[1] From time to time a Royal Marine Commando is deployed in an infantry role.

Tornado Aircraft

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Tornado F2 aircraft have been delivered (a) with and (b) without radar; and how many are in store (i) with and (ii) without radar.

Mr. Sainsbury: I presume that the hon. Member requires information on all marks of Tornado ADV. 111 Tornado ADV's have been delivered to date comprising 18 F2 and 93 F3. All Tornado ADV aircraft in front line service have radars fitted. There are 26 aircraft at present in storage at RAF St. Athan of which 14 are F2 and 12 are F3. While they are in storage there is no requirement to fit these aircraft with radars. The balance of four F2 ADV's are being used to support the development programme.

Armilla Patrol

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the number of merchant ships escorted each year by the Armilla patrol, distinguishing between (a) those registered in the United Kingdom, (b) those not so registered but flying the Red Ensign and (c) those which were in neither category.

Mr. Hamilton: The Armilla patrol's operational pattern has involved accompaniment rather than escort of merchant vessels in the Gulf. In 1987, when the policy began, 405 transits by entitled merchant vessels were accompanied by Armilla warships. For 1988 up to 31 October, when accompaniment ceased, the corresponding figure is 621. It would not be possible to divide the total figure of 1,026 accompanied transits by country of registration and flag at the time without disproportionate cost.

Nitroglycerine Manufacturing

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the management of British Aerospace concerning the maintenance of a nitroglycerine manufacturing facility in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sainsbury: None. However, RO plc remain committed to us to effect deliveries of products containing components using nitroglycerine in accordance with annual delivery programmes contained within a number of contracts.

Royal Ordnance

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what conditions regarding the nationality of sub-contractors are included in his agreement with Royal Ordnance plc for the supply of 80 per cent. of his Department's requirements for explosives, propellants and ammunition.

Mr. Sainsbury: The agreement includes standard contract conditions which require RO plc to inform us in advance of any direct overseas expenditure likely to be incurred and to obtain approval, prior to purchase, for products manufactured overseas valued at more than £100,000.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment has been made of the effect of an increase in the geographical concentration of Royal Ordnance manufacturing facilities on their vulnerability to attack in time of war.

Mr. Sainsbury: We understand that Royal Ordnance is reducing the number of its sites in order to improve the efficiency of its production. Our aim is, however, to increase the proportion of work going to competition in the ammunition field and this will open up opportunities to other United Kingdom companies to enter the ammunition business at the same time as achieving better value for money for the tax payer.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment has been made on the effect of the recent Royal Ordnance plant closures on the wartime production capability of Royal Ordnance.

Mr. Sainsbury: The possible maintenance of reserve capacity in Royal Ordnance ammunition factories was considered well before the sale of Royal Ordnance to British Aerospace. Whilst we will continue to consider the retention of specific manufacturing capabilities on a case by case basis with the company, we do not believe that the individual plants concerned are, of themselves, an indispensable part of the United Kingdom defence industrial base.

Conservative Party Conference

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any additional costs were incurred by the Ministry of Defence for services relating to security provision to the 1988 Conservative party conference other than those relating to transport, accommodation, and so on.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

HMS Penelope

Miss Fookes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will reconsider his decision not to award the contract for the repair of the Leander class frigate HMS Penelope to Devonport Management Limited in the light of further information about the relative price competitivenes of the main bidders, as indicated in a letter being sent to him by the hon. Member for Plymouth, Drake.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 27 October 1988]: No. The contract was awarded following competitive tendering to the company submitting the lowest compliant bid which, after due adjustment for comparability was significantly lower than the DML bid. However, I shall write to my hon. Friend.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Personal Financial Information

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what evidence he has received of serious breaches of confidentiality by banks and financial institutions concerning personal financial information; what action he proposes to take to prevent such abuses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: I have received no evidence of the kind described by my hon. Friend. If he is able to provide me with evidence I shall have it looked into.

Post Office

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has made, or intends to make, any assessment of the damage caused to the revenue of the Post Office, and of the implications for Government decisions on its future financial framework, by the September strike by the Union of Communication Workers, by way of the transfer of custom from traditional postal methods to facsimile transmission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has asked to be kept closely informed of the Post Office's expectations of the consequences for the business of the recent postal strike.

The Post Office has already been set financial targets for the current financial year. In so far as the consequences of the strike are likely to affect the Post Office's future financial performance, they will be taken into account in decisions on its future financial framework.

Cash Limits

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether any changes will be made to his Department's cash limit for 1988-89.

Mr. Newton: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, the cash limit for Class V, Vote 3 (administration, regulation of domestic trade and industry, and consumer protection) will be increased by £2 million from £187,436,000 to £189,436,000. This increase is to meet the cost of certain market assessment studies. The increase will be offset by savings in Class V, Vote 2 (Support for Industry) where the cash limit will be reduced by a corresponding amount from £570,256,000 to £568,256,000. It will not therefore add to the total of planned public expenditure.

Offshore Firms (Investors)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what actions he proposes to take to assist United Kingdom investors who have suffered losses through dealing with offshore firms.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 28 October 1988]: The Financial Services Act 1986 will provide considerable protections to investors in this position. Where the offshore business is not authorised under the Act and it carries on investment business here unlawfully, there are powers to obtain a restitution order from the courts where investors have suffered loss. A similar order may be sought if the business is authorised and investors suffer loss as a result of its misconduct. In addition, if the business is authorised, the investors' compensation scheme, established under the Act, may provide full or partial compensation for any loss suffered. A number of other provisions under the Act are also relevant. However, investors should recognise that investing with unauthorised overseas businesses is riskier than investing with authorised businesses; and that the provisions of the Act are not retrospective.

Scottish and Newcastle Breweries plc

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what approaches he has received from individuals or companies seeking to arrange meetings in connection with the proposed takeover of Scottish and Newcastle plc by Elders IXL; and if he will list their names.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 28 October 1988]: A number of representations from hon. Members and others about the proposed acquisition of Scottish and Newcastle Breweries plc by Elders IXL have been received and my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and I have had a meeting with the hon. Member and four of his colleagues in the House on this matter.

One request for a meeting has so far been received from one of the parties to the proposed merger. In accordance with our usual practice in such cases this has been declined.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the meetings he has held with Elders IXL or their representatives in connection with their proposed takeover of Scottish and Newcastle plc; and if he will name the individuals who attended those meetings.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 28 October 1988]: No such meetings have been held.

House of Fraser

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his policy with regard to publication of the House of Fraser inquiry report before (a) the serious fraud office has completed its inquiries, and (b) any criminal cases stemming from its inquiries have been disposed of by the courts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 31 October 1988]: Publication of the report is a matter for the Secretary of State's discretion. His present view is that it would not be proper for the report to be published either before the serious fraud office has completed its inquiries or, if there were to be criminal proceedings, until after those proceedings were concluded.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the names of persons or organisations mentioned in the report to which any sections of the House of Fraser inquiry report have been revealed.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 31 October 1988]: No.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement outlining the reasons for his decision to postpone the publication of the House of Fraser inquiry report following the announcement by the serious fraud office that further time was needed for investigation and consideration of the case by their officers; and what other considerations he took into account in making his decision.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 31 October 1988]: I am unable to add to the press statement released by my Department on 29 September 1988.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on what date he received the inspector's report into the affairs of House of Fraser; when he forwarded the report to (a) the Office of Fair Trading and (b) the serious fraud office; what other bodies outside Her Majesty's Government were sent copies; and what were the reasons for circulating copies to the Office of Fair Trading and the serious fraud office.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 31 October 198]: The inspectors submitted their report to the Secretary of State on 23 July. As indicated in the Department's press statement on 29 September, a copy of the report was forwarded to the Director General of Fair Trading. This took place on 19 August after the necessary parliamentary order had come into force. The report was passed to the director general because the Secretary of State would have power to refer the merger to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission if the report contained evidence of material facts about the merger that had not previously been notified or made public. The director general is considering the matter and will be advising the Secretary of State as soon as reasonably practicable.

As also indicated in the press statement, a copy of the report was passed to the serious fraud office. This took place on 28 July. This was because the report raised serious issues which required to be looked at by the prosecution authorities.

In answering this question it would not be proper for me to discuss which bodies apart from those indicated in the press statement have received copies of the report. These matters are necessarily confidential.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he received any request from the serious fraud office in respect of the publication of the House of Fraser report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 31 October 1988]: I have received no such request. Naturally, my Department consults the prosecuting authorities in appropriate cases before publishing material which might be prejudicial to their investigations or to any subsequent prosecutions. Such consultation took place in this case and the views of the prosecuting authorities were given due weight.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has received from the serious fraud office regarding the time which will be required by it to consider the House of Fraser inquiry report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 31 October 1988]: I have received no information from the serious fraud office in this respect. I am confident that its inquiries will proceed as quickly as possible, consistent with a thorough investigation.

Barlow Clowes

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he received any request from (a) the police or (b) any other public authority regarding his decision to publish the report into the Barlow Clowes case in light of the prosecutions and further police inquiries which were taking place; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 31 October 1988]: My right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State announced his intention to publish Sir Godfray Le Quesne's report at the time of Sir Godfray's appointment subject to there being no legal impediment as to content or timing.

Naturally, my Department consults the prosecuting authorities in appropriate cases before publishing material which might be prejudicial to their investigations or to any subsequent prosecutions. Such consultation took place in this case and the views of the prosecuting authorities were given due weight.

European Standards

Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what steps are being taken to encourage British companies to bring their standards up to the level of such European standards as are now required by law;

(2) what steps are being taken to encourage British companies to bring their standards up to the level of such European standards as may in future be required by law.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 31 October 1988]: The information my Department provides for industry about the single market stresses the increasingly important role of standards and will continue to do so.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the consequence for British industries in relation to any given product to be made, sold or distributed within the European Community if (a) the British Standard does not conform to the EEC standard required by law, (b) there is no British Standard which conforms to EEC standards required by law and (c) the British Standard is not adopted as being consistent with the EEC standard required by law having been rejected by majority vote.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 31 October 1988]: European Community standards are made by the European standards bodies, CEN and CENELEC. The British Standards Institute is the United Kingdom member. While every effort is made to achieve unanimity, the British Standards Institute and the other members have agreed to abide by weighted majority voting. Once agreed, European standards are given the status of British Standards by publication of an identical text. Any conflicting existing British Standards must be withdrawn.

Business Regulation

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what further plans he has to lift the burden of regulation on business.

Mr. Maude [pursuant to his oral answer, 9 March 1988, column 314]: The White Paper "Releasing Enterprise", which will be published tomorrow, reports progress over the last 18 months and makes proposals for taking the deregulation initiative forward with new momentum.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Sound Archives

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether he has any proposals with regard to the future preservation of the sound archives of the proceedings of the House, as recommended in the second report of the Sound Broadcasting Committee 1986-87.

Mr. Wakeham: It is proposed, with Mr. Speaker's agreement, to arrange for the implementation as soon as possible of the recommendation made in the second report of the House of Commons Sound Broadcasting Committee (Session 1986-87) that, in accordance with arrangements made with the National Sound Archive, a complete sound record of the proceedings of the House should in future, after retention by the House authorities here for a period of seven years, be stored permanently at the National Sound Archive in South Kensington.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Hurd: I last met the commissioner on 20 October at a lunch at New Scotland Yard organised by the community involvement branch. It was an informal occasion, during which we discussed the work of the branch, and a number of other policing issues.

Electronic Monitoring

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the proposed pilot projects to use electronic monitoring for people on bail to commence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Next summer.

Party Conferences (Security)

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received from conference towns and police authorities on the cost of security for party conferences.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received recent representations from 12 hon. and right hon. Members—nine of whom represent districts in which party conferences are held—one district chamber of commerce and a number of members of the public.

We have considered all representations carefully, but have concluded that we would not be justified in departing from normal police funding arrangements in these cases.

Fresh Start

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a further statement on the Fresh Start initiative in prisons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Fresh Start is in place at all establishments. We are giving effect to a programme of action plans to improve the carrying out of Fresh Start principles and to develop best practice.

Litter Offences

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been prosecuted for litter offences in each of the last four years.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to a question from him on 9 June at columns 639-42. The available information about the number of defendants proceeded against for litter-related offences, which may be incomplete, is published annually in table S1.1(a)(iii) of volume 1 of the supplementary tables to the "Criminal statistics, England and Wales". Copies of the issue for 1987 have been placed in the Library.

Noise Pollution

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to combat noise pollution arising from public houses in residential areas.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In addition to their existing powers, the Licensing Act 1988 empowered licensing justices to make restriction orders, on grounds of disturbance, to limit or nullify the extended opening hours provided for in the Act, to exercise greater control over late-night extensions and to revoke licences at any licensing session following receipt of a complaint. A circular was issued in August drawing to the attention of the courts and the police the wide powers available to them to prevent and curb disorder, infringements of the licensing law and drunkennness.

Data Protection Act

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when the committee reviewing the workings of the Data Protection Act is due to report; whether he will name those organisations that provided evidence to that committee; and whether he will place the evidence in the Library;

(2) whether the committee reviewing the workings of the Data Protection Act have reported to him concerning the implications for individual privacy that arise from (a) the exemption from the whole Act if personal data are used for national security purposes, (b) the lack of powers for the registrar in relation to any of the eight data protection principles if a disclosure is required by any enactment, (c) the exemption from the duty to obtain personal data fairly and lawfuly, if the data are required obtained by any enactment and (d) the powers given under the Local Government Finance Act to the Secretary of State for Social Security.

Mr. Renton: The interdepartmental committee is continuing its review but is conscious of the need to report to Ministers as soon as possible. The committee is awaiting the result of the independent consultation exercise undertaken by the data protection registrar before deciding whether there is need to call for further evidence. It is not intended that such evidence should be placed in the Library. The data protection registrar intends that the outcome of his exercise should be published in due course.

Data Transfers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will place in the Library a copy of the rules that will allow Departments to transfer personal data to other Departments connected to the Government data network.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The principles under which the transfer of personal data may be authorised are the same for the Government data network as for other means of transmission, whether automatic or manual. Authority for the transfer of personal information between Departments is a matter for the Ministers of the Departments concerned.

Electoral Register

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will review the sale of the electoral register in light of restrictions on the sale of the community charge register.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. The Government made it clear, during the passage of what is now the Local Government Finance Act 1988, that the provisions governing the sale of the electoral register would remain in force irrespective of any decision on the sale of the extract of the community charges register.

Litter

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring forward legislative proposals to permit the police to levy on-the-spot fines for littering of public places.

Mr. John Patten: No; the police must give priority to dealing with violence and other more serious crime.

Bogus Refugees

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the numbers of bogus refugees coming into Britain over each of the past nine years and the current figure for 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Information on applications for refugee status is published in an annual series of statistical bulletins, most recently "Refugee statistics, United Kingdom, 1987" Home Office statistical bulletin 16/88. The statistics show a marked decline over the last nine years in the number of grants of refugee status as a proportion of applications received. But we do not categorise "bogus" applications separately. The refusal of an application means that the asylum-seeker is not considered to have a well-founded fear of persecution; it does not necessarily suggest that the application was not made in good faith.

Terrorism

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons in England and Wales were charged with terrorist-type offences relating to Northern Ireland in the current year; how many of those charged were released on bail; and what was the average period between remand and trial for prisoners refused bail relating to such charges in Britain in the current year.

Mr. Hurd: In the current year one person has been charged with such an offence and he was remanded in custody for 47 days before trial. In addition the three persons remanded in custody last year on charges of conspiracy to murder the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland were further charged this year with conspiracy to murder persons unknown. The total period spent on remand by the three before trial was 393 days.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were remanded in custody before trial for terrorist-type offences in the current year.

Mr. Hurd: Four.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the number of deaths and injuries which have occurred in Great Britain in 1987 and 1988 connected with present civil unrest in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hurd: In 1987 no homicides were recorded in England and Wales as attributed to acts of terrorism connected with Northern Ireland. Provisional information for the first nine months of 1988 is that there has been one such offence of homicide, in an IRA bombing in which nine persons were also injured. I understand from my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland that there were no such deaths or injuries recorded in Scotland either in 1987 or so far in 1988.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners in British prisons who give as their domicile Northern Ireland have been returned to Northern Ireland to serve the whole or part of their sentences in the current year; and how many of these prisoners were serving sentences for terrorist-type offences.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Six inmates of English prisons who gave Northern Ireland as their domicile have been granted transfer to Northern Ireland at their own request to serve the remainder of their sentences since 1 January this year. One is serving a sentence for a terrorist-type offence. Not all these transfers have yet taken place. Transfers of inmates from Scotland to Northern Ireland are a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Custodial Remands

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average period of custodial remand for female custodial remand prisoners in England and Wales for the first half of the current year.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is estimated that the figures for the first half of 1988 were broadly similar to those for 1987, that is an average of 45 days spent by untried females in prison service establishments and an average of 27 days for convicted unsentenced females.

Custodial Sentences

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average length of custodial sentence of female prisoners in England and Wales in the first six months of the current year.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information on the distribution of the length of sentence for females received under sentence or serving sentences is published annually in "Prison statistics, England and Wales"—tables 3.3, 3.10, 5(a), 5.9 and 7.1 of the latest issue for 1986, Cm. 210—copies of which are in the Library. The average length of sentence for females received into prison service establishments in England and Wales in the first six months of 1988 to serve a determinate sentence, excluding those in default of payment of a fine, was about 8·1 months for young offenders and 12·5 months for adults.

I regret that corresponding information for the complete year of 1984, given in an earlier reply on 3 February 1986, at column 5, was incorrect. The correct figures are 6·5 months for young offenders and 8·5 months for adults.

Prisoners (Transfers)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were transferred from (a) England and Wales to Northern Ireland and (b) Northern Ireland to England and Wales in the current year; and under which section of the Criminal Justice Act 1961 such transfers were carried out.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since 1 January 1988, six inmates have been accepted for permanent transfer from England and Wales to Northern Ireland under section 26 of the 1961 Act, and six for temporary transfer under section 27. One inmate has been accepted for transfer from Northern Ireland to England and Wales under section 26 and one under section 27. No transfers have been made this year under other sections of the Act.

Prisoners (Parole)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list separately how many prisoners giving as their domicile either the Republic or Northern Ireland, respectively, have been permitted to return home to the Republic of Ireland or Northern Ireland, respectively, on parole for humanitarian reasons in the current year.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Prisoners may be temporarily released on compassionate grounds under rule 6 of the Prison Rules 1964, as amended.

Records of the number of prisoners granted temporary release are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Prisoners are not temporarily released under rule 6 to any place, including the Republic of Ireland, which is outside the jurisdiction of the United Kingdom.

Prisoners (Searches)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of the number of body searches, cell searches and cell changes and strip searches carried out on each of the category A prisoners being held at Her Majesty's prison, Durham, monthly since May.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to replies given to his questions on 20 July 1987, columns 56-57, as to the practice relating to body searches, cell searches and cell changes, and 14 June 1988, at columns 95-96, 29 July 1988, at columns 760-61, and 19 October 1988, at columns 881-82, as to the number of strip searches.

Dr. Paul Vickers

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will report what progress has been made on the review of Dr. Paul Vickers' sentence.

Mr. John Patten: Dr. Vickers' solicitors submitted a long and detailed report on the medical evidence given at trial, suggesting that his conviction for murder is unsafe. This report is being considered in the light of a further report by a forensic pathologist.

Correspondence

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when, further to his letter of 18 August to the hon. Member for Copeland, his Department proposes to make contact with Mr. A. P. Bamidele of 23 Charlton court, Hows street, London E2 8LU, as promised in the letter.

Mr. Renton: We have now written to Mr. Bamidele.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sodium

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to require all pre-packed or bottled foods or beverages to list on a label affixed thereto their sodium content.

Mr. Ryder: We are strongly encouraging manufacturers and retailers to adopt the fullest format of voluntary nutrition declarations, including sodium content, set out in the guidelines on nutrition labelling issued on 21 January. Many are already providing this information. Recent European Community proposals on voluntary nutrition labelling, which we have just formally received, would introduce a format which is, as expected, broadly similar to the one set out in our guidelines and would thus include sodium in the list of nutrients. The Community proposals would also provide for the labelling of certain nutrients to be made compulsory where, after taking account of the medical evidence, this is considered necessary in order to protect or enhance the health of the population or important groups of it. We will be consulting with a wide range of interested parties on the Community proposals and will fully take account of views in forthcoming negotiations.

Potatoes

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the implication of the decision by certain leading retailers in imposing United Nations maximum residue level standards on the fungicide and sprout inhibitors used in treatment of potatoes for the maintenance of the standards imposed by Her Majesty's Government in these areas.

Mr. MacGregor: The fungicide and sprout inhibitor referred to is Tecnazene, for which we proposed in a consultative document issued in April a maximum residue level for potatoes of 1 mg/kg to be introduced in five years' time.

Contracts made by retailers with their suppliers are a matter for their commercial judgment. Tecnazene is controlled under the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986 and its presence in potatoes is regularly monitored by the working party on pesticide residues. There is no indication of a health hazard in the levels of this fungicide currently used in the United Kingdom. The Advisory Committee on Pesticides is currently considering the matter and I hope to have its advice on a figure appropriate to United Kingdom conditions as soon as possible.

Pesticides

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of samples notified to his Ministry of bread, bran or flour contained residues of pesticides or insecticides.

Mr. MacGregor: The working party on pesticide residues has mounted a major survey of residues in cereals and cereal products over the last three years. The results have been passed to the Advisory Committee on Pesticides and the steering group on food surveillance, who were satisfied that the figures did not represent a hazard to consumers. These results will be published in the next report of the working party on pesticide residues.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to introduce maximum residue levels for relevant pesticides used on celery, lettuce and potatoes; and what evidence he has as to whether the relevant levels recommended by the United Nations are regularly exceeded in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ryder: Over 90 maximum residue levels (MRLs) for pesticides used on celery, lettuce and potatoes will come into effect on 31 December 1988. A further six MRLs, which are the subject of this question, will be introduced as soon as possible thereafter. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on this point to the hon. member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 19 October 1988, at column 875. For these six pesticide/commodity combinations it is recognised that approved uses in this country can sometimes lead to residues above the United Nations Codex Alimentarius Commission limits. Evidence for this derives from research and monitoring and is published in the reports of the working party on pesticide residues. The results of monitoring suggest that only a small proportion of samples reaching the consumer will have residues above codex MRLs, which are themselves not safety limits but designed to incorporate margins of safety. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on this point to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones) on 25 October 1988, at column 1408.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the health risks associated with the consumption of baby vegetables grown on peat blocks impregnated with combinations of pesticides.

Mr. MacGregor: The Research Consultative Committee Residues sub-group set up to advise the main committee on its report to the Priorities Board for Research and Development in Agriculture and Food noted that there is an increasing tendency to harvest "baby" beetroot, carrots and onions. Clearance data relate to full-term crops and the sub-group therefore recommended that studies should be undertaken to investigate the implications for residues especially where the crop is grown in peat blocks treated with pesticide. The Priorities Board will consider this recommendation later this month.

Dietary Studies

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to increase the number and scale of dietary studies conducted in the United Kingdom; and what assessment he has made as to whether the extrapolations developed from such studies are accurate.

Mr. Ryder: I shall continue to commission such studies as are required to monitor the safety and nutritional quality of diets in the United Kingdom. Advice on the need for, and the scale of, such surveys and on their interpretation is taken from a number of independent expert committees.

Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether any changes are proposed in the cash limits for the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for class IV, vote 2 will be increased by £1,714,000 from £34,932,000 to £36,646,000 to rectify difficulties in processing external trade claims. The running cost limit will also be increased by £2,519,000 from £15,207,000 to £17,726,000. The increase of £1,714,000 will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planning total of public expenditure.

THE ARTS

Ethnic Monitoring

Mr. Janner: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will now place in the Library copies of the results of the monitoring exercises in respect of Office of Arts and Libraries staff which has been carried out by the Cabinet Office, in accordance with the codes of the Commission for Racial Equality and the Equal Opportunities Commission, respectively.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. and learned Member to two reports by the Cabinet Office and Office of the Minister for the Civil Service, copies of which have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. The first is "Ethnic Origin Surveys of Non-industrial Staff in the Civil Service: London and the South East of England", published in December 1987. The second is entitled "Equal Opportunities for Women in the Civil Service, Progress Report 1984-1987", published in April 1988.

The monitoring of staff in relation to the codes is undertaken by the Cabinet Office as a continuing process.

Regional Arts Associations

Mr. Key: To ask the Minister for the Arts, if he will list the grants to each of the regional arts associations in the current financial year, expressed in terms of pence per head of their population, and including the average grant per head for all the associations.

Mr. Luce: Latest available figures for Arts Council grants for 1988-89 to the regional arts associations in terms of pence per head of their population are as follows:

	Pence
Eastern Arts	39·2
East Midlands Arts	51·6
Greater London Arts	116·9
Lincolnshire and Humberside Arts	69·9
Merseyside Arts	62·6
Northern Arts	114·6
North West Arts	45·9
Southern Arts	36·8
South East Arts	43·2
South West Arts	48·0
West Midlands Arts	47·4
Yorkshire Arts	53·2

The average grant per head for all the associations is 61·5.

HEALTH

Disabled People

12. Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his Department's responsibilities in relation to disabled people.

Mr. Mellor: The Department is responsible for health and personal social services for people with disabilities, both in the community and in hospital. It promotes good practice in the field and contributes funds to a large number of disability organisations. It represents United Kingdom interests in many international developments benefiting disabled people.

NHS (Capital Expenditure)

14. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list National Health Service capital expenditure projects costing more than £1 million which have been completed in the Staffordshire, Moorlands parliamentary constituency during the last 14 years, and those projected in the next five years.

Mrs. Currie: My hon. Friend probably has in mind the new Cheadle geriatric unit which was completed in July 1987 at a cost of £5 million; the Leek Moorlands hospital redevelopment which is due for completion in 1989 at a cost of just over £2 million and Biddulph neighbourhood hospital which is due for completion in 1993 at a cost of £1·65 million. In addition major redevelopments elsewhere in north Staffordshire with a total value of £46·5 million are at various stages of planning, design and completion.

Nurses

15. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the number of nurses employed in the National Health Service.

Mr. Mellor: The number of nursing and midwifery staff employed in the NHS in England continues to increase and at September 1987 there were 404,000 wholetime equivalents; the highest number ever.

66. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current position on the supply and recruitment of nurses.

Mr. Mellor: The number of nursing and midwifery staff employed in the National Health Service in England continues to increase and at September 1987 there were 404,000 wholetime equivalents; the highest number ever. However, there are still recruitment difficulties in some specialties and localities particularly in London and the south-east, although the recently introduced London pay supplement and clinical grading structure are expected to improve the situation when they are fully implemented.

North Western Regional Health Authority

16. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he next plans to meet the chairman of the North Western regional health authority; and what subjects he proposes to discuss.

Mrs. Currie: My right hon. and learned Friend will next meet the chairman of North Western regional health authority at the regular meeting of RHA chairmen on 16 November 1988. The agenda for this meeting has not yet been finalised, though doubtless we will discuss the substantial extra money being provided for the NHS.

Hospital Building

18. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a further statement on the hospital building programme.

Mrs. Currie: We have the largest ever sustained building programme in the history of the Health Service. There are currently 506 health building schemes, each costing over £1 million, at various stages of planning design and construction with a total value of over £4 billion. This year capital investment in the National Health Service is expected to exceed £1 billion.

20. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all hospital building completions in the last 12 months.

Mrs. Currie: Following is a list of the 60 health building schemes, each costing over £1 million, which were completed between 1 October 1987 and 30 September 1988.

36. Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many major hospital building schemes have been started and completed since 1979.

Mrs. Currie: Since 1979, 306 health building schemes, each costing over £1 million, have been started and completed in England.

60. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many major hospital schemes are currently under construction.

Mrs. Currie: There are currently 143 health building schemes, each costing over £1 million, under construction in England.

NHS (Performance Indicators)

21. Mr. Michael Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the use of performance indicators in the National Health Service.

Mrs. Currie: Health Service indicators for 1986-87 were published in April of this year. At this time all district health authorities were asked to examine their indicators over the four years for which data have been available and to report to their members on progress in improving services, identifying major problems and the action being proposed to deal with those problems. Each district was asked to send a copy of its report to the local Member of Parliament. Performance is also featuring this year in review meetings between the Department and regional health authorities for which the latter were asked to present an analysis of their indicators. Regions are being asked about progress in reducing variations between their districts.

The Department commissioned an independent study carried out last year on the use being made of Health Service indicators by managers in the NHS. The findings were encouraging and showed a wide awareness of indicators among managers.

Out-patients

22. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many out-patient attendances there were in 1978 and in the latest period of 12 months for which figures are available.

Mrs. Currie: In 1986, the latest year for which figures are available, there were just under 38 million out-patient attendances in England. This was 11 per cent. more than the approximately 34 million out-patient attendances in 1978. National figures for 1987-88 will be available in a matter of weeks.

Family Doctor Service

23. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how he is encouraging health promotion in the family doctor service.

Mr. Mellor: Our plans are laid out in the White Paper "Promoting Better Health" (Cm 249) published in November 1987. Major changes are to be made in the system of payment to doctors to encourage them to devote more time to a range of health promotion and preventive activities. Their contracts with the National Health Service will be clarified to make health promotion and the prevention of disease a specific part of their terms of service.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how he intends to increase the amount of choice for patients in the family doctor service.

Mr. Mellor: One of the main aims of the White Paper "Promoting Better Health" (Cm 249) is to give patients the widest range of choice in obtaining high quality primary medical care. To this end: Family practitioner committees will be required to provide consumers with more information about family doctor services, and to make the information more widely available. It will be made easier to change doctor. Steps will be taken to ensure that the public's comments are sought on local services and that their views are taken fully into account. Family doctors themselves will be encouraged to provide consumers with more information about the services that their practices provide.

Pharmaceutical Staff

24. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the shortage of qualified pharmaceutical staff in the National Health Service.

Mr. Mellor: We are aware of reports of a shortage of qualified pharmaceutical staff in some areas. I understand that the two sides of the pharmaceutical Whitley council are currently negotiating a new pay and grading structure for hospital pharmacists.

Nurses (Pay)

25. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of the cost of funding the nurses pay settlement; and what plans he has to fund it in full.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply by my right hon. and learned Friend to the hon. Member for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes) earlier today.

27. Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of the cost of funding the nurses pay settlement; and what plans he has to fund it in full.

65. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of the cost of funding the nurses pay settlement; and what plans he has to fund it in full.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Members to the reply given by my right hon. and learned Friend to the hon. Member for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes) earlier today.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the progress of implementation of the nurses pay award.

29. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on progress in implementing the recent nurses pay award and on his current assessment as to whether the funds allocated are sufficient to meet the cost in full.

Mr. Mellor: The Government have announced the allocation to regional health authorities of an additional £98 million to meet in full the authorities' estimates of the final cost of the nurses clinical grading exercise in England. This brings the total which has now been provided to meet the cost of this year's pay award for nurses in England to £731 million.

Regions have been asked to arrange for staff to be notified of their new grades as soon as possible and for payment of the new rates and back pay to be made by Christmas.

30. Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to ensure that the nurses pay award is beng implemented fairly by health authorities.

34. Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to ensure that the nurses pay award is being implemented fairly by health authorities.

38. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to ensure that the nurses pay award is being implemented fairly by health authorities.

50. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to ensure that the nurses pay award is being implemented fairly by health authorities.

Mr. Mellor: The Department has issued a range of detailed guidance to health authorities.

In addition, officials have worked closely with regional health authorities in monitoring district health authorities' implementation of the new structure. The objective has been to ensure the fair and consistent application of the grading definitions, in line with the letter and spirit of the agreement reached by both sides of the nursing and midwifery staffs negotiating council.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from trade unions and professional bodies with members in the nursing profession about the recent pay award.

32. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from trade unions and professional bodies with members in the nursing profession about the recent pay award.

52. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from trade unions and professional bodies with members in the nursing profession about the recent pay award.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Members to the reply to the hon. Members for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths) and Halifax (Mrs. Mahon), earlier today.

44. Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with the managers of health authorities about the nurses pay award.

61. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with the managers of health authorities about the nurses pay award.

71. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with the managers of health authorities about the nurses pay award.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have kept in very close touch with RHA chairmen and senior management over the implementation and financing of the new clinical grading structure for nurses.

Day Cases

26. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many day cases were treated in 1978 and the latest period of 12 months for which figures are available.

Mrs. Currie: In 1986, 1,050,200 day cases were treated in England. This was 87 per cent. more than the 562,200 day cases treated in 1978. Figures for 1987-88 are not yet available. Day cases in 1986 represented 14·1 per cent. of all patients treated (other than outpatients) in NHS hospitals.

NHS (Pay and Conditions)

28. Mr. Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about the pay and conditions of service of ancillary staffs in the National Health Service.

33. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about the pay and conditions of service of ancillary staffs in the National Health Service.

53. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about the pay and conditions of service of ancillary staffs in the Health Service.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Members to my reply to the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde (Mr. Pendry) earlier today.

Doctors (Efficiency)

31. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his Department is doing to reduce the differences in efficiency between different doctors.

Mr. Mellor: Value for money in delivering high quality patient services remains a key component of the Government's policies. In the hospital service current initiatives include promoting the wider use of Health Service indicators, the resource management initiative and the development of better methods for medical manpower planning.

With regard to family doctors, the White Paper "Promoting Better Health" proposed a number of important changes which would lead to increased efficiency in general practice including relating pay more closely to performance, more clearly defined terms of service, greater accountability, increased competition and greater involvement of other health professionals in patient care. In particular it is intended to encourage more efficiency and cost-effectiveness among family doctors in relation to prescribing and hospital referrals decisions.

Family Practitioner Service

35. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase the amount of information available to patients in the family practitioner service.

Mr. Mellor: As the White Paper "Promoting Better Health" (Cm. 249) makes clear, the Government believe that consumers need more detailed and more accessible factual information about family practitioners and their services. Family practitioner committee medical and dental lists will therefore contain more information and will be made more widely available locally. In addition we shall encourage the wider provision of family doctor practice leaflets.

The Government also believe that present restraints on advertising by family doctors should be removed, subject to proper safeguards, in order to make possible better informed choices by patients. We therefore welcome the announcement last May of the Office of Fair Trading's decision to refer the matter for investigation by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Dental Examinations

37. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will review current proposals to introduce charges for dental examinations.

40. Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will review current proposals to introduce charges for dental examinations.

64. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will review current proposals to introduce charges for dental examinations.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Members to my right hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) on 22 July at column 896.

NHS (Efficiency)

41. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what new proposals he has for improving the efficiency of the National Health Service.

Mrs. Currie: The National Health Service is not a business, but it has to be more business-like. There is still a huge gulf between the best and the worst in terms of efficiency, customer choice, standards, good management and clear decision-taking. The Government intend to spread the best qualities of the enterprise economy more widely throughout the National Health Service, and we shall be bringing forward proposals to this end in the new year.

Hospitals (Privatisation)

42. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to privatise National Health Service hospitals.

59. Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to privatise National Health Service hospitals.

Mrs. Currie: None.

Northern Regional Health Authority

43. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the level of funding available to the Northern regional health authority.

Mr. Mellor: Gross revenue expenditure in the Northern regional health authority has increased from £277·4 million in 1978-79 to £726·4 million (provisional) in 1987-88, the latest year for which figures are available. This is an increase of 161·9 per cent. in cash and 27·6 per cent. in real terms. The region has received a further real terms increase this year and it is expected that the level of expenditure in 1988-89 will be over 30 per cent. above the level in 1978-79.

Doctors' Lists

45. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how doctors average list sizes have changed since 1978.

Mr. Mellor: Average list sizes in England have fallen from 2,312 per unrestricted general medical practitioner at 1 October to 2,020 at 1 October 1987, the latest date for which figures are available. This is a decrease of nearly 13 per cent., and reflects the increase in the number of general practitioners.

In-patients

46. Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many in-patient cases were treated in 1978 and in the latest period of 12 months for which figures are available.

Mrs. Currie: In 1987-88, 6,619,354 in-patient cases were treated in England. This is 25 per cent. more than the 5,370,319 cases treated in 1978.

Association of Hospital Physicists

47. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met the Hospital Physicists Association, and when he plans to meet it again.

Mr. Mellor: Neither my right hon. and learned Friend nor I have met the Hospital Physicists Association and we have no plans to do so.

Children (Medical Care)

48. Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to ensure that children attending private schools receive the same degree of medical care as those at state maintained schools.

Mrs. Currie: Under existing legislation, health authorities have a statutory duty to provide school health services for all those pupils attending state maintained schools. This statutory responsibility does not extend to private schools which are responsible for securing their own health services for their pupils.

NHS (Ownership and Management)

49. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any proposals to change the ownership or management of National Health Service hospitals.

Mrs. Currie: A number of ideas have been put forward for changing the ownership or management of NHS hospitals. We are loking carefully at the options and will bring forward our own proposals in the new year.

Royal College of Nursing

51. Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met the general secretary of the Royal College of Nursing since his appointment; and what subjects were discussed.

58. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met the secretary of the Royal College of Nursing; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I last met the general secretary of the RCN by chance at a reception on 13 October when we discussed informally a number of matters.

Department of Health

54. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the first three months' operation of the Department.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Major improvements in the career structure and salaries of the nursing profession have been implemented in the course of the last three months. We have secured the successful implementation of the new clinical grading structure within the timetable set for the completion of the process. A new improved career structure will now be established for nurses and midwives, together with salary increases averaging 17·9 per cent. for the profession as a whole. I have allocated additional funds to the regional health authorities to enable them to fund the new structure in full. This was the largest regrading exercise in the history of the National Health Service, affecting nearly half a million staff.

On the Project 2,000 proposals for major changes to nurse education and training, significant progress has been made on outstanding work by the statutory nursing bodies, and my Department has advised health authorities of the implementation action expected of them in the coming months.

Pay settlements for 1988-89 have been negotiated within the Whitley councils for the vast majority of staff not covered by the pay review bodies.

Since July, we have seen the completion of nine major health building schemes each costing over £1 million.

On 27 September, my hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Health announced the allocation of an extra £3 million to health authorities in 1988-89, for measures to prevent the spread of HIV infection among injecting drug misusers, and from them to a wider population.

On 3 October we launched the biggest change in immunisation policy for 20 years, by introducing a combined vaccine against measles, mumps and rubella (known as MMR) for children in the second year of life and, for a "catch-up" period, at pre-school entry. This development offers a tremendous chance of stamping out, with just one injection, three diseases which lead to between 2,000 and 3,000 children being admitted to hospital each year, as well as needless deaths and babies handicapped by rubella.

A new prescribing information system for general medical practitioners was launched on 2 August. Known as PACT (prescribing analyses and cost), it is the most advanced prescribing feedback system in Europe and is the result of a successful collaboration between the Government and the medical profession. The information provided will make it much easier for all GPs to examine their prescribing patterns in details. The result should be more effective and economic prescribing, including an increase in generic prescribing.

London Ambulance Service

55. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he recently met representatives of the London ambulance service; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We have not recently met representatives of the London ambulance service. However, the Department is in close contact with the South West Thames regional health authority which manages the service on behalf of the four Thames regions.

Cost Improvement Programme

56. Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the cost improvement programme.

Mr. Mellor: Since we introduced cost improvements in 1984, health authorities have achieved cash savings worth £580 million a year to the end of March 1988 with further savings of £152 million planned for this year.

NHS (Review)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to complete his review of the National Health Service.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to publish the results of his review of the National Health Service.

57. Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on progress on the National Health Service review.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to publish the results of his review of the National Health Service.

Mr. Clarke: I refer my hon. Friends and the hon. Members to my reply earlier today to the hon. Members for Norwich, South (Mr. Garrett) and for Leyton (Mr. Cohen).

Transplants

62. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a further statement on the transplant programme.

Mrs. Currie: Provisional figures for the number of cadaveric transplants carried out in the United Kingdom during the first nine months of 1987 and 1988 are as follows:

	January-September
	1987	1988	percentage change
Kidneys	1,107	1,205	+ 9
Hearts and heart/lungs	214	269	+ 26
Livers	127	184	+ 45

Note: The totals refer to operations performed on patients entitled to NHS treatment.

Plans for implementing the recommendations of Sir Raymond Hoffenberg's working party on the availability of organs are well advanced. We are now concluding our consultations with health authorities and interested organisations about operational policies for organ donation. Detailed guidance will be issued shortly. We are also planning further publicity—in support of the transplant programme and have committed £250,000 to the campaign for this winter.

Congenital Handicap (Research)

63. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received since 27 July, regarding measures to safeguard embryo research into congenital handicap.

Mrs. Currie: None.

NHS (Estate Management)

67. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what conclusions he has drawn from the 40th report of the Committee of Public Accounts, "Estate Management in the National Health Service" (HC 481); and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The report draws attention to a number of significant factors in the management of the National Health Service estate and points to the lessons to be learnt by all those who have a responsibility for managing property effectively and efficiently. We are considering the report carefully there will shortly be a formal Government response and my hon. Friend will receive a copy.

Intractable Pain

68. Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make ear-marked funding available to health authorities for relief of intractable pain, including provision of dorsal column stimulators in appropriate cases.

Mrs. Currie: No. The funding of these services is a matter for individual health authorities who are best placed to assess local needs. The need for a dorsal column stimulator is determined by a consultant.

Resource Allocation Working Party

69. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the review of resource allocation working party funding.

Mr. Mellor: The National Health Service management board was asked to explore the scope for improving the way in which the national resource allocation working party formula measures relative need for health care across the country. Full details of the recommendations are contained in the board's final report on the review, which was published on 19 July. A copy is in the Library.

The review of the RAWP formula was already close to completion when the Government began their wide review of the National Health Service. The Government will consider this report within the context of this wider review.

General Practitioner Surgeries

70. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he intends to take to ensure that family practitioner committees conduct regular inspections of general practitioners surgeries.

Mrs. Currie: Family practitioner committees already inspect doctors' surgery premises on a regular basis and the Department will continue to monitor, during the course of FPC performance reviews, the effectiveness of their inspection programmes.

North West Thames Regional Health Authority

72. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he next plans to meet the chairman of the North West Thames regional health authority; and what matters he intends to discuss.

Mrs. Currie: My right hon. and learned Friend will be meeting the chairman of North West Thames regional health authority at the next meeting of regional chairmen on 16 November. He will be discussing a variety of topics which will be of interest to all the chairmen attending the meeting.

AIDS

73. Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how far HIV infection has spread from the identified high risk groups to the general low risk population; and what conclusions he has drawn as to the precise targeting of the Government's publicity campaign about the risks of AIDS.

Mr. Mellor: There has been a slow increase in the proportion of persons known to be HIV antibody positive who are reported to have acquired the infection heterosexually; this now stands at about 5 per cent. of the total. There is also some evidence of a change of behaviour among homosexuals, one of the identified high-risk groups. The targeting of the national publicity campaign seeks to take into account these factors and particularly to ensure that public awareness of the need to contain the spread of HIV infection is maintained at a high level.

Cancer Screening

39. Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the progress of the breast cancer screening programme.

Mrs. Currie: By the spring of this year each regional health authority in England had established at least one centre for breast cancer screening. The list is as follows:

Region	Centre
Northern	Gateshead
Yorkshire	Huddersfield
East Anglian	King's Lynn
Trent	Nottingham
North West Thames	Barnet
North East Thames	Epping
South East Thames	Camberwell, King's College Hospital
South West Thames	Guildford
Wessex	Southampton
Oxford	Aylesbury
South Western	Cornwall (Truro)
West Midlands	Stoke-on-Trent

Region	Centre
Mersey	Liverpool
North Western	Manchester, Bolton, Wigan

Guildford, King's College, Manchester and Nottingham have also been designated as training centres for staff in England.

Health authorities are currently developing their plans for the extension of the breast screening service to cover all eligible women by 1990 and have already opened additional centres in:

Region	Centre
North East Thames	Elizabeth Garratt Anderson Hospital
Wessex	Isle of Wight

The service will provide routine screening for women aged 50–64 and for older women on request. We are very pleased with the commitment which health authorities and their staff are showing towards this programme which will make a significant contribution to the health of the women of this country. I expect to make a further announcement soon about the next group of centres planned for opening in 1989 and 1990.

NHS (Income Generation)

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest information he has regarding the income generation pilot schemes in the National Health Service.

Mr. Mellor: Income generation schemes in the National Health Service are expected to produce about £11 million in the current financial year.

The Health and Medicines Bill will significantly increase the ability of health authorities to generate extra income. As a result, income from such schemes is likely to increase substantially during the next few years.

St. Thomas's Hospital (Cyclotron)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evaluation his Department will make of the cyclotron at St. Thomas's hospital; and if he will list any controlled trials that will be used for this purpose.

Mrs. Currie: The Cyclotron trust still has to work out with all those concerned the details of the operation and evaluation of this project. The Department will certainly be taking a close interest in the evaluation.

Brook Hospital, Woolwich

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he now expects to reach a decision on the proposed removal of the neurosciences unit from the Brook hospital, Woolwich.

Mrs. Currie: My right hon. Friend, the then Minister for Health (Mr. Newton) visited the Brook hospital in June, and following this asked the region and Greenwich district to provide him with further information. This has now been received and we hope to make a final decision soon.

Leigh House, Chandler's Ford

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are his plans for the future of the Wessex region's adolescent psychiatric unit at Leigh house, Chandler's Ford, Eastleigh; and if he will take steps to ensure that this unit is not closed until alternative facilities are established and running.

Mrs. Currie: The Wessex regional health authority is responsible for planning services for disturbed adolescents within the region. It is currently discussing future provision with its district health authorities and with directors of social services in Wessex, with a view to providing an improved and more easily accessible service on sites other than that at Leigh house. We have been assured by Wessex regional health authority that funds will continue to be provided to run Leigh house until alternative facilities are established and running.

Allergies

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list those hospitals and their respective health authorities or boards who have facilities to treat patients with multi-allergies;

(2) what resources are devoted within the National Health Service to the treatment of allergies; what steps are taken to ensure that such treatment is uniformly available throughout the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Treatment for allergies is widely available. The amount of resources devoted to it is for decision by health authorities in the light of their knowledge of local needs, priorities, and resources. No central record is kept of specific facilities or clinics for treatment of multi-allergies.

Sheep Dipping

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the incidence of cancers from overexposure to pesticides used in sheep dipping.

Mrs. Currie: We are not aware of any epidemiological studies into the possibility that over exposure to sheep dips, or exposure in proper use, has increased the incidence of cancer among those working with the dips. Sheep dips are licensed under the Medicines Act 1968 on the recommendation of the Veterinary Products Committee and are tested and assessed in accordance with the licensing conditions to exclude any product that would be carcinogenic. The major risk factor associated with cancer continues to be cigarette smoking.

Mental Illness

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the average cost per in-patient treated for mental illness (a) per month and (b) per year;

(2) what is the average cost per out-patient treated for mental illness (a) per month and (b) per year.

Mrs. Currie: For information on average treatment costs in 1986-87 I refer the hon. Member to the annual publication "Health Services Costing Returns", mentioned in my reply to him on 7 June 1988 at column 578.

Information on treatment costs in 1987-88 is not yet available.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children have been taken into care, suffering from mental illness in the United Kingdom annually since 1979.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that we do not hold this information centrally.

Charitable Institutions (Government Funding)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was his Department's total funding in the last financial year to charitable institutions.

Mrs. Currie: Total funding to the voluntary sector in 1987-88 was £35·1 million. In addition £10 million was paid to the McFarlane trust to help haemophiliacs infected with the AIDS virus.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what level of funding for research into myalgic encephalomyelitis his Department has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The main agency through which the Government support medical research is the Medical Research Council which receives a grant in aid from the Department of Education and Science. I understand that although the Medical Research Council does not directly fund any research in myalgic encephalomyelitis it does support some work in immune responses to muscle, nerve cells and related structures which may be relevant to the understanding and treatment of this condition.

The Department is not funding any research into myalgic encephalomyelitis.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what account he takes in allocating resources to the National Health Service of advice from the medical profession as to whether myalgic encephalomyelitis should be recognised as an illness; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Most people suffering from myalgic encephalomyelitis are treated by their general medical practitioners.

The funding of the NHS takes account of total demand and is not based on individual illnesses treated.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department has had any discussions with the authorities in other countries concerning the illness myalgic encephalomyelitis.

Mrs. Currie: The Department keeps closely in touch with relevant developments in other countries.

Antibiotics and Anti-depressants

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give details of the cost in 1987-88 to the National Health Service for (a) antibiotics and (b) anti-depressants; and if he will give in percentage terms such cost in relation to the annual Health Service budget.

Mr. Mellor: Antibiotics are generally regarded as forming part of the therapeutic group covering preparations acting systematically on infections, but costs cannot be identified specifically within the group. The net ingredient cost of drugs in that therapeutic group dispensed by pharmacists (through the family practitioner services in England) in 1987-88 was £149·3 million, and for anti-depressants £29·2 million. As percentages of expenditure on the family practitioner services, these costs were 3·89 and 0·76 respectively; as percentages of the cost of the whole of National Health Service in England they were 0·90 and 0·18 respectively.

Information is not collected by therapeutic group as to the cost of drugs supplied in hospitals or by dispensing doctors.

Environmental Illness

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the National Health Service budget is expended on environmental illness.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that we do not record National Health Service expenditure in a form which readily identifies and allocates costs to the primary causes of individual illnesses.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the growing provision for environmental illness in the private sector of medicine.

Mrs. Currie: It is not clear what the hon. Member means by "environmental illness". We understand that there are now some 200 clinics offering health screening, occupational health, allergy treatment and similar services. We welcome good quality services developed in response to public demand.

NHS (Performance Statistics)

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if in compiling further statistics about the performance of the National Health Service, he will distinguish between discharges from, and deaths in hospitals.

Mrs. Currie: Yes. As part of the new information system about patients using the National Health Service, such a distinction will be made. The first results from the patient administration systems which will provide this distinction will be available early next year.

Waiting Lists

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to what extent waiting lists have been reduced for National Health Services operations and consultations.

Mr. Mellor: The most recent figures, for March 1988, show that, on a comparative basis with previous statistics, the waiting list for hospital in-patient treatment stood at 678,800. This is 1·3 per cent. lower than March 1987 and almost 10 per cent. lower than March 1979. Information on waiting time for out-patient consultations is not collected centrally.

Pathology Manpower (Report)

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when his consideration of the Management Advisory Service report on pathology manpower will be completed; when the report will be made generally available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: A consultation paper on the future management and staffing of pathology services in the NHS has been sent to health authorities plus professional and staff side bodies. A copy of the MAS report has also been sent to these bodies. I have arranged for copies of both documents to be placed in the Library.

Cash Limits

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any changes will be made in the cash limits of his Department for 1988-89.

Mr. Mellor: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for Class XIV Vote 1 (Hospital and community health and other services, England) will be increased by £112,900,000 (from £11,199,082,000 to £11,311,982,000). This increase provides an additional £109,900,000 for nurses' and midwives' pay and £3,000,000 for further expansion of services related to AIDS and drug misuse in line with the proposals in the report on AIDS and Drug Misuse from the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs.

A further £100,000 for nurses' and midwives' pay will also be added to the cash limit for Class XIV vote 3 (Miscellaneous health services and personal social services, England) at a later date.

The public expenditure costs of these changes have been charged to the Reserve and do not add to the public expenditure planning total.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Russian Navy

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiative Her Majesty's Government propose to take in response to the submission by the Soviet delegation to the 43rd session of the United Nations General Assembly of detailed data on the Russian Navy, with a view to promoting exchanges of military information and confidence building measures in the naval field; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We took an initiative on military information at the United Nations General Assembly two years ago by tabling a resolution on objective information on military matters which invited member states to provide information on the whole range of their military forces and on their military budgets. We tabled a similar resolution again yesterday and look forward to a positive response from the Warsaw pact, particularly on military expenditure.

We shall have no difficulty in providing our share of the information, including on naval forces, as it is already freely available through such publications as the annual statement on the Defence Estimates. As regards proposals for naval arms control, the Government's attitude was set out in my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Putney's answer to a question from the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill (Mrs. Fyfe) on 28 June.

Mr. James Speirs and Mr. Peter Troughton

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what date and for what reason Mr. James Speirs and Mr. Peter Troughton left the service of the Crown.

Mr. Waldegrave: Mr. Speirs left Her Majesty's diplomatic service in 1986. Mr. Troughton left Her Majesty's diplomatic service in 1978.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Special Schools

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report the requirements on pupil-teacher ratios in special schools; and if he will introduce appropriate regulations for mainstream classes where special needs children are integrated.

Mr. Butcher: Current guidance on the staffing of special schools and classes is set out in the Department's circular 4/73. My right hon. Friend is presently considering a revision.

Deaf Children

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will request from local authorities information regarding the amount and nature of specialist support being provided for children with special needs through the machinery of statementing; if he will take steps to ensure that the help given to deaf children comes from qualified teachers of the deaf; and if he will make a statement regarding the availability of such teachers.

Mr. Butcher: Local education authorities have responsibility for meeting the special educational provision contained in a child's statement of special educational needs. Information about this provision is not collected centrally. The Education (Teachers) Regulations 1982 set out the additional qualification which teachers must acquire in order to teach classes of hearing-impaired children. The training of teachers of the deaf is recognised as a national priority area within the local education authority training grant scheme and sufficient resources are made available annually to maintain a regular supply of trained teachers.

If any local authority or school is having difficulty in recruiting teachers for this work, it would be helpful if they would inform my Department.

Education Reform

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list all the consultation documents, draft statutory instruments, circulars and letters to chief education officers which have so far been issued by his Department as a direct result of the passing of the Education Reform Act 1988, together with those likely to be issued in the foreseeable future.

Mrs. Rumbold: Consultation documents, draft statutory instruments, circulars and letters to chief education officers which have so far been issued by the Department as a direct result of the passing of the Education Reform Act 1988, and those likely to be issued in the foreseeable future, are as follows.

Teacher Training

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has to make changes in teacher training, including the provision of extra funding, in the light of the findings of Her Majesty's inspectors' report "The New Teacher in School".

Mrs. Rumbold: The teachers covered by this survey undertook their training in the early to mid-1980s. In the meantime the Government established in 1984 tough new criteria for the approval of initial teacher training courses and set up the Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education to scrutinise all courses and advise the Secretary of State on whether they satisfy those criteria. Over the period 1983 to 1988 HMI have also carried out inspections of all initial teacher training institutions. The report shows how right the Government were to take these steps. My right hon. Friend will shortly be considering what arrangements to put in place of the present course approval system when the Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education reaches the end of its term of office at the end of 1989.

Teachers

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, in the light of the findings of Her Majesty's inspectors' report "The New Teacher in School", he will reconsider proposals to allow unlicensed persons to become classroom teachers.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has made no such proposals. His proposals for reform of qualified teacher status are for existing non-standard routes, which include provision for untrained persons to be granted QTS with no post entry training obligation, to be replaced with a single licensed teacher route involving obligatory training.

Parent Governors

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will produce figures to show the number of parent governors on (a) existing and (b) previous school governing bodies who are also teachers by profession.

Mrs. Rumbold: This information is not available centrally.

Schools (First Aid)

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he intends to take, in view of population levels in excess of 1,000 in some secondary schools, to ensure that at least one member of staff at each school is first aid trained in order to alleviate the repercussions of accidents on school campuses.

Mr. Butcher: Responsibility for the training of school and college staff in first aid rests with the individual local authorities concerned. In September 1987 my Department issued advice to all authorities on first aid arrangements, re-stating a long-standing recommendation that a proportion of teaching staff at every school and college should receive first aid training. I am sending my hon. Friend a copy of this guidance and placing copies in the Library.

Cash Limits

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give details of any revisions to cash limits on his Department's Votes in 1988-89.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have today announced an increase of £14 million in grants this year to the research councils and the university grants committee mainly to enable them to provide additional or replacement equipment in support of basic science. Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, the following cash limit changes will be implemented:

Vote	Current cash limit	Increase	Revised cash limit
Class XII Vote 3	1,844,624,000	5,000,000	1,849,624,000
Class XII Vote 5	58,479,000	1,700,000	60,179,000
Class XII Vote 6	146,677,000	3,000,000	149,677,000
Class XII Vote 7	90,864,000	1,000,000	91,864,000
Class XII Vote 8	366,284,000	3,050,000	369,334,000
Class XII Vote 10	8,864,000	250,000	9,114,000

The increases will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to planned total public expenditure.

Spending Plans

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the Government's plans for expenditure on education and science over the next three years.

Mr. Kenneth Baker:

PUBLIC SPENDING ON EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

1. As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in his statement today, provision for education and science in 1989-90 will be £19,570 million. This total is £1,600 million or 8·9 per cent. higher than the provision for 1988-89 made a year ago. Details of the main changes from the earlier plans are shown in the attached table.

2. The Government's spending plans include: the addition of more than £300 million over three years for science; over £1,100 million in 1989-90 to provide a sound financial base for the new polytechnics and colleges sector; an addition of more than £100 million over three years for the universities; more than £550 million over three years for specific programmes supporting the implementation of the Government's school and college reforms; and planned local authority current expenditure up by £940 million in 1989-90, or 7·2 per cent. over plans for 1988-89.

VOTE EXPENDITURE

Science

3. I am allocating an additional £306 million to the science budget over the period 1989-90 to 1991-92 to strengthen the United Kingdom science base in higher education and the research councils. This substantial increase reflects the importance that the Government attach to basic and strategic science and their policy of redeploying resources to these areas from those near to the markets which are properly the responsibility of industry. As a special addition I am also allocating an extra £14 million for urgently needed equipment for basic science in research councils and universities in 1988-89.

4. The science budget in 1989-90 will be £825 million. This is an increase of 16 per cent. over the provision made for science in 1988-89. The planning figures for future years will be £837 million in 1990-91 and £855 million in 1991-92.

5. I shall be making a further announcement shortly on the detailed implications of the settlement for science; and shall be inviting the advisory board for the research councils to advise me on the allocation of the money now available.

Polytechnics and Colleges

6. The plans allow for current expenditure of £1,035 million and capital expenditure of £84 million in 1989-90 by the polytechnics and colleges funding council (PCFC). Provided that the polytechnics and colleges contain their costs and continue to improve their efficiency, this money should ensure that the new sector starts on a sound financial basis. It will sustain higher education and research in the institutions to be transferred next April to the PCFC sector, prescribed courses of higher education in colleges remaining with local authorities and certain payments to local authorities in respect of former staff of transferred institutions. Excluding additions for restructuring and inherited liabilities, the plans assume that funding will be held broadly level in later years.

7. Within the total of current expenditure, I have allowed for an earmarked restructuring fund of over £20 million over three years to help institutions attain affordable levels of staffing; for an additional £44 million over two years to deal with liabilities, for example for repairs and maintenance, inherited by the institutions; for the full estimated cost of some £35 million each year for the new sector's liability for VAT; for the forecast increase in student numbers; and for £1·5 million to support fund-raising initiatives in polytechnics and colleges. I have assumed that the selective initiatives already started in the sector will continue at broadly their present level.

8. I shall now seek the national advisory body's advice on the distribution of the recurrent grant between institutions. I shall pass that advice, together with any comment on it which I may wish to make, to the PCFC, to whom it will fall to take decisions early in the new year.

9. Subject to further consultation with the PCFC about the distribution of the £84 million available for capital expenditure, the plans include some £60 million for the purchase of equipment by polytechnics and colleges, both for teaching and administrative purposes. This should allow polytechnics and colleges to make good progress with replacing out-of-date and unserviceable teaching equipment and to meet more effectively the new demands of corporate status. The remainder is for building work, including that in progress on vesting day.

Universities

10. The plans allow for an increase of over £100 million in the funding over three years for the universities. Allowing for the completion in 1990-91 of the £155 million three-year restructuring programme agreed last year and some £20 million provided for the associated continuing costs in 1991-92, in particular for new academic staff appointments, the additions provide for broadly level funding in real terms during the period. The total available in 1989-90 to the universities funding council for recurrent grant will be £1,672 million. This includes an addition of £8·5 million to the university restructuring programme; £1·5 million to support fund-raising initiatives within universities; and £3·1 million to meet the continuing cost of implementing the 1988 increase in clinical academic pay. After allowing for these additions, the grant is some 5 per cent. higher than the corresponding figure for 1988-89. The grant also includes provision of £71 million linked to the pay settlement for academic and academic related staff announced on 5 March 1987: this funding will be made available provided that satisfactory progress is maintained on the arrangements for academic staff appraisal, probation and promotion.

11. In 1989-90, provision for the Open university will be increased by £4·2 million, compared with previous plans; and an addition of £3·0 million will be provided for the computer board.

Student Awards

12. Provision for student awards allows for the forecast increase in the number of mandatory award-holders. Details of the new rates of award and revised contribution scales will be announced later. Provision is also made for the basic tuition fee for courses eligible for mandatory awards to increase from £578 to £607.

EDUCATION REFORMS IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES

13. I have set aside some £90 million over the three years 1989-90 to 1991-92 for the development, introduction and monitoring of the national curriculum and associated assessment arrangements including the cost of the National Curriculum Council and the School Examinations and Assessment Council. In addition, I plan to support spending by local authorities over the same period. In 1989-90, I shall be supporting spending of £90 million through education support grants and £65 million through in-service training grants on programmes related to the implementation of my reforms for the school curriculum and financial delegation to schools and colleges. My plans for current and capital spending by local authorities allow for some further re-direction of resources in support of the implementation of my reforms.

LOCAL AUTHORITY CURRENT EXPENDITURE

14. The total provided for local authority current spending on education in 1989-90 in the Government's plans is £14,070 million. This figure reflects an appropriate transfer of resources from provision for local authorities to enable the Government to provide funds for polytechnics and colleges transferring from local authorities. Allowing for this transfer, the provision is £940 million or 7·2 per cent. more than the plans for 1988-89 as set out in Cm. 288. It represents the likely level of spending by local education authorities collectively, on the basis that they keep their costs within the level of cost increases in the economy as a whole. In addition, the education service will receive income from the training agency in respect of TVEI and work-related non-advanced further education in 1989-90. The total for determining the education component of the grant-related expenditure (GRE) has been set nearly 10 per cent. above the equivalent level in 1988-89 or £330 million lower than the total for expenditure provision.

Schools

15. The plans assume that local authorities will not reduce the pupil to teacher ratio below the existing record low level of 17:1. This will imply some reduction in teacher numbers as pupil numbers continue to fall.

16. The plans allow for substantial real increases in spending per pupil on education support staff, administrative and clerical staff and books and equipment, in support of the introduction of the national curriculum and local financial management. They also allow for substantial increases in spending on the repair and maintenance of school buildings.

Further and Higher Education

17. The student:staff ratio (SSR) in further education is assumed to tighten from 8·8:1 in 1987-88 to 9·4:1 in 1989-90 as local authorities and colleges make progress towards the national target SSR recommended by the joint efficiency study conducted by my Department and the local authority associations. The plans should enable local authorities and colleges broadly to maintain levels of spending on non-teaching costs in further education. It is assumed that local authority insitutions which offer higher education will continue to improve efficiency.

Administration

18. The plans allow for substantial real increases in spending on local authority administration and advisory services in support of the implementation of the education reforms.

Specific Grants

19. Within the total of £14,070 million, education expenditure supported by specific grants is expected to amount to some £500 million in 1989-90. The Government will provide grant of some £81·5 million in support of expenditure of £125·5 million under the 1989-90 education support grants programme; and up to £214 million of expenditure by local authorities on staff development will be supported under the in-service training grants scheme. The Government will also support spending on education through section 11 grant for Commonwealth immigrants and the urban programme.

LOCAL AUTHORITY AND VOLUNTARY SCHOOL CAPITAL EXPENDITURE

20. Capital allocations to LEAs in 1989-90 will be £352 million, broadly at the same level as in 1988-89 after allowing for the transfer of polytechnics and colleges. Local education authorities will also benefit from increased spending power from capital receipts. In consequence, gross provision for capital expenditure by local authorities and voluntary schools has been increased by £95 million or 17 per cent. in 1989-90, compared with previous plans for the same year.

21. The new provision will allow for new school places in areas of population growth, continuing progress with the removal of surplus places and sustained spending on equipment in the local authority maintained further education colleges. Additionally local authorities and voluntary bodies should be able to continue the programme of school building improvements begun in 1988-89. This will help schools to provide for the introduction of the national curriculum.

EMPLOYMENT

Women Workers

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will define the special consideration which will be given to women returning to the labour force; and what will be the definition of eligibility for the programme, in the light of the basic requirement to have been unemployed for six months or more.

Mr. Nicholls: Women (and men) returning to the labour force after an absence of two years or more for domestic reasons are eligible to join employment training straight away. There is no need to satisfy the normal eligibility condition, namely, being unemployed and held to be available for work for at least six months. Lone parents are eligible to enter through the normal eligibility route or as returners to the labour force. However, in addition, lone parents who have been in receipt of income support on an order book for at least six months, and whose youngest child is in full-time education, can also enter straight away. Childcare costs of up to £50 per week for each child are available to assist all eligible lone parents.

Skill Shortages

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement about proposals to deal with skill shortages.

Mr. Cope: The continuing strength of the economy is leading to increasing demand for skills. But it is primarily the responsibility of employers to meet their skill needs. The Government have increased their investment in training massively since 1979, particularly for young people with YTS and for the unemployed with employment training.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently unemployed aged between 18 and 25 years of age; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: In July 1988 (the latest available date) the number of unemployed claimants aged 18 to 24 years in the United Kingdom was 663,367 compared with 859,071 in July, a fall of 195,704, or 22·8 per cent., over the last 12 months.

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of those currently available for work in Derbyshire are unemployed, and what is the relevant percentage for each of the years 1983 to 1987.

Mr. Nicholls: The table shows the annual average number of unemployed claimants in Derbyshire expressed as a percentage of employees in employment plus the unemployed. Estimates of the self-employed, the armed forces and participants on work-related Government training programmes, also part of the work force, are not regularly produced for counties.

County of Derbyshire

Year	Unemployed[1] Claimants Per cent.
1983	12·4
1984	12·7
1985	12·7
1986	12·8
1987	12·1

[1] Comparisons are affected by changes in the coverage of the count.

Youth Training

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people in Newham are on YTS; what are the trades being studied; how many of those are on schemes in the borough; and how many are outside the borough.

Mr. Cope: I will write to the hon. Member with the information requested and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Benefit Applications

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures are taken by his Department when an applicant for unemployment benefit declares that he is available for work in an occupation for which there are vacancies in the area in which the applicant resides.

Mr. Nicholls: All applicants for unemployment benefit are required to be available for work without undue restriction. All recipients of unemployment benefit are encouraged to make full use of the extensive job-seeking service provided by the employment service local offices. The White Paper published in February announced that the Department would be progressively moving towards a situation where newly unemployed clients were interviewed by higher grade staff. Through longer and fuller interviews by staff of a higher grade clients will be given positive help to enable them to return to work as quickly as possible. Gradually as offices introduce the new system interviewers will have details of all vacancies which have been notified to the local jobcentre. During the interview the interviewer will, by consultation with the client, establish whether there are any suitable vacancies for which the client could apply. If so, arrangements will be made for the client to attend for an interview with the employer. This new system is being progressively introduced and will be fully in place by April 1989 when some 2,000 new client advisers will be engaged in this work.

Ethnic Monitoring

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether his Department's race relations advisory service has made further contact with the 47 major private sector employers who were actively considering the introduction of ethnic monitoring when visited in the period April 1985 to December 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Yes. The advisory service continues to work with a number of these employers.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) whether he will issue a circular to major private sector employers, urging them to comply with the recommendations for monitoring and positive action for the removal of race and sex discrimination in the codes for the Commission for Racial Equality and of the Equal Opportunities Commission, respectively;

(2) whether he has asked the Commission for Racial Equality and the Equal Opportunities Commission, respectively, to issue circulars to major employers in the private sector, requesting them to comply with the codes of the Commission for Racial Equality and of the Equal Opportunities Commission in respect of monitoring and positive action.

Mr. Nicholls: No. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State previously indicated in his reply to the hon. and learned Member on Wednesday 20 April, Official Report, column 474, initiatives of this kind are matters for the commissions themselves to consider.

Race Relations Advisory Service

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current budget of his Department's race relations advisory service.

Mr. Nicholls: The current budget for the race relations employment advisory service for 1988-89 is £577,297.

Young People

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether decisions have been made regarding the legislation covered by his Department's consultative document entitled "Restrictions on Employment of Young People and the Removal of Sex Discrimination in Legislation"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fowler: After giving careful consideration to the responses to the consultative document received by my Department the Government have decided to introduce legislation as soon as parliamentary time permits to effect the following measures.

Measures will be taken to reduce sex discrimination in employment. We have examined existing legislation to identify unnecessary requirements which involve discrimination. These will be removed. They include the outdated restrictions on women working underground in mines and on cleaning machinery in factories. Section 51 of the Sex Discrimination Act will be amended and section 7(2)(f) of the Act will be repealed to remove the protection they provide for discriminatory acts required by earlier legislation in the area of employment and vocational training.

In future the Sex Discrimination Act would override discriminatory requirements unless they are positively justified, for instance, to protect women in connection with pregnancy and maternity. We shall ensure that requirements will continue in force where we are satisfied, particularly on the advice of the Health and Safety Commission, that there are sound health and safety reasons for their retention. These include the regulations on women working with processes involving lead or ionising radiation, which might be damaging to an unborn child. As proposed in the consultative document, we shall also provide for certain single sex educational appointments to continue. These include the appointment of academic staff at the women's colleges at Oxford and Cambridge, in view of the continuing under-representation of female academic staff.

All the restrictions on young people's hours of work and related conditions of employment, including the associated record-keeping burdens on employers, will be lifted because they are outdated. The restrictions presently dictate maximum working hours; earliest starting and latest finishing times; minimum meal and rest breaks and holidays; and put limits on what weekend work, shift work and night work young people may do.

Regarding other restrictions on the kind of work young people may undertake, the Health and Safety Commission's recommendations were published on 18 March and the Government will be acting on that advice. This will result in a number of detailed adjustments which will include treating young persons over school-leaving age but under 16 in the same way as other young persons and the removal of some restrictions particular to certain industries. Restrictions on young persons working with dangerous machinery will be retained.

These measures will encourage flexibility in industry; extend employment opportunities for women and young people; simplify the legislation, and reduce the burdens on business. It is important that whilst retaining necessary health and safety protection, legislation on young people's employment and sex discrimination should not place restrictions on British industry's ability to compete in domestic and world markets; and that young people and women should be able to participate fully in Britain's growing economic success.

Young People

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement on progress on consultation on the proposals in the consultative document on the restrictions on the employment of young people and the removal of sex discrimination in legislation, to allow removal of restrictions on the hours of work of young persons and on the machines and substances with which they may work.

Mr. Fowler [holding answer 27 October 1988]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today to my hon. Friend the Member for Colne Valley (Mr. Riddick).

NATIONAL FINANCE

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to increase the threshold of inheritance tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend has no plans but the matter will be kept under review.

Savings

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to encourage the small investor to take advantage of any of Government-created savings schemes including personal equity plans.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Government intend to introduce a new national savings product in January 1989. The Government also continue to attach importance to personal equity plans as an encouragement to small investors to own shares.

Share Ownership

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any further plans for widening share ownership.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Wider share ownership forms a central part of the Government's plans. The continuing programme of privatisation will provide an opportunity for first-time investors to take a stake in British companies. The Government also continue to encourage wider share ownership through personal equity plans and the various employee share schemes that are available.

Personal Equity Plans

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of personal equity plan holders are standard rate tax payers.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret that the information is not available.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he is satisfied with the take up of personal equity plans.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Investors hold in excess of 350,000 personal equity plans at present. This is a significant number, though I would naturally like to see still more investors take advantage of the PEP scheme.

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to allow investment companies who administer personal equity plans to operate them as collective investment schemes.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Personal equity plans are designed to encourage small investors to make direct investments in British companies. The rules already allow some holding of unit trusts and investment trusts within a PEP. PEP rules are kept under review.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the cost-effectiveness of the current administration of personal equity plans; and what plans he has to assist investment companies in improving the administration of such plans.

Mr. Norman Lamont: A number of changes to the personal equity plan rules were made at the beginning of the year, largely in order to reduce managers' costs. The scheme is kept under constant review.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, as a means of reducing administration costs, he will take steps to allow the paying of personal equity plan dividends gross.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 25 October 1988]: I have noted my hon. Friend's suggestion. We keep the operation of personal equity plans under constant review.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost to the Exchequer of allowing front-end tax concessions on personal equity plans for basic rate taxpayers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 26 October 1988]: The cost would depend on the precise form of the tax concessions and the number of investors attracted to the scheme. If the concessions were generous, the costs could be substantial.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will consider ways in which costs of running personal equity plan schemes could be kept to a minimum; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will estimate the cost in revenue to the Exchequer of streamlining the administration of personal equity plans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 26 October 1988]: The PEP scheme is kept under review, including the need to keep down running costs, particularly for plan managers.

Income Tax

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many taxpayers constitute the top 10 per cent. of all taxpayers, on current data; at what income point a taxpayer is included in the top decile; and whether these data on the top decile include or exclude the claiming of tax allowances.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 28 October 1988]: It is estimated that in 1988-89 the top 10 per cent. of taxpayers includes 2·1 million single people and married couples, each with total income of over £23,000 per annum. The estimates are based on the income before deductions and personal allowances of all tax units liable to income tax.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to seek to change the distinctions for tax purposes in the treatment of a married couple and those living together as common law husband and wife; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: This year's Budget introduced a number of changes to remove the tax penalties on marriage which cause some married couples to pay more tax than they would if they were living together outside marriage.

Unpaid Income Tax

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer why he has established the rate of interest on unpaid income tax, in Statutory Instrument No. 1621, at 10·75 per cent. per annum from 6 October.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 25 October 1988]: The rate change follows recent movements in bank base rates. It is set by reference to commercial rates and reduced to take account of not being allowable for tax purposes.

Residential Homes (VAT)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to zero-rate for value added tax purposes bona fide residential homes run by churches or charitable organisations.

Mr. Lilley: Following the European Court of Justice ruling on 21 June that certain United Kingdom zero rates were illegal, Customs have been consulting with interested parties—including Church and charitable residential homes—about the implementation of that ruling.

Mortgages

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated extra sum to be paid by a person with (a) a £20,000 mortgage, (b) a £25,000 mortgage, (c) a £30,000 mortgage, (d) a £35,000 mortgage and (e) a £40,000 mortgage, as a result of the total increase in mortgage interest rates which have taken place since 1 January.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 24 October 1988]: The table shows the difference between the mortgage interest, net of tax relief at 25 per cent. which is payable on the basis of current mortgage interest rates and the amount payable if the interest rate at 1 January 1988 were applicable. The effect of interest rate changes on the amount of capital repaid on repayment mortgages is not included in these figures.

Size of home loan outstanding £	Increase in net monthly interest payable £
20,000	31·25
25,000	39·06
30,000	46·88
35,000	57·29
40,000	67·71

Inflation and Unemployment

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the information he has as to (a) the rate of inflation and (b) the rate of unemployment in each of the European Economic Community member states, Australia, Canada, Japan, Sweden and the United States of America in each year since 1980, with estimates where possible for 1988.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 27 October 1988]: OECD main economic indicators, published monthly, give inflation and unemployment rates for all the countries in question, the former on a non-standardised and the latter on a standardised basis.

BP

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, in the light of the decision to accept the recommendation of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission that on the grounds of the public interest in the United Kingdom, the Kuwait Investment Office should reduce its shareholding in BP to 9·9 per cent., he will explain the factors which led Her Majesty's Government not to take or retain a special strategic share in BP on the most recent occasion when it sold Her Majesty's Government's stake in the company; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 26 October 1988]: It would not have been appropriate to take a special share in BP last year, since it is a longstanding company which has always been in the private sector.

SCOTLAND

Hospitals (Fire and Safety Standards)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will name the hospitals in Scotland which are described by the Public Accounts Committee in its 40th report of Session 1987-88 (HC 481), paragraphs 9 to 13, as having inadequate fire and safety standards.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish Home and Health Department urgently followed up its survey of 1,463 hospital wards, which showed that 33 (2·2 per cent.) fell short of desirable standards.

The work on the relevant wards has been satisfactorily completed at Craig Dunain hospital, Inverness, and at the Royal Edinburgh hospital. Most of the recommendations have also been implemented in the relevant wards in the Royal Scottish national hospital, Larbert, and in Lennox castle, Gartnavel Royal and Leverndale hospitals. The remaining recommendations will be completed shortly. The Fire Inspectorate visits the wards on completion to ensure that all the work is satisfactory.

Housing Conditions

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many occupied dwellings in (a) Glasgow and (b) Scotland are below the tolerable standard at the most recent available date.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Pheasants

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the statutory powers which exist to regulate or control the setting up, development and expansion of pheasant rearing units with regard to (a) the suitability of the site, (b) the size of the units, (c) the odour therefrom, (d) control of any vermin attracted to the site, (e) fire precautions for gas cylinders for heating and (f) storage requirements for feedstuffs.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Statutory controls under the following enactments may apply. The exact controls would depend on the individual circumstances of each case.

Pheasant unit control	Statutory policy
(a) Suitability of the site (b) Size of the units (f) Storage for feedstuffs	Town and Country Planning (Scotland) Act 1972 Town and Country Planning (General Development) (Scotland) Order 1981
(c) Odour	Public Health (Scotland) Act 1897
(d) Control of vermin	Prevention of Damage by Pests Act 1949
(e) Fire precautions	The Highly Flammable Liquids and Liquified Petroleum Gas Regulations 1972

Housing Grants

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report all the statutory or discretionary grants that are available through local housing authorities, central Government Departments, SDD-funded organisations or any other bodies which directly or indirectly assist the building, improvement or repair of commercial or domestic property in Scotland, showing how much was awarded under each heading in each local authority housing area in Scotland for the last year for which figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not readily available and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Nurses

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report by health board area, those maternity units, and neonatal intensive care units, that regularly rely on agency nurses as bank staff to meet normal planned patient requirements in the areas the units serve.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No health board relies on agency midwives. In the quarter ended 31 March 1988 only 0·4 of a whole-time equivalent agency midwife was engaged in Scotland.

Midwives

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the number of fully qualified midwives in each health board area and show that figure as a percentage of the recommended level of fully trained midwifery staff for each board area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There is no centrally recommended level for midwifery staffing. Health boards set their own staffing levels according to their local circumstances. The table shows the whole-time equivalent numbers of qualified staff employed by health boards in hospital and community maternity services at 30 September 1987. Statistics are not held centrally by qualification and although the majority of those recorded are qualified midwives the figure includes a small number of registered nurses who have no midwifery qualification and who work in areas such as special care baby units. Also included in the table are about 700 combined duty nurses working in the community who are qualified midwives but who do not work exclusively in maternity services. Enrolled nurses are excluded.

Road Accident Statistics

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for the last five years the number of people killed in road accidents in which drink was involved.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The latest estimates of number of people killed in accidents in which at least one driver involved was over the legal limit of alcohol in breath or blood, for the five years 1982 to 1986 (the latest available), are as follows:

	Minimum	Maximum
1982	165	178
1983	129	141
1984	126	139
1985	111	116
1986	107	114

The available data may result in some double counting and it is necessary therefore to show minimum and maximum figures of the number of people killed.

In addition, the latest estimates of number of pedestrians killed who were over the same limit for the same years are as follows:

	Number
1982	111
1983	96
1984	103
1985	78

Health Boards (Regrading Reviews)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the health boards which have been asked to review their initial regrading and the reasons why.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No health board has been asked to review its initial regrading of nurses.

Hospital Services (Privatisation)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of all new contracts awarded by 30 September by each health board, by hospital, for (a) portering, (b) catering, (c) laundry, (d) cleaning and (e) other ancillary work; and if he will give the estimated annual saving for each contract awarded.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on contracts awarded between June and September 1988 is as set out.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the latest figures, as a percentage of services put out to tender by each district health authority, for (a) catering, (b) domestic services and (c) laundry; and if he will give the estimated annual savings.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No contracts for laundry services have been awarded in Scotland. The information requested covering contracts awarded so far for catering and domestic services is set out by the health board in the table. Thirty-seven contracts have been awarded; 26 of these to the in-house teams.

Female Prisoners

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average length of custodial sentence of female prisoners in Scotland in the first six months of the current year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Statistics on court disposals during the current year are not yet available. However, on the basis of prison reception statistics, the average length of sentence of females received into the penal system on direct sentence in the first six months of 1988 was 111 days. Females sentenced to life imprisonment or indeterminate detention are not included in the above calculation.

Terrorist-type Offences

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons in Scotland were charged with terrorist-type offences relating to Northern Ireland in 1986, 1987 and 1988; how many of those charged were released on bail; and what was the average period between remand and trial for prisoners refused bail relating to such charges in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is as follows:

Terrorist Offences[1]: Scotland

	[2]1986	1987	1988 (to date)
Number charged	8	2	0
Number released on bail	0	1	0

[1] Excludes persons charged with minor offences under prevention of terrorism legislation, but includes breaches of exclusion orders.
[2] Includes, under number charged, one person who was charged then convicted in court the following day.

Paramilitary Activity

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons have been (a) killed and (b) injured in Scotland in the current year as a result of paramilitary activity; and if he will break down the figures specifying whether the paramilitaries were (i) from western Europe, (ii) from Northern Ireland, (iii) from the Republic of Ireland, (iv) from other parts of the world, and (v) of unknown origin.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: From the information presently available, there were no such deaths or injuries in Scotland in the first 10 months of 1988.

Prisoners (Transfers)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prisoners were transferred from (a) Scotland to Northern Ireland and (b) Northern Ireland to Scotland in the current year; and under which section of the Criminal Justice Act 1961 such transfers were carried out.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: One inmate has been transferred temporarily from Scotland to Northern Ireland on two separate occasions, once under section (29)1 and again under section (27)1.

"Schools (Scotland) Code"

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will take steps to repeal paragraph 23 of the 1956 "Schools (Scotland) Code."

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The terms of regulations governing education in Scotland are constantly under review in the light of changing circumstances. If there are any proposals to revoke or amend the "Schools (Scotland) Code 1956" there will be full consultation.

Special Education

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of pupils in special education in each region and division who were over statutory school leaving age in (a) 1977, (b) 1982 and (c) 1987.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of pupils aged 16 and over in education authority special schools in each region and division is given in the table.

Teachers

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total number of teachers in each region or division who retired as a result of the premature retirement scheme by age and sex; and what were the comparable figures for 1977 and 1982.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information is not available centrally in the form requested. The table sets out the figures by age and sex for retirals of teachers in Scotland aged 50 or over by reason of redundancy or in the interests of the efficient exercise of the employer's functions for the years ending on 31 March 1978 and 1983 as well as the provisional figures for the year ending on 31 March 1987, the last year for which figures are available.

"Birds, Bogs and Forestry"

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what regard was had to the needs of agriculture and forestry and to the economic and social interests of rural areas by the Nature Conservancy Council, in making the proposals contained in its report "Birds, Bogs and Forestry", pursuant to section 37 of the Countryside Act 1968; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Nature Conservancy Council is an independent statutory body. Its report "Birds, Bogs and Forestry" sought "to present the conservation case" for the peatlands of Caithness and Sutherland. I suggest that the hon. Member should ask the Nature Conservancy Council what regard it had in preparing the report to the duty imposed by section 37 of the Countryside Act 1968 "to have due regard to the needs of agriculture and forestry and to the economic and social needs of rural areas".

My right hon. and learned Friend's views were set out in a statement on 25 January. He awaits the report of Highland regional council's joint working group, which is expected soon, before making any further statement.

Fishing Ports (Aid)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will extend the time limit beyond the end of October for applications for aid for fishing ports (EC ref. 4028/86), notified by his Department to regional councils, harbour authorities and producer organisations in Scotland on 14 October; and if he will seek to ensure that future advice on such matters is made available in Scotland at the same time as it is issued in other countries.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 31 October 1988]: Consideration will be given to replies lodged with the Department after 31 October 1988 and prior to a bid being lodged with the Commission. Where it is within the control of the Department every effort is made to provide such advice at the earliest opportunity.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support Rules

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many FB 23, "New Income Support Rules for People Under Eighteen", leaflets have been printed by his Department; and what was the cost of printing them;

(2) if he will now withdraw leaflet FB 23, "New Income Support Rules for People Under Eighteen"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: One million copies of the leaflet "New Income Support Rules for People Under Eighteen" were printed at a cost of £14,920. The leaflet, which was a temporary supplement to leaflet FB 23, has now been superseded by an October 1988 edition of that leaflet, "Young people's guide to Social Security".

Widows' Benefits

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will change those parts in his Department's leaflet NI196 concerning widows' benefits which misleadingly suggest that those under 45 years who receive widows' allowance would receive benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are currently considering the contents of this leaflet, which is due to be reprinted in April 1989.

Benefits (Fraud)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much benefit was fraudulently claimed during each of the last five years; and how much benefit was left unclaimed by persons entitled to it.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that it is not possible to ascertain the total amounts of social security benefits fraudulently claimed or left unclaimed, and no reliable estimates of them are available.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will state by year since 1980 to date the number of fraud investigators employed by his Department in the following sections, by region: claimant investigators, sector fraud teams, area fraud teams, special investigators and benefit fraud teams.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that information cannot be provided in the precise form requested. The Department does not employ claimant investigators, sector fraud teams or area fraud teams.

The following information relates to the number of posts allocated on the first of April each year, to local social security office fraud officers, board and lodging control teams, special investigators and benefit fraud teams.[1] No regional breakdown is available before 1983-84.

The number of staff allocated is as follows:

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether fraud investigators in his Department are given targets to reach; how they liaise with the police, particularly in respect of obtaining details of vehicle owners; whether any further confidential information is sought from the police by his investigators; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Department sets an overall annual target of benefit savings to be achieved as a result of fraud investigations. There are no formal arrangements for fraud investigators to liaise with the police in benefit fraud cases involving potential offences under social security legislation. In some cases, however, particularly those involving possible offences under general criminal law, the police may be requested to investigate. Local officers do not obtain information about claimants from police records. On occasions it may be necessary during an investigation for details of the keepership of a vehicle to be obtained from the vehicle licensing centre. Routine clerical arrangements are made for that purpose.

Child Benefit

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in respect of how many children child benefit is being paid; how many reside in households with an income in excess of £20,000 per annum; and how many reside in households with an income below £10,000 per annum.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of children in respect of whom child benefit was in payment at 31 December 1987 is 12,015,000. A breakdown showing estimates of the distribution of gross incomes of recipient families in 1988-89 was given in the reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) on 17 June 1988 at columns 371-72.

Pneumoconiosis

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what basis is used for the determination of industrial injury benefit due to pneumoconiosis; and if there are any plans to change this in the near future.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 27 May at column 418. Disablement benefit in respect of pneumoconiosis is payable according to the assessed percentage disablement. Assessments of disablement between 1 and 10 per cent. are paid at the 10 per cent. benefit rate, and those between 11 and 20 per cent. at the 20 per cent. benefit rate. Thereafter, benefit is paid in further steps of 10 per cent. up to the 100 per cent. rate, with assessments ending in the figure 5 or above being rounded up to the next step and the remainder being rounded down. We have no plans to change this in the near future.

Benefits

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people receiving benefits from his Department's office in Chesterfield have failed to qualify for the transitional payments scheme by failing to sign the required declaration when requested to.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret the information requested is not available.

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures showing the values of (a) child benefit and (b) child benefit plus the long-term national insurance benefit additions for the children of widows and invalidity pensioners in each year since 1979 (i) at current prices, (ii) at constant 1988 prices and (iii) as percentages of average male manual earnings.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is as set out in the table:

[1] Based on the movements in the Retail Price Index between the uprating dates shown to April 1988.
[2] Net average earnings are the estimates of gross weekly earnings less tax and National Insurance contributions at the non-contracted out rate.

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing each of the main national insurance benefits, for single people and married couples, at current prices, at constant 1988 prices, and as percentages of (a) gross and (b) net average male manual earnings in 1958, 1968, 1978 and each year thereafter.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my right hon. Friend to sections 5 and 6 of the "Abstract of Statistics for Index of Retail Prices, Average Earnings, Social Security Benefits and Contributions" (August 1988) published by this Deparment, a copy of which is held in the Library.

Severe Disability Premium

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will reconsider the rules concerning the severe disability premium so as to ensure that people are not deterred merely on the basis that they do not live alone.

Mr. Scott: There are already exceptions to the "living alone" rule for the severe disability premium. For example, the presence of a resident carer who is engaged by a charitable or voluntary body (other than a public or local authority) which charges the claimant for the carer's services would not preclude the award of this premium. We have promised to look at the detail of the premium structure in the light of the OPCS surveys on disabilities. Meanwhile, people who need to pay for domestic help or personal care, whether or not they qualify for the severe disability premium, can apply to the independent living fund for help with the cost.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by what day of what month he expects all backdated payments of transitional housing benefit to have been made.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since all successful applications, whenever they are received, continue to be backdated to April 1988, it is not possible to specify a date by when all backdated payments will have been made. Clearance of applications depends upon the time taken for local authorities to return inquiry forms to the transitional payments unit. Currently 105,000 inquiries are with authorities and as they are returned applications are processed and payments made without delay.

Hospital Services (Privatisation)

Mr. Dobson To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give details of all new contracts awarded by 30 September by each district health authority, by hospital special health authority, for (a) portering, (b) catering, (c) laundry, (d) cleaning and (e) other ancillary work; and if he will give the estimated annual saving for each contract awarded;

(2) if he will give the latest figures, as a percentage of services put out to tender by each district health authority, for (a) catering, (b) domestic services and (c) laundry; and if he will give the estimated annual savings.

Mr. Mellor: As at 30 September 1988 tenders had been sought for 98, 97 and 78 per cent. of laundry, domestic and catering services respectively. Estimated annual savings of £109·1 million had been generated from contracts awarded. A total of £28·5 million has come from contracts awarded to private contractors and £80·6 million from tenders secured by in-house organisations.

Tables giving the detailed information requested have been placed in the Library. Information on any contracts let for portering and other ancillary services is not collected centrally.

Social Fund

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for (a) loans and (b) grants from the social fund have been received by his Department's Woolwich office at the most recent convenient date; how many of these have been approved; and at what cost.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on social fund loans and grants received, processed and awarded, listed by local office is in the Library.

Mobility Allowance

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many appeals were received by his Department in each of the past five years against decisions by the mobility allowance unit not to grant mobility allowance to applicants; and what percentage of the appeals were successful.

Mr. Scott: The available information is as follows. It relates to decisions given in the relevant years, not to appeals received in those years.

Attendance Allowance

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many appeals were received by his Department in each of the past five years against decisions by the attendance allowance unit not to grant attendance allowance to applicants; and what percentage of the appeals were successful.

Mr. Scott: Applications for review of whether the medical criteria for attendance allowance are satisfied in individual cases are decided by the independent Attendance Allowance Board and medical practitioners delegated to act on their behalf. Information about review applications decided in each of the past five years is in the table.

Table
Attendance Allowance: Decisions on applications for review 1983 to 1987

[2] Successful reviews include those where an allowance is awarded for the first time, those where an allowance is increased from the lower rate to the higher rate and those where the period covered by a certificate of attendance needs is increased.

NHS (Review)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has yet completed his review of national insurance contributions for 1989-90.

Mr. Moore: I have completed the annual review under section 120 of the Social Security Act 1987. The proposals will take effect from April 6 1989.

Employers and Employees

As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer said in his statement earlier today, I do not propose to change the standard rates of contributions for either employees or employers, which remain at 9 per cent. and 10·45 per cent. respectively.

In line with the Social Security Pensions Act 1975, the lower earnings limit for class 1 contributions is to be raised to £43 a week, which is just below the basic retirement pension rate for a single person, which I announced to the House on October 27. The upper earnings limit is to be raised to £325 a week, which is slightly less than seven and a half times the new basic pension rate. The new earnings limits will replace the current ones of £41 and £305 respectively.

The reduced contribution rates for the lower paid will continue unchanged. The reduced rates of 5 per cent. and 7 per cent. for employees and 5 per cent., 7 per cent. and 9 per cent. for employers will be extended further; they will now apply to weekly earnings which fall below the ceilings of £75, £115, and for employers only, £165 (the previous ceilings were £70, £105 and £155 respectively).

Not contracted-out employees and their employers

Neither the employee nor his employer will have to pay any contributions if earninga are less than £43 a week. For people earning between £43 and £305 (the former upper earnings limit) there will be no increase for either the employee or his employer. In fact, owing to the increase in the earnings ceilings for the reduced contribution rates, some lower-paid employees will pay a slightly smaller contribution, as will their employers. For those employees with earnings above £305 a week, the maximum possible increase will be £1·80 a week. There will be no corresponding increase for employers since there is no upper earnings limit for their contributions.

Contracted-out employees and their employers

Some lower-paid contracted-out employees, and their employers, will have their contributions reduced because the earnings ceilings for the reduced contribution rates will have been increased. Some contracted-out employees and their employers will pay slightly more. Where earnings are less than the former upper earnings limit of £305 a week, the increase will be very small reflecting the fact that the raised lower earnings limit increases the band of earnings on which the higher non-contracted out contribution rates are paid.

Contracted-out employees with earnings above the old upper earnings limit (£305) will pay a maximum of £1·44 a week extra. Their employers will pay slightly less since the raised upper earnings limit will extend the contracted-out rebate to employers contributions in respect of earnings between £305 and £325 a week.

Self-employed people

The flat-rate class 2 contribution will be raised by 20p to £4·25 a week.

The rate of class 4 contributions, currently 6·3 per cent. will not be increased. The annual limits of profits between which class 4 contributions are paid will be raised to £5,050 and £16,900 from £4,750 and £15,860 respectively. Self-employed people who pay only class 2 contributions will pay an extra £10·40 a year in 1989-90.

For those self-employed people with profits between £5,050 and £15,860 (the former upper profits limit) class 4 contributions will be reduced by £18·90 per year in 1989-90, assuming an unaltered level of profits. For those self-employed people with profits at or above the proposed upper profits limit of £16,900 in 1989-90, the annual charge for class 4 contributions will be £46·62 higher.

Class 3 (voluntary) contributions

The rate of class 3 contributions will be raised to £4·15 a week.

Treasury supplement

The Government propose to introduce legislation as soon as possible to abolish from 1989-90 the Treasury supplement to the national insurance fund which currently stands at 5 per cent. of gross contributions. Abolition will not require any changes to contribution rates and will mean that national insurance benefits are fully financed by the national insurance contributions which earn entitlement to these benefits.

Employment protection allocation

There will be no employment protection allocation for 1989-90.

National Health Service allocation

The allocation to the National Health Service, currently 0·95 per cent. from employees and 0·8 per cent. from employers, will be increased to 1·05 per cent. and 0·9 per cent. respectively from April 1989.

The draft orders, together with a report by the Government Actuary, will be laid before Parliament shortly.

City of London Office

Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the new local office serving the City of London will begin dealing with income support and social fund claims.

Mr. Scott: The new City of London office, which has existed since January 1988, is expected to assume responsibility for administering income support and the social fund from 1 November. It will cover some areas previously served by the local offices in Bloomsbury and Westminster. Accordingly the social fund budget allocations to these other offices have been reduced proportionately and the money reallocated to the City. The new allocations are:

	Grants budget £	Loans budget £	Period of allocation
Bloomsbury	92,343	208,526	11 April 1988 to 31 March 1989
City	27,206	73,746	1 November 1988 to 31 March 1989
Westminster	71,429	169,017	11 April 1988 to 31 March 1989

Since 1 January 1983, 19 persons have been murdered in 16 separate incidents in the Armagh district council area by persons suspected of being members of, or of having links with, paramilitary organisations. Five persons have been convicted in respect of two of these incidents and they are currently serving life sentences.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Prime Minister if, in respect of each meeting of the European Council of Ministers over the last 12 months, she will state which Departments were represented and at what ministerial and official level and if she will specify separately at which meetings both the Scottish Office and other Departments were represented.

TRANSPORT

Hazardous Waste

90. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he intends to take within the responsibility of his Department to improve the safety of transport of toxic wastes, especially the transport by passenger aircraft of polychlorinated biphenols that on incineration can form dioxins and dibenzofurans.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Matters of aviation safety are the responsibility of the Civil Aviation Authority. We are advised that toxic wastes are regarded as dangerous goods for carriage by air. Regulations are contained in the International Civil Aviation Organisation's technical instructions which are based on the recommendations of the United Nations committee of experts for the transport of dangerous goods. They are designed to ensure that the safety of an aircraft and its occupants is not compromised. There is no evidence to suggest the present transport requirements are inadequate.

London Underground

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the chairman of London Underground concerning the easing of congestion on the Underground, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I have regular discussions with the chairman of London Underground about the relief of congestion on the Underground and in particular on the progress of the central London rail study which is addressing this problem.

Meanwhile we have approved the renewal of the Central line at a cost of over £700 million as well as other measures to relieve congestion, costing over £100 million.

Central London

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates he has of the growth of passenger movements in central London in each of the next five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The likely range of growth in passenger movements in the central area of London over the next five years and beyond is being considered in the central London rail study.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive a copy of the central London rail study; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: We hope to receive and announce the main findings of the central London rail study towards the end of the year.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total number of representations his Department has so far received about the proposed high-speed rail link to the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: About 300, mainly from people who are concerned that they might be affected by one of the proposed routes. We are encouraging British Rail to narrow down the options as quickly as possible.

Vehicle and Components Approvals Division

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish the latest annual report of the vehicle and components approvals division; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The certification work carried out by VCA staff makes an important contribution to road safety through checks on vehicle and equipment design and quality standards.

During the year covered by the report, further steps were taken to move to a businesslike footing with the development of unit cost controls and performance targets.

The VCA is a candidate for executive agency status, geared to providing a cost-effective service for motor vehicle and component manufacturers.

Copies of the report for 1987-88 have been laid in the Library.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

School Governors

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the number of parents coming forward as governors of schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information available so far suggests that a large number of parents have shown an interest in becoming school governors.

Schools (Local History)

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to encourage schools situated in the geographical county of Middlesex to provide suitable books on local history to enable pupils to become better informed about the county in which they live.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is for schools to decide what books should be made available in their libraries and for teaching. My right hon. Friend has no powers to prescribe particular books or materials for use in schools.

Higher Education

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received concerning the funding of higher education institutions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend receives many representations concerning the funding of higher education. His announcement on 1 November dealt with higher education funding in the years 1989-90 to 1991-92.

Universities (Restructuring)

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many universities in England and Wales have adopted academic plans in order to achieve a targeted programme of restructuring.

Mr. Jackson: Subject to the resolution of some minor points of detail in a few cases, the University Grants Committee has approved the plans proposed by all universities in Great Britain.

Enterprise and Education (Bolton)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he has taken to ensure that, following the launch of the enterprise and education initiative on 28 September, co-ordination is being achieved at local level in Bolton between Government Departments, local government departments and the private sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The local implementation of the enterprise and education initiative, in Bolton as elsewhere, is primarily a matter for the Department of Trade and Industry, which will fund the appointment of at least one adviser in each local education authority area to encourage the development of links between local employers and schools. The initiative itself is the product of co-operation between my Department and the Departments of Trade and Industry and of Employment, which are all agreed on the value of its aims.

Students (Discretionary Awards)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidance he offers to local education authorities on the criteria for the making of discretionary awards to students; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: None. It is for local education authorities to determine their own criteria.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he next expects to meet the chairman of the education committee of Kent county council to discuss education in Kent.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend has plans to meet the chairman of the Kent education committee.

Open University

Mr. Benyon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the funding of the Open University.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: In the light of advice I have received from the Open University visiting committee I am prepared to make available to the university an extra £12·9 million over the three financial years 1989-90 to 1991-92, beginning with an addition of £4·2 million in 1989-90. This is equivalent to an extra £3·5 million in the1989 academic year. The increase will be confirmed when I am satisfied that the university is taking the necessary action to make good deficiencies in its financial and managerial systems. The additions in later years will be contingent on satisfactory progress having been made.

I am grateful to the visiting committee for its thorough analysis of the university's financial position. My decision takes full account of their recommendations on funding and of their observations on financial and managerial control. A copy of the committee's report has been placed in the library.

HEALTH

Cyclotron (St. Thomas's Hospital)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what procedures were followed in assessing the application for a grant for the St. Thomas's hospital cyclotron.

Mrs. Currie: The application was the subject of meetings and correspondence with representatives of the cyclotron trust, and was considered in the light of our overall objectives and priorities for the National Health Service.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the organisations and individuals, other than his officials, from whom he received expert advice in respect of the St. Thomas's hospital cyclotron.

Mrs. Currie: No external expert advice was received before the decision was taken to contribute to the funds of the cyclotron trust. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has since received correspondence from the chairman of the United Kingdom co-ordinating committee on cancer research, and my right hon. Friend the then

Secretary of State for Social Services received comments from the chairman of that committee's collaborative group for head and neck cancer.

NHS (Costs)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the annual cost of the National Health Service, and if he will average this sum out over (a) each person in work, (b) each person in work or in receipt of an occupational pension, and (c) each citizen over the age of 18 years.

Mr. Sainsbury: The list of private companies which have been employed by the Department since 1983 to provide security guarding services is as follows:

Airwork Ltd.
Burns International Security Services (UK) Ltd.
Care Security Services Ltd.
Centuryan Security Ltd.
Custodian Security Guards Ltd.
Medway (Chatham) Dock Co. Ltd.
Pritchard Security Services Ltd.

Royal British Legion Attendants Co. Ltd.
Securiguard Services Ltd.
Securicor Ltd.
Serco Ltd.
Thorn EMI Electronics Ltd.
UK Security Ltd.

Security guards from these companies are employed at 18 military establishments. It would prejudice the security of these establishments to reveal their locations.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Seamount Ltd.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has concerning the recent collapse of Seamount Ltd.

Mr. Eggar: Seamount Ltd, a joint venture between Seaboard Offshore Ltd. of Aberdeen and Stanley Fisheries Ltd, a wholly owned subsidiary of the Falkland Islands Development Corporation, was incorporated in the Falkland Islands in November 1987. The company purchased and converted two stern trawlers to operate in the south-west Atlantic. The Falkland Islands Government have appointed financial and legal consultants to advise on a controlled rundown of the company, and have instituted a formal inquiry into the matter.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action is being taken in connection with the recent collapse of Seamount Ltd. and what is the current position in relation to the boats and personnel involved.

Mr. Eggar: The Falkland Islands Government have set up a formal enquiry into Seamount Ltd. The MV Mount Challenger and the MV Mount Kent are at present in Falmouth and Port Stanley respectively. Seaboard Offshore Ltd, which is responsible for crewing and management of the vessels, is running them on a care and maintenance basis until their future is decided.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much the collapse of Seamount Ltd. will cost the British Exchequer; and under which heading the initial finance of the company was guaranteed.

Mr. Eggar: The majority of the initial finance came from a bank loan of £4·8 million guaranteed by the Export Credits Guarantee Department. This could have implications for the ECGD. No other British Exchequer funds are involved.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Housing Benefit

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what the capital is judged to be of those residents in sheltered accommodation who have no other capital for the purposes of housing benefit other than their homes which they have leased to housing authorities in exchange for sheltered accommodation;

(2) what is the position of leasehold dwellings where the lease has been granted in exchange for sheltered accommodation for the purposes of calculating housing benefit, where the individual has no other capital asset.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since these properties remain at the disposal of the claimant at all times, they must be regarded as a capital asset, capable of being assigned a market value for the purposes of determining housing benefit. Where this value is below the capital cut-off of £8,000, the housing benefit entitlement will be assessed in the normal way, the actual rental income received being disregarded.

Rating Reform

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to publish details of the community charge rebate scheme that is to be implemented in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The Housing Benefit (Community Charge Rebates) (Scotland) Regulations 1988 have been laid before Parliament today. These provide for the making of community charge rebates by local authorities in Scotland during the year April 1989 to March 1990. The community charge rebate scheme will provide rebates of up to 80 per cent. People who are getting income support or have an income that is equal to or lower than their income support level will receive the maximum rebate. People whose incomes are higher may still be entitled to a rebate; for each £1 that their income rises, their rebate will be reduced by 15p. Everybody in Scotland who is liable to pay a full personal community charge or collective community charge contributions will be able to apply for a rebate, and their needs and resources will be assessed in the same way that claims for housing benefit are assessed now. There will be the same arrangements for taking capital into account, so people with capital over £8,000 will be expected to pay their full charge. In the case of couples, only one partner will need to claim rebate on behalf of both partners, but the rebate will be paid to both partners individually.

J Code

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will deposit a copy of the J code in the Library.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. It is not the Department's policy to disclose information relating to the security and control of instruments of payment.

Benefits

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has plans to extend the amounts of income that are disregarded for the calculation of housing benefit purposes in connection with war disablement and war widows' pensions.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. War disablement and war widow's pensions already receive special treatment with a statutory disregard of £5 per week in all the income-related benefits. For housing benefit local authorities have the same discretion now as they had under the old scheme to disregard further amounts of these pensions.

Alcoholics (Benefits)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he has taken to evaluate (a) the adequacy of the level of benefit payments given to people who have been evicted from their homes as a result of falling into arrears with rent following alcohol abuse and (b) the effectiveness of advice given to such people by officers of his Department at benefit offices in England and Wales.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None. Information is not available about people evicted from their homes in such circumstances. Should the hon. Member wish me to investigate a specific instance perhaps he would let me have fuller details.

Social Fund

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the amount allocated from the social fund as a sum per head of the claimants registered with the Department of Social Security at July 1987.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The amount allocated for social fund loans and grants is equivalent to the sum of £39·37 per head of the supplementary benefit liveload on 29 July 1987.

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the amount allocated to the social fund as a proportion of the expenditure on single payments in the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The amount allocated for social fund loans and grants in 1988-89 represents 94·9 per cent. of single payments expenditure in 1987-88, the last year of that scheme.

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the amount allocated for the social fund to Department of Social Security offices as a proportion of single payment expenditure for 1986-87.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The amount allocated for social fund loans and grants in 1988-89 represents 61·5 per cent. of single payments expenditure in 1986-87.

Family Credit

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures showing the proposed family credit ceilings in 1989-90 for each of (a) a married couple with one child under five years, (b) a married couple with two children under 11 years and two over 11 years, (c) a married couple with three children under 11 years and three children over 11 years and (d) a married couple with two children under 11 years and two children over 11 years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is as follows:

	Maximum family credit[1] at proposed April 1989 rates (£)	Level of gross earnings[2] at which entitlement to family credit runs out (£ per week[3])
(a) Married couple with one child under 5	40·90	138
(b) Married couple with two children under 11 and two aged between 11 and 15	74·00	210
(c) Married couple with three children under 11 and three aged between 11 and 15	94·20	254

[1] Maximum family credit would be payable where net income was £54·80 or less.
[2] Assumes an inflation-related increase in tax and national insurance contributions thresholds from April 1989.
[3] Approximate.

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of families with children who will be above the entitlement ceilings for 1989-90 family credit, but whose net resources defined as in "Low Income Families" are within (a) 140 per cent. and (b) 200 per cent. of their income support levels.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The low income families statistics, which used the concept of relative net resources, have been discontinued and the alternative measures of net income before and after housing costs have been introduced. Figures on this alternative basis covering the years 1981, 1983 and 1985 can be found in "Households Below Average Income", copies of which are in the Library.

Claims Processing (Outstation Work)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what discussions he has had with union representatives regarding outstationing work on processing claims to new social security offices outside London;

(2) if he will make a statement on the implications of outstationing work on processing claims for the future of the Lewisham inner London office and the Greenwich park inner London office.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are making detailed plans to implement the proposal, made in the "Business of Service" report published in June 1988, that work not requiring face-to-face contact with the public should be relocated from some hard-presed London offices. Officials have fully consulted trade union side representatives at all stages. We hope to be making an announcement setting out our plans in the reasonably near future.

Office Manpower

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the staffing levels designated by his Department for the Lewisham inner London office and the Greenwich park inner London office for the years 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91, respectively; and how many staff were in post at 1 October in each office.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Complements for the years 1989-90 and 1990-91 have yet to be determined. The present complement and the number of staff in post at 1 October 1988 are as follows:

	Complement	Staff in Post
Lewisham ILO	171	177
Greenwich Park ILO	170	172·5

Abbreviation: ILO—Integrated Local Office

Appeals Tribunals, Bradford

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list by name and nominating organisation all persons who belong to the Bradford panel for social security appeal tribunals.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The appointment of chairmen and members of social security appeal tribunals is the responsibility of the president of these tribunals, His Honour Judge Byrt QC, and the hon. Member may care to contact him direct.

Occupational Sick Pay Schemes

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the latest information he has of the coverage and characteristics of occupational sick pay schemes.

Mr. Scott: The Department has today published a report commissioned from IFF Research Ltd. on occupational sick pay provision by employers.

The report, based on a survey of both private and public sector establishments carried out in February 1988, contains detailed and valuable information about the scope and nature of sick pay cover. It shows significant growth in coverage since the last official survey in 1974. It also reports on employers attitudes to sick pay schemes and to statutory sick pay (SSP).

The survey found that 91 per cent. of the work force are now covered by an occupational sick pay (OSP) scheme. This compares with 80 per cent. in 1974. The increase has come particularly amongst manual grades, where 88 per cent. have OSP cover compared to less than two thirds in 1974. Coverage between men and women is 90 and 92 per cent. respectively.

Employees with OSP cover work for 56 per cent. of all employers. The remaining 44 per cent. of employers who do not provide OSP are predominantly small or very small employers.

The majority of schemes (83 per cent. private and 74 per cent. public sector) top up SSP to full basic pay. Payments for short-term cover are usually made either for a fixed period of up to six months or vary depending on the length of service.

The report shows that many employers now also extend sick pay cover well after SSP ends. A total 58 per cent. of all employees work for employers who provide some form of long-term sick pay. Typically such schemes have either a time limit or continue until retirement age. A number of schemes operate early retirement arrangements. The level of payment is either a percentage of salary or a flat rate payment.

I have arranged for copies of the report, which is entitled "Occupational Sick Pay Schemes", to be placed in the Library. It is also available for purchase from the Department's offices at Canons Park, Stanmore. An article about the report appears in the current issue of the Employment Gazette.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Football-related Incidents

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many exclusion orders have been issued for football-related incidents since August 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since 1 August 1987 the Football Association has recorded 1,089 exclusion orders.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many attendance orders have been issued for football-related incidents (a) between August 1986 and 1987 and (b) since August 1987.

Mr. John Patten: Information is not collected centrally on convictions and sentencing for football-related offences. The number of attendance centre orders made in the 12 months ended 31 August 1987 was 10,518; in the four months from 1 September to 31 December that year it was 2,983. Figures for 1988 are not yet available. Because sessions are usually held on Saturday afternoons, the attendance centre order continues to be a useful penalty for some football hooligans.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on co-ordination between the police and the Departments of Employment and Social Security in tracking down people to be arrested or interviewed, in connection with alleged benefit fraud; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No formal arrangements exist for liaison with the police in cases involving benefit fraud, where the usual course of action is for the Departments of Employment and of Social Security to investigate and, where appropriate, to proceed by means of a summons.

Prison Service (Directors General)

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the directors general of the prison service during the last 10 years had previously served as prison governors.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Neither of the holders of the post of director general over the last 10 years had previously served as a prison governor. However, the post of deputy director general has been held by former governors since its establishment in 1980.

Motorway Police

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review motorway policing and assess the case for a national motorway police squad; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no plans at present for such a review.

Airlines (Unpaid Fines)

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will estimate the amount of unpaid fines by airlines fined under the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act for allowing passengers to enter the United Kingdom on bogus papers; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what measures he proposes to take to ensure payment of fines by airlines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The total amount incurred by airlines under the Act at 27 October was £6·061 million. Payments totalling £3·264 million had been received by that date, leaving £2·797 million outstanding. The Treasury Solicitor has been instructed to institute civil recovery proceedings against four airlines with a poor payment record, and he is currently in discussion with the solicitors acting on their behalf. We will not hesitate to institute similar proceedings against other carriers who fail to remit prompt payments.

A separate record is not maintained of those payments which relate to the carriage of passengers holding forged documents. However, of the total of 8,502 notices of liability issued to all carriers up to 30 September, which include those cases where a subsequent demand for payment was either not issued or withdrawn, only 42—0·5 per cent.—arose because the passenger held forged documents, the falsity of which was reasonably apparent.

Firearms

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will publish the details collected in the survey of shop prices of new guns before 22 September 1987 on which he is basing his firearms compensation scheme;

(2) if he will publish the details collected in the survey of auction prices of guns before 22 September 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The formula for payments under the Government's buy-in scheme which I announced by way of a written answer on 17 May 1988 in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Bury St. Edmunds (Sir E. Griffiths) was based on a study of trade buying-in prices which included information from a leading auction house and retail prices obtained from various trade publications.

Drink-driving

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were banned from driving because of alcohol-related offences in the Bolton area in 1987 and in 1988 to date.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The latest available information relates to 1986, when 389 disqualifications were imposed at courts in the petty sessional division of Bolton and at the Bolton Crown Court for offences of driving and so on after consuming alcohol or taking drugs.

Broadcasting

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy that, following deregulation, licences will not be granted to any radio station or consortium containing persons who have been convicted of broadcasting illegally during the 10 years prior to such a licence application being made.

Mr. Hurd: There is a good case for a disqualification of this kind. Unlawful broadcasting causes interference to other users of the radio spectrum, including safety of life services, creates unfair competition to authorised broadcasters and imposes unnecessary additional costs on the industry. I have today announced, in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Surbiton (Mr. Tracey), my intention to make additional frequencies available to the IBA for community radio in advance of broadcasting legislation. It will be open to anyone previously but no longer involved in unlawful broadcasting to apply for such a contract. But it is not acceptable, especially when new broadcasting opportunities are being opened up, for those continuing to act outside the law to be able to compete in due course on equal terms for Radio Authority licences with those who have respected the law.

I accordingly propose to include in the legislative proposals I outlined on 19 January at columns 647-49 a provision making it a condition of all Radio Authority licences that the licensee neither has a conviction after 1 January 1989 for any offence under the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949 or the Marine and Broadcasting (Offences) Act 1967 connected with the operation or running of an unlicensed broadcasting station within five years of the date of an application for such a licence nor employs such a person in the activities covered by the licence.

Mr. Tracey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has yet reached any conclusion on the Independent Broadcasting Authority's proposals to establish 20 community radio stations under the Broadcasting Act 1981; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The IBA's proposals are a positive step towards the new radio arrangements which I outlined on 19 January at columns 647-49. They provide a way, in advance of new legislation, of broadening the choice available to radio listeners. I am therefore glad to make frequencies available, and have asked the IBA to begin detailed planning, in consultation with my Department and the Department of Trade and Industry, for the introduction as soon as practicable of additional services.

Competition between the new community radio stations and the IBA's present contractors must be fair within the constraints of the Broadcasting Act 1981. In advertising additional contracts, the IBA will accordingly make clear its willingness to consider applications from existing contractors proposing to sub-contract or otherwise work in association with new entrant groups. This form of co-operation may provide useful experience for certain kinds of broadcasting under the supervision of the Radio Authority when it is established. Where additional services are established they will be expected to make a realistic contribution to regulatory costs with a corresponding reduction in present ILR rentals. The IBA will also take account of the programme output of additional services in considering the requirements on its present contractors.

With these safeguards I believe that the IBA's proposals will benefit the radio industry as a whole, provide valuable new broadcasting opportunities for minority communities and enhance listener choice as far as is practicable in advance of the major changes needing legislation which I outlined on 19 January.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sole (Irish Sea)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking against the French Government to seek compensation following their over-fishing in excess of their quota of sole in the Irish sea; and if he will make a statement on how any such compensation will be allocated to Welsh fishermen who have been stopped from fishing for sole in the Irish sea until the end of the year.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The early closure of the Irish sea sole fishery was due to overfishing by the Irish and Belgian fleets rather than the French. The United Kingdom and France will consequently receive compensation from Ireland and Belgium, in accordance with the procedures set out in the compensation regulation of 99 tonnes and 3 tonnes respectively. We shall consider with the area VII industry advisory committee how best to manage the fishing next year to provide additional fishing opportunities for the sectors directly disadvantaged by the early closure.

EEC (UK Expenditure)

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state the amount of United Kingdom expenditure on the EEC as a percentage of United Kingdom gross domestic product; and what equivalent information he has about such expenditure by other EEC countries in relation to their respective gross domestic products.

Mr. Brooke: I have been asked to reply.

Based on member states' gross contributions (after abatement) in the 1988 budget (as amended), expenditure as a percentage of estimated GNP for each country is as follows:

Member states	Percentage GNP
Belgium	1·47
Denmark	1·11
Germany	1·16
Greece	0·98
Spain	1·17
France	1·20
Ireland	1·43
Italy	0·99
Luxembourg	1·09
Netherlands	1·47
Portugal	1·34
United Kingdom	0·80

Source: European Commission documents.

The autum statement contains an estimate of our net payments to Community institutions in 1988-89 of £950 million. This is around 0·2 per cent. of United Kingdom GNP. Information on other member states' net contributions is not readily available.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many areas of special scientific interest have been declared in Northern Ireland under the terms of the Nature Conservation and Amenity Lands (Northern Ireland) Order 1985.

Mr. Needham: To date, 20.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what reasons the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland excluded the area known as BP1 when confirming the Inner Belfast Lough area of special scientific interest.

Mr. Needham: When the Inner Belfast Lough area of special scientific interest was confirmed on 28 April 1988 the pool known as BP1, which had been very largely infilled prior to the declaration, was removed from the ASSI since, in addition to the area being heavily altered, the pressures for development were such as to mitigate against its value as part of the ASSI. The area concerned is prime development land and likely to be required for port-related facilities by the Belfast harbour commissioners. In the circumstances the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland had to consider the conflicting interests of important commercial development and the conservation of this relatively small part of the ASSI.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if non-scientific criteria were taken into account during consideration of the confirmation on the Inner Belfast Lough area of special scientific interest.

Mr. Needham: Yes.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland has any plans to designate additional areas of special scientific interest within Belfast Lough.

Mr. Needham: No, however the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland is considering the declaration of further areas of special scientific interest on the north and south shores of Belfast Lough.

Planning Applications (Single Dwellings)

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many planning applications for single dwellings in rural areas were received by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland during 1987.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many planning applications for single dwellings within the area of special control were lodged in Northern Ireland during 1987; and how many of these received permission.

Mr. Needham: A total of 1,482. Of these, 866 were approved.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many appeals were received by the Planning Appeals Commission in Northern Ireland during 1987; and how many of these were upheld.

Mr. Needham: A total of 378 appeals were received during 1987; however, only 269 appeals were heard and, of these, 82 were upheld.

Vehicle Tests

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish details of the average waiting time between an application for an MOT test and the test itself, at each of the approved test centres in Northern Ireland.

(1) To introduce a series of improved engineering procedures for the assessment and treatment of the structural condition of roads.
(2) To investigate the implications of adopting a positive abandonment policy in respect of lowly trafficked rural routes.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he intends to publish the Snaith report.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 31 October 1988]: This report was commissioned by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland as an internal document and is not being released.

Roads (Abandonment Notices)

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if, in circumstances where an abandonment notice has been served on land and property owners in relation to the proposed abandonment of a road, a clear statement of the relevant procedures has been issued to each land and property owner; and if he will publish this notice of procedures in the Official Report.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 31 October 1988]: There is no statutory requirement for the Department of Environment for Northern Ireland to serve notice of its intention to abandon a road on land or property owners, but it is required to publish such a notice in the local press. However, in addition to fulfilling this statutory requirement, departmental officials consult land and property owners on an informal basis prior to the publication of the notice and advise them of their statutory rights of objection.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many abandonment notices have been served in respect of roads in each of the 26 district council areas in the period since 1 January.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 1 November 1988]: The information is as follows:

SCOTLAND

Ethnic Monitoring

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether there are any people from ethnic minorities in unified grade I, unified grade II, unified grade III, unified grade IV, unified grade V, unified grade VI or unified grade VII, respectively, in his Department.

Mr. Rifkind: None of the staff in unified grades 1 to 7 who responded to my Department's survey of the ethnic origins of staff described themselves as belonging to an ethnic minority.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what sex is the equal opportunities officer appointed by his Department; and if he or she is a member of an ethnic minority;

(2) whether the equal opportunities officer appointed in 1984 is still holding that office; and whether that person is (a) male or female or (b) a member of an ethnic minority.

Mr. Rifkind: The equal opportunities officer appointed in my Department in 1984 was female as is her successor. Neither is a member of an ethnic minority.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has now completed the evaluation of the voluntary survey of the ethnic origins of staff carried out by his Department; and whether he will make it his policy to place a copy of the results of the survey and of his evaluation in the Library.

Mr. Rifkind: The results of the voluntary survey carried out on a nationwide basis will be published by the Cabinet Office and a copy of the report will be placed in the House of Commons Library. That report will include figures for my Department. The evaluation was informal; there is no evaluation report.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether ethnic monitoring has now been introduced in the recruitment procedures of his Department.

Mr. Rifkind: Most of my Department's recruitment is done on its behalf by the Civil Service Commission and the Inland Revenue, and that is all subject to ethnic monitoring. Monitoring of recruitment carried out by the Department itself will now begin in January 1989. It had been planned for autumn 1988, but this has not proved possible.

Teachers (First Aid)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what provision is made for teaching first aid to schoolteachers who have the responsibility for supervising schoolchildren engaged in sporting activities as part of the school curriculum;

(2) what arrangements he has made for the recording of accidents to schoolchildren while engaged in sporting activities as part of the school curriculum;

(3) what was the number of accidents occurring to schoolchildren while engaged in sporting activities as part of the school curriculum for the last five years for which information is available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: All physical education students undertake a course in sports medicine which is largely training in first aid. The majority of training courses for primary teachers also include instruction in first aid. It is the responsibility of education authorities to ensure that teachers continue to be adequately trained and to consider how best to record accidents to schoolchildren engaged in sporting activities as part of the school curriculum. I regret that information on the number of such accidents is not held centrally.

Trunk Road Improvements

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the total expenditure in Scotland in each of the past 10 years on trunk road improvement; and what has been the level of grant in each year from the European regional development fund.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is as follows:

Financial year	Expenditure £ million new construction and improvement	Receipts £ million from European Regional Development Fund
1978-79	58·6	Nil
1979-80	68·0	2·3
1980-81	72·2	2·5
1981-82	72·3	3·5
1982-83	81·3	2·2
1983-84	71·8	1·9
1984-85	84·7	6·0
1985-86	87·8	3·3
1986-87	79·2	2·2
1987-88	94·6	1·3

Council of Ministers

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will (i) give details of each meeting of the European Council of Ministers attended by his Department over the last 12 months, (ii) state the issues dealt with at these meetings and (iii) list the names and status of ministers and the grades of officials who attended these meetings.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The United Kingdom delegations to meetings of the European Council—which deal with a range of issues—represent the United Kingdom as a whole.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Training

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current size of the client group for employment training.

Mr. Nicholls: All people aged 18 to 59 inclusive who have been unemployed and available for work for six months or longer are eligible to join employment training. In addition, some other people who have been out of work for shorter periods are also eligible to join. At 14 July 1988, some 1,250,000 18 to 59-year-olds had been registered as unemployed for six months or longer. All these people, together with some others, will be eligible for employment training.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will introduce regulations to ensure that local authorities and other agencies administering the employment training scheme recruit only tutors and supervisors who can demonstrate an appropriate qualification or relevant experience in the subject in the teaching of which they are involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: It is vital that the people who organise and deliver employment training have the necessary skills and competence to do so. To that end, training agents and training managers will need to meet stringent criteria in this area as part of the process of obtaining approved training agent or training manager status—without which they will not be able to continue with employment training. At the same time, considerable help is being given to assist training agents and managers to develop the skills of their staff. For the remainder of this year, over £6 million is available for that purpose, with some £11·5 million in 1989-90.

I am satisfied that these measures will help ensure that training agents and training managers to develop their staff so that the necessary standards are met.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total cost, to date (a) of establishing ET in the Bradford travel-to-work area and (b) of promoting and publicising ET in the area; and what is the estimated total of both costs over the next six months in Bradford.

Mr. Nicholls: It is estimated that expenditure on employment training in the Bradford travel-to-work area up to the end of October is some £480,000. This figure excludes the cost of income support and training agency administrative costs. The estimated expenditure over the next six months is likely to be in the region of £2 million. A budget of around £36,000 has been allocated for marketing employment training in the Bradford area until the end of this financial year. In addition, the area will continue to benefit from national advertising campaigns and from nationally produced publicity materials.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many persons, to date, living in the Bradford travel-to-work area, have accepted places on ET; how many ET places in Bradford are now vacant; and if he will list under broad headings the type of training available in vacant ET places.

Mr. Lee: Information based on the residence of trainees is not available. However, in the Bradford travel-to-work area at 28 October 1988, some 880 people had completed action plans with training agents and some 770 people were in training with training managers. A further 750 training places are available to trainees covering a wide range of occupations and including opportunities in construction, retailing, hotels and catering and office skills.

YTS

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if a young person in receipt of the YTS bridging allowance may undertake voluntary work while they are awaiting a placement on YTS.

Mr. Cope: Yes, provided a young person is available for interviews when required and is prepared to start on a YTS course at any time.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the latest results from the 100 per cent. follow up survey of YTS leavers, giving the young people's full responses to the question of "what are you doing now?"

Mr. Cope: The latest results from the 100 per cent. follow-up survey of YTS leavers in the period May 1986 to April 1988 are as follows:

	Per cent.
In a job	60·3
of which
with same employer	25·2
with a different employer	31·6
part time job	3·5
Unemployed	21·3
On another YTS scheme	11·3
On a full time course	3·3
Doing something else	3·2
Not answered	0·5

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether young people who register for the YTS bridging allowance are required to be available for work; and whether they have to complete the UB671 form and satisfy all the availability for work conditions applied to unemployed adults.

Mr. Cope: No. Young people who apply for the YTS bridging allowance are required to complete form BA1 undertaking that they are prepared to accept an offer of a place on YTS. They are free to look for work while receiving the allowance.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many YTS places are currently vacant in the Bradford travel-to-work area; and what action is being taken to provide YTS places in the most popular training areas, such as electronics, vehicle repair and the caring professions.

Mr. Cope: On 13 October, there were 866 YTS places vacant in the Bradford travel-to-work area. There are currently two information technology centres based in Bradford and Shipley. There are three large schemes which specifically cover vehicle maintenance. There is also sufficient provision available to meet different demands in the caring professions, including child care and care of the elderly.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people, aged 16 and 17 years, who left school in Bradford in the current year, he estimates (a) have accepted a YTS place and (b) obtained employment.

Mr. Cope: At 13 October, it is provisionally estimated that approximately 1,900 school leavers in Bradford have entered YTS in 1988 and 1,800 have gained employment.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people, aged 16 and 17 years, who left school in Bradford in the current year, who have not obtained a YTS place or employment, are not in receipt of benefit or other income.

Mr. Cope: This information is not available.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will publish the expected on cost of YTS trainee allowances for 16 and 17-year-olds in the current financial year.

Mr. Cope [holding answer Tuesday 1 November]: Grants of public funds to YTS managing agents are intended as a contribution to the overall costs of running YTS schemes. Employers and work experience providers also contribute to the costs of the scheme. It is therefore not possible to answer the question in this form. The current YTS allowances are £29·50 for first-year trainees and £35 for second-year trainees.

Community Programme

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many entrants there were to the community programme in the 12 months to April, in the 12 months to July and in the final six months of the programme; and what proportion were (i) to full time places, (ii) men, (iii) single, (iv) aged over 25 years, (v) unemployed for over 12 months and (vi) formerly benefit claimants.

Mr. Nicholls: In the 12 months to April 1988 there were 266,996 entrants to the community programme. In the 12 months to July 1988, there were 247,034 entrants. Their characteristics were as follows:

	April per cent.	July per cent.
Full time	11·4	11·2
Male	74·3	74·1
Single	70·2	68·1
Over 25	47·3	50·4
Unemployed over 12 months	87·1	88·4
Former benefit claimants	96·1	95·7

In the final six months of the programme (March—August 1988), there were 106,356 entrants. Characteristics for these entrants are not available separately.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many individuals, previously employed as supervisors and key workers in the community programme, have been made redundant since January 1988; how many claims for help with redundancy payments by CP agencies and sponsors the Training Commission/Training Agency have paid out in that same period; and what is the total amount that the TC/TA has paid out in redundancy compensation for the community programme since January.

Mr. Nicholls: £494,807·28 was reimbursed to community programme agents and sponsors for redundancy payments during the period January 1988 to September 1988. The remaining information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many community programme workers have transferred to employment training benefit plus arrangements; whether they are counted as new entrants to the employment training scheme; and how many people have started on and left the employment training training allowance since September.

Mr. Nicholls: Information on the number of community programme participants who have transferred to employment training and the number of people that have started on and left the programme is not yet available.

Community programme workers who transfer to employment training are not counted as new entrants.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has plans to extend the community programme to applicants who fail to qualify for unemployment benefit or income support.

Mr. Nicholls: The community programme has been superseded by employment training which started on 5 September and represents a major investment in improving the work skills of long-term unemployed people. Receipt of unemployment benefit or income support is not a requirement for entry to employment training, although entrants will normally need to have been unemployed and available for work for 26 weeks or more.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what further proposals he has to deal with the unemployment among young people in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer Monday 31 October]: The economic growth flowing from the Government's economic policies has had a dramatic impact on youth unemployment. Unemployment amongst the under-25s has fallen by 37 per cent. in the last two years and is now at its lowest level for more than five years. All unemployed people under 18 have the guarantee of an offer of a YTS place. In addition, those people aged 18 to 24 who have been out of work for six to 12 months have a guarantee of an offer of help back into work. These measures provide the most comprehensive support ever available for unemployed young people in this country.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what further proposals he has to deal with unemployment in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer Monday 31 October]: We will continue to give priority to the sound economic policies which have encouraged economic growth and reduced unemployment by 934,000 since July 1986. On 5 September, employment training was launched to provide long-term unemployed people with the skills training they need to compete effectively for the many job vacancies which exist across the country.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Public Record Office

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Attorney-General why the Public Record Office no longer provides photocopies of documents to postal inquirers.

The Attorney-General: The Public Record Office provides photocopies of documents in accordance with sections 2(4)(d) and 5(3) of the Public Records Act 1958. In the face of increasing demand, the office's search department places most emphasis on assisting visitors in person to the office and on work which benefits numbers of readers rather than individuals. It is therefore unable to undertake lengthy searches on behalf of postal inquirers, but it will identify documents for photocopying provided full references are supplied and no more than three items are involved. Where these conditions are not met, the inquirer is referred to the services of record agents, or advised to visit the Public Record Office.

Trials

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list by year for each of the past 10 years and for the current year to the most convenient date, the number of cases where a defendant has introduced a new line of defence during a trial not previously mentioned to the police in (a) England and Wales and (b) Northern Ireland distinguishing where possible between those offences which were terrorist-related or scheduled offences and otherwise, showing those which were terrorist or scheduled offences associated with the current disturbances in Northern Ireland.

The Attorney-General: Records necessary to provide information in the form requested by the hon. Gentleman are not maintained.

WALES

Regional Assistance

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each Welsh district the number of applications for regional selective assistance received, the number granted and total value awarded since 1 April.

Mr. Peter Walker: The following table gives by Welsh local authority districts, wholly or partly within assisted areas, the number of regional selective assistance applications received and the number and value of offers made between 1 April and 28 October 1988. The total level of applications and offers shows an encouraging increase over the same period in 1987, an indication that the expected additional uptake of RSA following the ending of the regional development grant scheme is taking place.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by each Welsh district the number of applications received for regional development grants, the number granted and the total value of regional development grants in each year since 1984.

Mr. Peter Walker: The following tables give by Welsh local authority districts, partly or wholly within the development areas, the number of applications received and the number and value of offers made under the revised regional development grant scheme (RDG II) from its introduction in November 1984 until 28 October 1988.

Records of the original development grant scheme (RDG I) are not available by local authority district. Total payments for Wales under the scheme for the financial years 1984-85 to 1987-88 were: £92·7 million (1984-85); £80·3 million (1985-86); £68 million (1986-87) and £22·8 million (1987-88).

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the amount of grant aid provided to companies in (a) Milford Haven, (b) Pembroke dock and (c) Haverfordwest from national and European funds in each year since 1984 and the number of companies assisted in each case.

Mr. Peter Walker: The principal forms of Government grant aid from which companies in the area benefit are regional selective assistance, regional development grants and regional enterprise grants (the latter two grant schemes are available in development areas only). Grant aid offered under the regional selective assistance and revised regional development grant (RDG II) schemes since 1984 to companies in the Haverfordwest and South Pembrokeshire travel to work areas is as follows:

3. No offers of Regional Enterprise Grant have yet been made in the South Pembrokeshire TTWA.
4. The above figures exclude payments to companies under the original Regional Development Grant Scheme (RDG I) which are recorded by former Employment Office Areas (EOA). RDG I payments in the relevant EOAs were as follows:—

In addition, the area benefits from other forms of Government assistance, including the urban policy initiatives and schemes of national assistance administered by the Department of Trade and Industry, and from the activities of the Welsh Development Agency by way of factory building, land reclamation, rural grant schemes and the new consultancy grant schemes available under the Enterprise Initiative.

Grants from the European regional development fund towards industrial investments represent a partial reimbursement for assistance already awarded to companies under the United Kingdom's regional aid schemes and are not therefore passed on to individual companies.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many road traffic accidents there were on the A5 between Chirk and Llangollen in each of the last five years; how many resulted in death or injury to pedestrians; and how many resulted in subsequent prosecution.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The numbers of accidents involving personal injury on the A5 between (but not including) Chirk and Llangollen, were as follows:

Mentally Handicapped Persons

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total amount of grant given to Clwyd health authority for services for the mentally handicapped since the inception of the all-Wales strategy.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of grants given to Clwyd county council under the all-Wales strategy has been used to fund administrative posts.

Mr. Grist: Between 1 April 1983 and 31 March 1988, £157,042 (5·7 per cent.) of the £2,774,372 given in grant aid to Clwyd county council for the development of services under the all-Wales mental handicap strategy was used to support the provision of administrative posts in support of these services.

Housing

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the local authorities in Wales which are allocated funds or loan sanction for this financial year to enable them to purchase houses from the private sector in their areas, where such houses might otherwise be purchased from outside the area, in order to let them to local people seeking rented accomodation; and if he will indicate the resources available this year to each such authority.

Mr. Grist: The figures are as follows

A44, Cardiganshire

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if there are any plans to improve the A44 trunk road between the post office and Argoed Penllwyn, Cardiganshire, during the next three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Proposals are in hand for the improvement of the junction by Capel Bangor post office at Penllwyn. It is hoped that a start can be made within three years but this will depend on the completion of statutory procedures and the availability of finance.

Under-fives

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the total number of children under five years, by education authority at (a) nursery schools and (b) primary schools for each year since 1983; and if he will list the number of children attending a registered bilingual Welsh/English and Welsh only nursery school or primary school.

Mr. Wyn Roberts [holding answer 28 October 1988]: The number of pupils under five years of age in nursery and primary schools and those in designated bilingual primary schools in English-speaking areas are given in the following tables. The numbers of pupils attending Welsh-only nursery and primary schools and bilingual schools in mainly Welsh-speaking areas cannot be separately identified.

Value Added Tax

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many countries of the EEC place tourist industries in the lowest band of value added tax.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 31 October 1988]: According to the latest information available, five EC member states apply their lowest rate of VAT to certain tourist services. The member states concerned are Belgium, Ireland the Netherlands, Portugal and Spain.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he has received any representations about the effect on the travel industry of the imposition of value added tax on transport and hotels, respectively; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has received any representations about the present imposition of value added tax on accommodation and meals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 31 October 1988]: There have been no recent representations to Treasury Ministers about value added tax on the goods and services which are the main components of tourism and travel.

Third World

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make representations in January 1989 to the new United States Administration to encourage it to provide grant aid to Third world nations in place of loans.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have been asked to reply.

The United States already provides most of its bilateral aid in grant form. So do we.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make representation to enable the European Council of Ministers to adopt a policy of converting past loans to Third world nations into grants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have been asked to reply.

Most European Community aid to the poorest countries is in grant form. Those loans which are provided are generally to the better-off developing countries and on generous terms.

Repayments on past loans provided under the European development funds for the poorest ACP countries have recently been recycled as a contribution to the Community's special programme in favour of low-income, debt-distressed countries in sub-Saharan Africa.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make representations to the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund to adopt the six guidelines for standard adjustment programmes agreed by Ministers at the development assistance committee meeting in December 1987.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have been asked to reply.

As the guidelines agreed at the development assistance committee propose, the IMF and the World Bank are paying increasing attention to designing structural adjustment programmes with safeguards to protect the poor. The World Bank is increasing support for special compensatory lending programmes in a number of countries in order to preserve basic social services during periods of adjustment. We welcome these developments, but the decisions on how to implement adjustment programmes, and how to protect vulnerable groups, must ultimately be for the Government of the country concerned.

ENERGY

Petroleum Engineering Directorate

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many improvement notices and prohibition notices have been issued by petroleum engineering directorate inspectors during each year from 1980 to 1988, inclusive.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Six improvement notices were served in 1980 and one prohibition notice was served in 1981. In addition to the power to serve these notices under the Health and Safety at Work, etc Act 1974, my inspectors have additional powers under the Mineral Workings (Offshore Installations) Act 1971. These powers which have been used on many occasions require the owner or manager or any person on board or near to an offshore installation to do or refrain from doing any act which could cause a casualty (whether the danger is imminent or not). These powers are more appropriate to offshore installations having been designed specifically for their operations and management and have proved to be highly effective. My inspectors usually exercise these powers but will use improvement or prohibition notices where that route is likely to be more effective in order to secure the health, safety and welfare of the offshore work force.

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many times petroleum engineering directorate inspectors have exercised their right to seize helicopter seats, to visit offshore installations other than by prior arrangement, in each year from 1980 to 1987 inclusive, and whether he intends that inspectors should exercise this right more frequently in the future.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Operating companies have complied with all requests for immediate seating on helicopter flights, so there has been no need for my inspectors to seize seats.

Health and Safety

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many accidents and dangerous occurrences reportable under offshore health and safety legislation on offshore installations in the Brent field, have been reported to the petroleum engineering directorate during each month of 1988.

Mr. Peter Morrison: One accident and nine dangerous occurrences on offshore installations in the Brent field were reported during the nine months to 30 September 1988. Only one involved an injury to a person.

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he intends to introduce legislation for the extension of the Safety Representatives and Safety Committees Regulations 1977 to cover those employees working offshore.

Mr. Peter Morrison: No. We intend to issue a consultative document shortly on the making of new regulations, under the Mineral Workings (Offshore Installations) Act 1971, for the election of work force safety representatives and the establishment of safety committees on offshore installations.

British Coal

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of British Coal; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I meet the chairman of British Coal regularly to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

Energy Conservation

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list in the Official Report the progress since 1983 in attaining the Government's energy conservation objectives.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The programmes of the Energy Efficiency Office have achieved some significant successes since 1983. For example, over 500,000 homes have been treated under community insulation projects; savings of £75 million a year are being made through the monitoring and targeting programme; savings of £190 million a year have been achieved through the energy efficiency demonstration scheme and savings identified through the former energy efficiency survey scheme total over £200 million a year.

An indication of good progress on energy efficiency can also be obtained from statistics on energy intensity (ie the amount of energy used in the United Kingdom for each pound of real gross domestic product). Between 1983 and 1987, energy intensity in the United Kingdom fell by some 7 per cent.

The international evidence is also encouraging. A European Commission paper shows that in the period 1973-82 the United Kingdom came seventh out of the then 10 Community countries in terms of improvement in energy intensity, whereas a more recent Commission paper indicates that the United Kingdom is now fifth out of 12 member states. The United Kingdom rate of improvement is now over twice the Community average.

Health and Safety

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many prosecutions have been taken against offshore installation operators for contravention of health and safety legislation during each year from 1980 to 1988 inclusive; how many of these prosecutions have arisen out of serious breaches of health and safety legislation which have not involved a fatality of injury; and how many have been prosecuted under the Health and Safety at Work Act 1974.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information requested by the hon. Member is as follows:

	Prosecutions against companies	Cases not involving fatality or injury	Prosecutions under the HSWA 1974
1980	11	—	8
1981	2	—	1
1982	11	3	6

Onshore Oil Licences

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many new applications have been received for onshore oil licences; and how many have been granted for the last 12 months.

Mr. Peter Morrison: During the past 12 months, my Department received 78 applications in response to the announcement of the second onshore round, and awarded 60 new exploration licences. For further details, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given on 3 March at columns 650-51. One appraisal licence was also awarded. On 28 July, a further conversion opportunity for holders of old-style exploration licences was announced at column 487. Six applications have been received and are currently being considered.

British Coal

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if his Department has estimated the likely effect on the productive capacity of the coal industry of the privatisation of British Coal.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Regardless of whether or not the industry is publicly or privately owned, viable mines will have a future and non-viable mines will not.

Coal-Fired Power Stations

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on replacing the older generation of coal-fired power stations with the latest fluidised-bed and clean burn coal-fired stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The replacement of older coal-fired generating stations is a matter for the ESI. My Department has supported the development of clean coal burning power generation but exploiting these technologies is a matter for the industry, taking account of the established policy on reducing atmospheric pollution from large boiler plant.

Fissile Materials

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many kilos of fissile materials under safeguards have been credited by the United Kingdom to the European Community, under articles 88 and 89 of the Euratom treaty, since the United Kingdom joined the European Economic Community.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am advised that articles 88 and 89 of the Euratom treaty, which relate to the provision of financial information, have not been implemented by the Community.

Fast Breeder Reactors

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received on the subject of the fast breeder reactor programme.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Since the statement made in the House by my right hon. Friend on 21 July 1988, column 1288, we have received a small number of representations about the fast reactor programme.

ENVIRONMENT

Plymouth Marine Laboratory of the Natural Environment

16. Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the total expenditure by his Department on research at the Plymouth marine laboratory of the natural environment in the year 1988-89, and by how much the planned expenditure has been reduced since 27 September.

Mr. Ridley: The Plymouth marine laboratory is a valued and competitive contractor. Planned contracts for research for my Department on a range of environmental issues are likely to exceed £650,000 in 1988-89. This figure has not been subject to any recent reductions.

Empty Council Properties

17. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further proposals he has for ensuring that empty council properties are brought into use.

Mr. Ridley: Before formulating any further proposals, I am seeking additional up-to-date information about the type of dwellings empty and the reasons why they are empty.

Privatisation

18. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the progress being made by local authorities in putting services out to tender.

Mr. Gummer: Authorities are now fully engaged in implementing the competition provisions of the Local Government Act 1988. Detailed implementation regulations were made in July and the first round of contracts have to be let by 1 August 1989.

Cambridgeshire Structure Plan

19. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce his revised proposals for the Cambridgeshire structure plan following the consultation period.

Mr. Howard: Early in the new year.

Tree Planting

20. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new trees have been planted under the special programme announced in the aftermath of the October 1987 hurricane; and how much of the budgeted allocation has been spent.

Mr. Ridley: Last winter an estimated half million amenity trees were planted under the task force trees programme and grants totalling £3 million were taken up. Assistance was also forthcoming from English Heritage, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Forestry Commission.

Amusement Arcades

21. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will outline the considerations he applies when overturning local authorities' refusals for planning applications for amusement arcades.

Mr. Howard: All appeals are determined taking into account any material provisions of the development plan and any other material considerations. The main issues arising in relation to amusement centre proposals are likely to be location, noise and disturbance arising from their use, and physical appearance.

Local Authority Housing Stock

22. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to guarantee that tenants of local authorities attempting to transfer their housing stock to another owner will receive full details of financial and other implications of the transaction.

Mr. Trippier: It is the responsibility of the local authority, as part of its statutory duties under schedule 3A to the Housing Act 1985, to ensure that the tenant is properly informed about the likely consequences of any proposed transfer.

32. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his most recent estimate of the cost of renovation and repairs for local authority housing stock in England and Wales.

Mr. Trippier: It is hoped that the 1986 English house condition survey will be published later this month. This will provide up-to-date information on the extent of disrepair in council properties in England.

Similar data for Wales are provided by the Welsh house condition survey, which was published on 9 May.

Housing Bill (Tenants' Rights)

23. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on council housing tenants' ability to opt out of local authority control as contained within the Housing Bill.

Mr. Trippier: We have received numerous representations, mainly in the form of letters from tenants, and local authorities and others, about our proposals in part IV of the Housing Bill—"Tenants' Choice".

Water Discharges

24. Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to place a duty on water authorities in England and Wales to make publicly available details of discharges within 28 days of the date of sampling.

Mr. Moynihan: We propose that regulations to be made under forthcoming water legislation should require that the time limit for placing details of effluent samples on public registers should run from the taking of the sample rather than, as at present, from the completion of the analysis.

Private House Starts

25. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the level of private house starts at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Trippier: It is provisionally estimated that in the first eight months of 1988 there were 131,000 private sector housebuilding starts in England, 16 per cent. more than in 1987; starts this year have been running at their highest levels since 1973.

Local Government (Access to Information) Act

26. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue guidance to local authorities reminding them of the requirements of the Local Government (Access to Information) Act and the Public Bodies Admissions to Meetings Act.

Mr. Gummer: My Department did so on 27 February 1986.

Nuclear Waste

27. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met Nirex to discuss the disposal of intermediate level waste; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: I met the chairman of Nirex on 4 July. We are waiting for Nirex to submit proposals to the Government in the light of responses to the company's consultation exercise and technical studies.

54. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress being made by Nirex in identifying a site for the disposal of low and intermediate level waste.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I understand that Nirex is evaluating the results of its technical studies and replies to the company's discussion document. When these are completed Nirex intends to submit proposals to the Government, which we expect to be early next year.

Sports Council

28. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many meeting have been held since 13 June by (a) the Sports Council, (b) the policy groups of the Sports Council and (c) the governing body aid panel.

Mr. Moynihan: Since 13 June the Sports Council has met once, on 31 October. The council has held two policy group meetings, the participation policy group on 21 June and the national centres board on 20 June. There is no governing body aid panel, but the council's grant assessment panel has met on eight occasions since 13 June.

61. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to meet the chairman of the Sports Council.

Mr. Moynihan: I regularly meet the chairman of the Sports Council. The next occasion will be on 10 November.

81. Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a list of the members of the Sports Council who resigned in 1988, giving the date of their resignations.

Mr. Moynihan: There have been 14 resignations from the Sports Council in 1988. These are as follows:

88. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the names of the current members of the Sports Council.

Mr. Moynihan: The Sports Council currently has 14 members as follows:

John Smith (Chairman)
Sebastian Coe (Vice-Chairman)
J. Allan Patmore (Vice-Chairman)
Ron Emes
Richard Fox
Margaret Hohmann
Norman Jacobs
Timothy Marshall
Raymond Miquel
Charles Palmer
Mary Peters
John Powell
David Simon
Peter Yarranton

Housing (East Anglia)

29. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received regarding the shortage of low-priced housing in East Anglia for first-time buyers.

Mr. Trippier: None.

Sewage Disposal

30. Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution intends to publish the draft guidelines for sewage disposal in the marine environment recently agreed with the Water Authorities Association.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I shall arrange for a copy of the inspectorate's letter of 15 September, which incorporated the guidelines, to be placed in the Library.

Water Industry Privatisation

31. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the effects on the community of a privatised water industry.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend has received representations covering a wide range of opinions since the privatisation proposals were published. There was a general welcome for the proposals to establish a National Rivers Authority, which will protect environmental standards, and a Director-General of Water Services to oversee the interests of consumers.

33. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to publish the Bill to sell off the water authorities.

48. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he now intends to introduce legislation to sell the water authorities in England and Wales.

Mr. Moynihan: Subject to the Gracious Speech, early in the coming Session.

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation

34. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the latest figures for households in bed-and-breakfast accommodation (a) in Greater London and (b) in England and Wales as a whole.

Mr. Trippier: The latest estimates of households temporarily placed in bed-and-breakfast accommodation by English local authorities appear in table 4(A) of "Local authorities, action under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act: England. Statistics for the second quarter of 1988, Supplementary Tables", which is available in the Library.

For Welsh figures I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Green Belt Policy

35. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further representations he has received on his green belt policy.

Mr. Chope: We continue to receive frequent representations on various aspects of green belt policy, to which we remain firmly committed.

67. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria he uses for judging whether to add land to the green belt.

Mr. Chope: Guidance on the designation of green belts and the alteration of their boundaries is given in planning policy guidance note 2. This states that established green belt boundaries should be altered only in exceptional circumstances and that, if an alteration is proposed to the general extent of a green belt approved in a structure plan, the Secretary of State will wish to be satisfied that the opportunities for development within the urban areas contained by and beyond the green belt have been carefully considered.

Rating Reform

36. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his assessment of the expected effect of the introduction of the unified business rate in the Yorkshire and Humberside region.

Mr. Gummer: A uniform rate at the present average level of 239·5p would require reductions of up to 31 per cent. for businesses in all authorities in Yorkshire and Humberside, except York. Detailed figures were placed in the Library on 23 June by my right hon. Friend, pursuant to a written answer to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) at column 713.

37. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional funds he proposes to make available to the Oxford city council to meet the administrative costs of poll tax collection.

Mr. Gummer: My right hon. Friend announced on 21 October that half the provision of £110 million included in the 1989-90 RSG settlement for the current costs of preparing for the community charge will be met through a specific grant. Oxford city council's share of that £55 million has been estimated to be £156,000. The remaining half of the expenditure will be supported by rate support grant. Expenditure incurred by authorities on collection of the community charge in 1990-91 and subsequent years will be supported through revenue support grant.

My right hon. Friend also announced on 21 October that capital allocations for 1989-90 will include a specific allocation of £135 million for the capital costs of preparation for the community charge. Allocations to individual authorities will be announced as soon as possible following discussions with the local authority associations. These allocations will be additional to the £25 million made for 1989-90 of which Oxford city's share was £62,073.

73. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his latest estimates of the cost of the introduction of the poll tax and the annual cost of its collection.

Mr. Gummer: The Government commissioned Price Waterhouse to undertake a study of the costs likely to be incurred by charging authorities in administering the community charge. In their report, published on 23 June, the consultants estimated the preparation costs in 1989-90 in England and Wales to be between £99 million and £122 million for current expenditure, and between £125 million and £175 million for capital expenditure. The community charge will be paid by almost all adults in order to increase democratic accountability. In contrast, only about 50 per cent. paid rates. The cost of billing over twice as many people will therefore be almost twice as great as the old system. Price Waterhouse estimated that the annual cost of collecting the community charge would be between £379 million and £435 million, compared to the £200 million a year it now costs to collect rates.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will construct a table in the same form as figure F3 on page 106 of Cmnd. 9714, "Paying for Local Government" showing the relationship in England of rateable values to net household income separately for (a) single pensioner households, (b) other single adult households, (c) two adult households and (d) three adult households.

Mr. Gummer: Estimates of the relationship between local taxes and income were published on 13 January 1988 and copies are in the Library. We are preparing a revision of these figures and I will write to the hon. Member when revised estimates are available.

Thames Water Authority

38. Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the capital expenditure plans submitted by the Thames water authority will be finalised before his Department makes a decision about compliance with the PAH standard in the European Community directive relating to the quality of drinking water.

Mr. Moynihan: If any need for capital expenditure to achieve compliance with the PAH standard in the EC directive were identified, it would be incorporated in the capital expenditure plans of the Thames water authority or its successor utility company.

Council House Rent Arrears

39. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the level of council house rent arears in England at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Trippier: As my hon. Friend the then Minister for Housing and Planning, the Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave) announced on 20 January, rent arrears owing to all English local authorities amounted to almost £196 million at 1 April 1987, the latest date for which information is at present available.

Housing Action Trusts

40. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the cost of reports commissioned by his Department from consultants, concerning the housing action trust areas.

Mr. Trippier: The costs of these consultancy studies, which are still under way, are commercially confidential.

Water Quality

41. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the condition of the water in (a) the Thames estuary and (b) the Rhine.

Mr. Moynihan: As a result of a major scheme started in the 1950s to rebuild and extend London's main sewage treatment facilities, virtually the whole of the Thames estuary is now classified as being of "good" or "fair" quality—within the top two categories of the national classification scheme. Some £200 million in current prices has so far been spent on improvements. More than 100 different species of fish have been found in the tidal Thames since the early 1970s. The Thames is now the cleanest metropolitan estuary in the world.

In contrast, the Rhine has suffered from serious pollution along much of its length for many years from the heavy concentration of industry and population along its banks. In addition, the river has suffered in recent years from pollution caused by agricultural activities and from accidental spillages. Although there have been improvements in some aspects of water quality in the Rhine, Ministers of the Rhine states have recently agreed on the need for a major clean-up programme. One of its aims is the return of salmon and other aquatic life to the river.

London Dockland Development Corporation

42. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement concerning the current policy of the London Dockland Development Corporation in respect of land south of the Royal Victoria dock.

Mr. Trippier: The LDDC has decided to proceed with development plans for the Royal Victoria dock (southside) based on an urban design framework prepared by the corporation. Individual sites will be put out to tender next year to a wide range of developers.

Competitive Tendering (Bristol)

43. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will pay an official visit to Bristol to discuss the effect of competitive tendering in local government.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to do so.

Special Waste

44. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the level of special waste imported during the last three months for which figures are available; and what were the comparable figures for the corresponding period in the previous year.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information on imports of special waste is collected by waste disposal authorities. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution obtains summary figures annually from the authorities. During 1986, such imports totalled 53,000 tonnes. Figures for 1987 are not complete but the total is estimated to be 80,000 tonnes. This constitutes about 5 per cent. of special waste generated in the United Kingdom.

New Towns Commission Property, Basildon

45. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the future of New Towns Commission property in Basildon.

Mr. Trippier: The Commission for the New Towns is in the process of disposing of its holdings of land and commercial and industrial property in Basildon. It is also making arrangements for the transfer of community-related assets to appropriate successor bodies. The Government's proposals for the transfer of new town housing to new landlords, including properties owned by the Commission for the New Towns in Basildon, are set out in the consultation paper "New Town Housing Transfer" issued by my Department on 23 August.

Bradford City Council

46. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account he proposes to take, in setting the rate support grant for Bradford city council for 1989-90, of the number of residential homes for the elderly in the city; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State intends to issue a consultation paper on his proposals for the 1989-90 rate support grant settlement shortly.

Seal Virus (Research)

47. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations his Department has received to fund research in connection with the seal virus.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department of the Environment has received a number of representations about research on the disease affecting seals in the North sea. The Department has had detailed discussions with the seal mammal research unit and other scientific institutes on further research in this area. New seals research projects were announced on 24 August and 15 September.

Green Belt Development

49. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many planning applications for development on existing green belt land have, on appeal, been (a) upheld and (b) rejected by his Department for each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I regret that information is not available in the form requested. The annual report of the chief planning inspector identifies numbers of appeals received and allowed by development type; a copy is in the Library.

Chlorofluorocarbons

50. Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further measures he is taking to encourage the implementation of the Montreal protocol concerning the reduction of chlorofluorocarbons in the environment.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 25 October at column 147.

72. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further plans he has to reduce the use of chlorofluorocarbon gases.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 25 October to my hon. Friend the Member for Brentford and Ongar, (Mr. McCrindle) at column 147.

Bathing Water

51. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress towards full implementation of the European Economic Community directive on the quality of bathing water.

Mr. Moynihan: We are making good progress towards full implementation of the EEC bathing water directive. We have identified almost 400 coastal bathing waters under the terms of the directive, and some 60 per cent. now meet the directive's mandatory bacteriological requirements. A major capital expenditure programme is under way to bring the remainder up to standard and we have recently asked water authorities in England and Wales to review the scope for accelerating existing programmes with a view to bringing all remaining waters up to EEC standards by 1995.

Home Ownership

52. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the level of home ownership in England; and what equivalent information he has for the United States of America, at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Trippier: At the end of March 1988 an estimated 66·5 per cent. of dwellings in England were owner-occupied. In the United States of America the proportion in the first quarter of 1988 was 63·7 per cent.

Homelessness (Local Authorities)

53. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he proposes to give to local authorities which have no housing stock about their fulfilment of their statutory duty to house the homeless.

Mr. Trippier: In June of this year, the Department issued guidelines on "Large Scale Voluntary Transfers of Local Authority Housing to Private Bodies". This makes it clear that local authorities must make adequate arrangements to continue to meet their statutory obligations in relation to housing the homeless under part III of the Housing Act 1985. In deciding whether to give consent to large-scale disposals, the Secretary of State will need to be satisfied that such arrangements have been made.

Household Statistics

56. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest figure he has for the number of married couples who are living in a household headed by another person, in (a) Greater London and (b) England.

Mr. Trippier: The Department's latest household estimates relate to 1986 when 22,000 married couples were estimated to be living in Greater London in a household headed by another person. The corresponding estimate for England as a whole is 94,000.

Football Club Membership Card Schemes

57. Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will next meet representatives of the football authorities to discuss membership card schemes.

86. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to meet representatives from the Football Association and the Football League to discuss crowd control.

Mr. Moynihan: I have no present plans for further meetings with representatives of the football authorities. I have discussed the proposed national membership scheme for football supporters with the football authorities at meetings of the working party established under my chairmanship to examine the details of the scheme. The working party's report will be available soon.

Rate Support Grant, Bradford

59. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from ratepayers in Bradford about the level of the rate support grant in 1988-89 and about the likely settlement for 1989-90.

Mr. Gummer: My right hon. Friend received one representation from Bradford ratepayers about the level of rate support grant for 1988-89 and as yet none about 1989-90.

Local Authority Services (Tendering)

60. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what have been the savings to ratepayers in England from the introduction of competitive tendering for the provision of local authority services, at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Gummer: Information is not available in the form requested, but authorities which have contracted out services voluntarily commonly report savings amounting to 20 to 30 per cent. of previous costs.

Football Supporters Association

63. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met representatives of the Football Supporters Association.

Mr. Moynihan: I last met representatives of the Football Supporters Association on 18 January. A further meeting with the association is being arranged.

Water Metering Trials

55. Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress of the 10 water metering trials.

64. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what draft schemes for compulsory water metering trials he has received from water undertakings; and if he will make a statement.

Turlin Moor	(Wessex Water)
Camberley	(Mid Southern Water Company)
Broadstone	(Wessex Water)
Hutton Rudby	(Northumbrian Water)

Association of County Councils

65. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the officers of the Association of County Councils; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Gummer: My right hon. Friend met them on 11 July 1988, at a meeting of the consultative council on local government finance. The meeting discussed my right hon. Friend's statement of 7 July.

Homeless Families

68. Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any new proposals for housing homeless families.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to my reply earlier today to the Hon. Member for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington (Ms. Abbott).

Football Violence

69. Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new measures he proposes to combat the effect of hooliganism and violence at football matches.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 20 July at column 692.

Large Combustion Plant Directive

70. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many retrofits will need to be installed to meet the target outlined by the large combustion plant directive; and if he will provide his estimate of the cost of complying with the directive.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The question of retrofits will fall to be discussed between the electricity generating industry and Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. It is too soon to guage how many will be needed. The cost of complying with the directive will depend on the means by which emissions are reduced. It will be substantial.

Rating Reform

71. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest estimate of the number of adults living in dwellings who will gain and lose upon the introduction of the poll tax in England.

Mr. Gummer: Estimates of the effects of the community charges on the lines requested were published on 13 January 1988 and copies are in the Library. We are preparing a revision of these figures.

Litter

74. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes any further action to combat litter.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Tidy Britain Group reports good progress on the programme of experimental projects launched by the Prime Minister earlier this year. The projects incorporate before and after studies to measure their effectiveness. We shall consider what further action is desirable in the light of lessons drawn from the programme in a review at the end of the year.

Local Authority Housing (Document)

75. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many replies he has received to his consultation document, "A New Financial Regime for Local Authority Housing in England and Wales."

Mr. Trippier: As at 1 November, a total of 275 responses to the consultation paper had been received in my Department.

Bradford

76. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will pay an official visit to Bradford to discuss arrangements for local government.

Mr. Ridley: I visited Bradford on 21 October but not in my official capacity. I see no need for a further visit.

Local Revenue-raising

77. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps his Department is taking to evaluate the cost-effectiveness of methods of raising local revenue proposed as alternatives to the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714) considered a number of possible local taxes. We have subsequently published figures showing the impact of local income tax and of rates based on the capital values of homes.

I wrote to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 28 October with detailed questions about the Labour party's proposals for capital value rates plus local income tax. Once we have the answers to those questions, it will be possible to carry out a proper evaluation of the impact of its proposals.

Tenants' Choice (Booklet)

78. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will withdraw the Department of the Environment booklet "Government Proposals for Housing: Tenants' Choice".

Mr. Trippier: No.

Marine Pollution

79. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current level of investment in measures to combat marine pollution; and if he will make a statement.

58. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current level of investment in measures to combat marine pollution; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Investment to combat marine pollution is undertaken by a very wide range of public agencies, private businesses and individuals such as farmers and landowners. There is no central record bringing together all this expenditure.

Rivers are usually the most important source of contaminants entering the sea. Expenditure by water authorities and their equivalents, and by industry, on improving treatment processes and achieving stricter discharge limits have brought major improvements to water quality. For example expenditure by water authorities on improved sewerate and sewage treatment facilities on the major rivers and estuaries discharging into the North sea will total £600 million by 1990. For the Mersey basin, a £4,000 million campaign was set up in 1983 spread over 25 years, of which £2,500 million will be spent on improving water quality.

Other examples include expenditure by industry, with the advice of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, on reducing dangerous substances in emissions to air, and in finding alternatives to the dumping of waste at sea.

Drinking Water

80. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress made towards full implementation of EEC directives on drinking water standards.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave her on 20 April 1988 at column 480. I assure her that good progress continues to be made towards full compliance with the EC drinking water directive.

Local Government (Access to Information) Act and Public Bodies (Admission to Meetings) Act

82. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue guidance to local authorities reminding them of the requirements of the Local Government (Access to Information) Act and the Public Bodies (Admissions to Meetings) Act.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department did so on 27 February 1986.

North Sea Pollution

83. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the steps he is taking to reduce pollution in the North sea.

89. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he proposes to take to clean up the North sea.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: At last year's North sea conference in London, chaired by my right hon. Friend, we agreed a wide ranging programme of measures to protect further and improve the quality of the North sea and all our coastal waters. The most important measures relevant to the United Kingdom include:

1. A substantial reduction of the order of 50 per cent. of inputs to rivers and estuaries of substances which are persistent toxic and bio-accumulative;
2. An end to the dumping of industrial waste at sea by the end of 1989 except for materials of natural origin, or internationally accepted as causing no harm to the marine environment and for which there is no suitable land based alternative;
3. A 65 per cent. reduction in the total of waste incinerated at sea by 1991 and its termination in 1994;
4. The establishment of an international North sea scientific task force, to co-ordinate research and monitoring by all the North sea states.

Other measures include action on nutrient (phosphorus and nitrogen) inputs in areas where they are likely to cause pollution, tighter controls on operational discharges from ships and other offshore installations and increased aerial surveillance. The United Kingdom is strongly committed to implementing these measures and indicated how this would be done in a guidance note on the conference declaration published last February a copy of which is in the Library of the House. We are confident of achieving all these targets, and progress in doing so will be reviewed by the third North sea conference to be held in the Hague on 7 and 8 March 1990.

Jockey Club

84. Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met officials from the Jockey Club.

Mr. Moynihan: I met the senior steward and other stewards of the Jockey Club at Newmarket races on Saturday 15 October.

Fylde (Sewage)

85. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set up an independent inquiry into North West water's sea pipeline proposal and alternative inland disposal arrangements to solve the Fylde's sewage problems.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. Friend will consider the need for an inquiry when he has received and considered the water authority's applications for discharge consents under the Control of Pollution Act 1974, together with any representations that may be made when these applications are advertised.

Hazardous Waste

87. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to seek to increase the powers and number of inspectors available to him to enable him to control the importation of hazardous wastes into the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: As I announced on 28 July, Official Report column 444, we are considering whether further controls on the import of waste are necessary. This review covers all types of imported wastes.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to control the disposal of hazardous waste; if he has recently had discussions with Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution about the disposal of hazardous waste; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: We announced our intention to strengthen legislation on waste disposal on 29 June, and plan a further consultation paper shortly. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is part of the Department of the Environment and advises on waste management issues.

PSA Block B, Cambridge

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much rainwater has seeped into the working areas of the Property Services Agency's block B at Cambridge during recent months; to what extent this puts computer equipment at risk; whether he is satisfied with the conditions under which staff are working in this building; and if he will take steps to remedy these and other problems by allowing the private sector to redevelop the entire site and by redeploying at least some part of its staff to the Property Services Agency's accommodation in Newmarket.

Mr. Chope: This building has recently suffered some relatively minor water penetration caused by blocked gutters. No computer equipment has been damaged. Working conditions for staff remain satisfactory, but I will continue to keep the long-term use of the site under review including options involving partial or total redevelopment.

Caravan Rallies

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from exempt organisations seeking to change the limits on rallies allowed under the present provisions of the Caravan Sites Act 1980; what proposals he had made to interested parties; what responses he has received; and what is his policy on the length of time that rallies or similar congregations of persons and vehicles should be permitted to take place without planning consent, and on the controls that are applied to such events.

Mr. Trippier: I have received one application from an exempt organisation for a certificate which would enable them to hold rallies lasting longer than five days. The Department has sought the views of interested parties and will determine the application shortly. Responses from the ADC, the ACC, the British Holiday and Home Parks Association, the National Caravan Council, the Caravan Club and the Camping and Caravanning Club have been considered.

Under paragraph 6 of schedule 1 to the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960, organisations with a certificate of exemption may hold rallies for up to five days, without the need for a site licence or planning consent. I have no intention of altering that provision at present. Exempt organisations are required to abide by a code of conduct approved by my Department controlling their rallying activities and certificates can be withdrawn in the event of non-compliance.

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to reply to the submissions made by the National Caravan Council and the British Holiday and Home Park Association in May in response to his Department's proposals to extend the time limits during which exempt organisations may hold rallies.

Mr. Trippier: My officials are in correspondence with the exempt organisation concerned and we should be in a position to announce the outcome shortly.

Multi-occupation Housing

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to publish his response to the consultation paper on houses in multiple occupation.

Mr. Trippier: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Bernley (Mr. Pike) on 28 October at column 426.

Radioactive Waste (Disposal)

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a further statement on his policy for disposal of low and intermediate-level radioactive waste.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: As I made clear in the debate in the House on 28 October, at column 596, the Government believe that safe disposal routes for low and intermediate-level radioactive waste can be developed in the United Kingdom, and that early disposal is the right answer.

The Government remain of the view that low-level waste can be and is being disposed of safely using present authorised sites, but intermediate-level waste needs to be disposed of deep underground or under the seabed. The Government are keeping open the sea disposal option for large items arising from decommissioning operations.

In implementing this policy, the Government welcome Nirex's intention to dispose of both low and intermediate-level waste in a single deep facility. The Government look forward to receiving detailed proposals so that rapid progress can be made.

Salt Properties Ltd

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the implications for Her Majesty's Government's policy towards leasehold reform of the activities of Salt Properties Limited.

66. Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the implications for Her Majesty's Government's policy towards leasehold reform of the activities of Salt Properties Ltd.

Mr. Trippier: We have received a number of representations from hon. Members on behalf of their constituents and a few further ones from other interested parties.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure that all companies which receive imported toxic wastes possess adequate capacity to deal with such waste; and what control he exercises over companies which do not possess high temperature incinerators with respect to the import of polychlorinated biphenyls.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Imported wastes, like wastes originating in this country, may be disposed of only at facilities suitably licensed by waste disposal authorities. Licence conditions should specify the types and quantities of waste permitted. Waste disposal authorities have the necessary powers to ensure that polychlorinated biphenyls, whether from United Kingdom or overseas sources, are dealt with only by high temperature incineration.

Housing

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied with the provision made by local authorities in England for emergency housing for people who (a) suffer from alcohol abuse, or (b) are released from prisons or detention centres.

Mr. Trippier: The responsibility to assess such need rests with local housing authorities (in conjunction where necessary with health and social services authorities); appropriate provision is made by authorities, housing associations and voluntary groups, with various forms of Government financial support.

Water (Nitrate)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the mean annual nitrate concentration in the River Thames, at Walton, since 1975.

Mr. Moynihan: The mean annual concentrations of total oxidised nitrogen in the river Thames at Walton are as follows:

Milligram per litre as NO

Year
1975	26·8
1976	33·2
1977	34·2

[1] January to September.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps his Department takes to ensure that the lowest possible methanol residual in denitrified water, is achieved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Denitrification processes which use methanol are still at an experimental stage. One of the aims of these experiments, which are being partly funded by the Department, is to limit methanol residual in the denitrified water.

Brent Moor (Planning Inquiry)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why the public planning inquiry, originally scheduled for 8 and 9 November, into the proposed residential development at Brent moor, South Brent, Devon, was cancelled at short notice.

Mr. Ridley: The appeal inquiry was postponed at the request of the local planning authority and the appellants.

Environmental Research

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what provision he intends to make for environmental research in 1989-90 and later years.

62. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has made for increased research into the environment since 27 September.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The public expenditure plans which my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced yesterday include additional provision of £2·6 million for the Department's environmental research programme in 1989-90 and 1990-91, raising the level of this programme to £35·8 million and £36 million respectively. In 1991-92 it is planned to maintain the level of expenditure at £36 million.

The environmental research programme covers radioactive wastes, air pollution, land wastes, toxic substances, countryside, water, planning, natural resources and local government. The additional provision for 1989-90 includes £1·23 million in support of trials of water metering. It will also allow expenditure on research into the North sea marine environment, waste disposal and climatic change to be increased by £0·5 million, £0·5 million and £0·25 million respectively.

Water Industry

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of the British water industry has been purchased by French companies.

Mr. Howard: French water companies have majority shareholdings in two British water companies, East Anglian and Essex, which together serve 3·2 per cent. of the population of England and Wales.

Local Plans

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning the recommendations contained in his draft planning policy guidance note, published in June, that a five-year supply of land exists as the basis for approving local plans.

Mr. Chope: We have received many comments on the draft planning policy guidance note on local plans, and these are being considered. The draft PPG did not however suggest that the existence of a five-year supply of land should form the basis for approving local plans. Advice is given in planning policy guidance note No. 3 on the use of the five-year land requirement, derived from the development plan, as the test of the adequacy of land availability for housing.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

"Accounting for Special Purpose Transactions"

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he is yet able to announce the definition of a subsidiary company in the context of draft 42, "Accounting for Special Purpose Transactions".

Mr. Maude: I announced on 16 August proposals to change the definition of a subsidiary for the purposes of preparing consolidated accounts. The main proposals are (i) to replace the test based on equity share capital with one based on voting rights and (ii) to require consolidation where one company has a certain interest in the shares of another and the first company actually exercises a dominant influence over the other. The changes will be included in legislation to be introduced at a suitable opportunity.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether, pursuant to his reply to the hon.

Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) on 19 October, Official Report, column 953, he will give the capital expenditure data for manufacturing industry in each standard region in current prices, constant 1980 prices, and as an index taking 1980 as 100 for each year from 1978.

Mr. Forth: The requested information is shown in the tables:

Finance Companies (Loan Interest Rates)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what further steps his Department intends to take to protect consumers from finance companies who provide loans at exorbitant interest rates.

Mr. Maude: I am proposing to amend the Consumer Credit Act 1974 to allow a court to reopen an extortionate credit agreement of its own motion. This will provide additional protection for the customers of moneylenders who are unaware of their right to apply to the court for this purpose and are not represented during any legal proceedings for debt by a lender. I am also proposing to provide more effective protection against credit businesses which operate in an unacceptable manner. Under proposals circulated last week by my Department businesses involved in lending or hiring will need to be licensed by the Office of Fair Trading every three years, instead of every 15 years as at present. I propose also that the Office of Fair Trading should have additional powers to enable them to take swift and effective action against unacceptable business practices, including the power to prohibit a business from trading with immediate effect where necessary.

Greek Radio Station, London

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the Greek language radio station currently operating unlawfully in London was last prosecuted; and what further proceedings are planned or pending.

Mr. Forth: There are currently three unlicensed broadcasters operating in London and transmitting in the Greek language. They have been raided on 56 occasions so far this year.

The last occasion that individuals or companies associated with the stations were convicted was on 4 July 1988 when fines of £13,900 were imposed and costs of £11,194 awarded to the Department. Unlicensed broadcasters cause interference to authorised radio services and whilst there are no proceedings currently pending, all three stations are under continued investigation by the radio investigation service. Unfortunately, it is not always possible to catch individuals: transmitter sites are usually unmanned.

Tied House System

Mr. Morley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made on Sir Gordon Borrie's recommendation that the tied house system within the brewing industry be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Maude: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission is to report by 3 February 1989.

Second-hand Cookers

Mr. Alton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what action he intends to take against retailers who sell faulty second-hand gas cookers; and if he will introduce amendments to existing legislation to make them liable to prosecution.

Mr. Forth: Public consultation has already taken place on draft regulations which will ensure that suppliers of both new and second-hand gas cookers meet proper standards of safety. These regulations will be laid before the House shortly, to come into force early in 1989. They will, of course, empower the courts to impose suitable penalties on retailers and others who contravene these regulations.

NESL Shipyards

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what consultations he has had with the Cuban state shipping line, Mambisa on possible orders for NESL shipyards, the timing of the orders and the possibility of intervention funding.

Mr. Newton: My predecessor made clear to the House on 21 July that DTI officials had established that Empressa Navigacion Mambisa had authority to purchase a series of general cargo ships. My Department has since kept in touch with Mambisa both directly and through its financial advisers in London. Mambisa has been advised that intervention fund support would be considered for any order taken by North East Shipbuilders Ltd., provided the yard had at that time been returned to the private sector. Mambisa has not set any firm deadline for an order to be placed but has said it would like to receive an early letter of intent.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his estimate of (a) the number of jobs dependent on the NESL shipbulding yards both directly and indirectly and (b) the spending power granted by the yards and its contract and its demand for services.

Mr. Newton: The number of jobs dependent on the NESL shipbuilding yards, both directly and indirectly, depends on the extent to which the yards are able to build ships at a price, to a time scale and of a standard which enables them to compete with other yards, particularly overseas. At present, although British Shipbulders still employs some 2,000 people at NESL, 600 are now laid off out of a total of 1,000 impending lay-offs announced in August. The number of jobs that depend indirectly on the BS yards has been reduced because the ferry programme has collapsed.

The weekly gross wage bill is presently around £400,000. The overall value of contracts and services to the yard has also been adversely affected by the state of the ferry programme.

Merchant Shipping Construction

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his estimate of the potential new orders for merchant shipping construction in 1987, 1988, 1989, 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Newton: Worldwide new orders for merchant shipbuilding in 1987 are likely to have been some 10 million compensated gross tonnes. The widely respected Association of Western European Shipbuilders has just revised its forecast for world demand for the period 1990-95 from an annual average of 19 to 12·5 million cgt.

I expect a modest and probably quite gradual improvement in overall demand along these lines between 1987 and 1991. However, since this level of demand is well within world capacity competition is likely to remain intense.

Zircon and Ilmenite

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, in the light of his recent reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, he will give a table setting out the leading world producers of zircon for zirconium and ilmenite for titanium dioxide; and if he will indicate the quantity controlled by the Anglo-American Corporation and Consolidated Goldfields, respectively.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 31 October 1988]: Tables covering the world production of zirconium minerals and titanium minerals, including ilmenite, are given in "World Mineral Statistics 1982-86", compiled by the British Geological Survey. This publication is available in the Library of the House. The possible effects on competition in certain high value minerals and metals including, inter alia, zircon and titanium will be considered by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. The annual report and accounts of the Anglo American Corporation and Consolidated Gold Fields may be obtained from their London offices, and in the case of Consolidated Gold Fields from Companies House.

THE ARTS

Funding

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will announce details of the rolling forward of the three-year settlement for the funding of the arts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I announced a year ago a three-year settlement of the arts budget for the years 1988-89 to 1990-91. My aim was to give arts bodies a firm basis on which to plan their future activities and to encourage greater self-reliance and diversification in their sources of funding.

I am glad to announce today the rolling-forward of this settlement to a fourth year, 1991-92. As before, the three-year programme covers the whole of my central Government arts expenditure, except the heritage items which are jointly funded with the Department of the Environment and the British Library capital project at St. Pancras which will continue to be reviewed annually.

In order to get this new approach off to a good start, last year's settlement provided an increase of 10 per cent. in my programme for 1988-89. The three-year strategy introduced new measures, notably incentive funding schemes for the performing arts and for the libraries sector, and major increases in funding for the buildings and maintenance programmes of the museums and galleries. I am very glad to report that the three-year funding strategy has been a success and that arts organisations have responded vigorously to this approach. They are planning ahead on firm three-year figures and are actively seeking to increase their other sources of income.

The arts budget for 1991-92 builds on the foundations laid last year. Including adjustments for transfers to museums and galleries which I announced last year, and for VAT on new construction, the three-year funding programme will rise from £339 million in 1987-88 to £430 million in 1991-92, an increase of 27 per cent. over the first four years. The central Government programme as a whole, including the heritage items and the British Library's capital needs, will rise to £483 million over the same period, an increase of 31 per cent. Both figures represent increases of over 6 per cent. on the corresponding totals for 1990-91.

Table A summarises the main allocations. The Arts Council's grant will rise from £160 million in 1990-91 to £168 million in 1991-92, an increase of 5 per cent. From this increase, I shall expect the Arts Council to apply £3 million for additional incentive funding purposes. The precise nature of the incentive scheme and the targets for its achievement will be discussed later. The grant to the British Film Institute will rise from £12 million in 1990-91 to £12·8 million in 1991-92, an increase of 6·6 per cent. The grant to the National Film and Television School will rise by nearly 6 per cent. to £1·8 million. The Crafts Council's grant will rise by 6·25 per cent. to £2·55 million.

The Arts Council's grant for 1989-90 now includes £0·25 million for the second tranche of my contribution to Glasgow's year as European city of culture. I have also increased the grant-in-aid to the British Film Institute next year by £0·3 million for the refurbishment of the National Film Theatre.

The provision for the business sponsorship incentive scheme will continue at £3 million in 1991-92.

The total provision for museums and galleries will rise from £161 million in 1990-91 to £174 million in 1991-92, an increase of 8·2 per cent. Half the £13 million increase will go to a further strengthening of the building and maintenance programme of the national institutions. This brings the size of the building programme to £55 million in 1991-92, an increase of 53 per cent. over 1987-88. I have also increased my provision for this building programme by some £3·5 million in both 1989-90 and 1990-91. The increase includes provision for the liability to VAT on new construction and £1 million of new money in each year. The allocations set out in table B will make possible some major refurbishments and improvements to, for example, the British museum, the National gallery, the Science museum and the Victoria and Albert museum. I congratulate these institutions and others which have been successful in securing additional sources of income to support their plans.

I also attach importance to the management of our national collections, including their conservation, storage and documentation. I have discussed this with each of the national institutions in the context of its corporate plan, and have commissioned research studies into aspects of collections management. Recent reports of the Museums and Galleries Commission and the National Audit Office have also raised this subject. The allocations set out in table B are intended to help the national institutions in tackling their priority concerns in the management of their collections. I am increasing the grant-in-aid to the Musuems and Galleries Commission by 7 per cent to £7·3 million in 1991-92 in order to help the commission and the area museum councils to support other museums and galleries in this task. I am also increasing by £0·175 million the commission's provision for 1989-90 to help the commission and the area museums councils to promote the touring of exhibitions, and to support initiatives in training for museums management.

The grant-in-aid for running costs to the National gallery includes in 1991-92 provision of over £1 million to take account of the opening of the Sainsbury wing in April 1991.

The needs already described must continue to have priority over purchase grants, which will therefore remain at their present cash levels for the time being. I intend to review the overall provision for purchase grants, how they are best used to stimulate other funding and how they are best allocated. I shall make a further announcement about this in due course.

Provision for the running costs of the British Library will rise to £56·5 million in 1991-92, an increase of 4·6 per cent. over the previous year. I am also increasing the grant for 1989-90 by £0·7 million to help meet the cost of an early retirement scheme and preparations for the move to St. Pancras.

The sums for British Library capital in table A represent planned expenditure on phase 1A of the St. Pancras building. They will also cover preliminary design work on the completion phase, on which I am making a separate announcement today. Further expenditure on the completion phase will be provided for in next year's survey.

The provision for public lending right will be increased by £0·75 million to £4·25 million in 1991-92.

British Library

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister for the Arts what proposals he is making for the further construction of the new British Library building at St. Pancras when building work on the present stage is completed in 1993.

Mr. Luce: I reported to the House on 15 December 1987 that I had authorised a feasibility study to examine options for the concluding stage of the British Library project. The study was carried out by the Property Services Agency, the British Library and the design team who designed the first phase of the building, under the sponsorship of the Office of Arts and Libraries.

The Government have carefully considered the results of the study. I am happy to report that a decision has now been made to complete the project, at a cost of £90 million at current prices, in a way which will meet the key requirements of the Library.

The new building at St. Pancras will enable the library to concentrate most of its main reference collections at one location in a controlled pollution free environment. This will allow the British Library to vacate many of the 19 sites around London, where its stock is currently located, and to unite its major services within a single purpose-built building, to provide greatly improved facilities for readers and staff.

I have authorised the immediate start of the design of the additional phase of works required to complete the project by a target date of 1996.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Sale and Supply of Goods (Report)

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the Government's response to the legislative changes proposed in the report by the Law Commission and the Scottish Law Commission on the "Sale and Supply of Goods" (Cmnd. 137).

Mr. Forth: The Government accept the Commissions' proposals, subject to minor clarifying amendments, and will seek an appropriate legislative opportunity to give them effect.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing the level of average unrebated rent in 1987-88 prices for each year between 1967-68 and the latest date available.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is shown in the following table:

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing the level of average domestic rates in 1987-88 prices for each year between 1967-68 and the latest date available.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is given in the following table.

[1] Figures for the period 1967-68 to 1972-73 are not compatible with those for later years as they relate to rateable values prior to the revaluation in 1973-74.

[2] In 1974-75 there was an adjustment to rate poundages because of changes in local authority responsibilities, in particular the transfer of water and sewerage services from local authorities to water authorities.

Urban Aid

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what applications he has received for urban aid in the Dwyfor area for 1989-90; whether each of these applications is valid for consideration within the scope of the urban aid scheme; and if he will ensure that the multiple deprivation of this area is duly considered when deciding on such applications.

Mr. Grist: I have received two applications for urban aid for 1989-90 in the Dwyfor area, both of which are valid for consideration within the scope of the urban programme. These are:

(i) Provision of changing facilities and clubhouse at the Traeth sports fields, Porthmadog. £100,000 capital costs.

(ii) Preseli harbour—provision of workshops and harbour master's office. £156,500 capital costs.

I am careful to ensure that the comparative needs of all local authorities are given serious consideration.

Education

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will seek to amend the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 in order to require local education authorities in Wales to provide governing bodies for Welsh language units located on the campus of English medium primary schools, in order to receive the same protection under that Act as is afforded to Welsh language primary schools with regard to governing bodies.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No. I do not consider it appropriate for there to be separate governing bodies for units within schools.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consents he has given under section 10 of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 for the grouping of primary schools which have a significant difference between them in the use of the Welsh language, for the purposes of establishing governing bodies; and why each was deemed appropriate.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No consents have been given for the grouping of Welsh medium schools with English medium schools. I have given consent for five groups of Gwent schools each of which include a school with a Welsh medium unit. In each case the former governing body had no objection. Moreover, Gwent LEA is in the process of reviewing Welsh medium primary education in the county and hopes to move towards a system of Welsh primary schools rather than units, which, if implemented, will result in separate governing bodies being established for each of the Welsh primary schools. The proposals were, therefore, considered by the LEA to be a short-term measure.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what advice he has given to local education authorities concerning the desirability of Welsh units located on the same campus as English language primary schools, being enabled to have their own governing bodies to reflect their differing education interests and their separate catchment areas.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: General advice on the implementation of the provisions of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 which relate to governing bodies is given in Welsh Office circular 12/87. In this context a Welsh-medium unit is not considered to be a separate school and no specific advice has been given on the treatment of Welsh units located on the same campus as English language primary schools.

Welsh Language Document

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will state the date on which the Welsh language document, "Y Rhagleni Rheoli Corfforaethol I'r Gwasanaeth Iechyd yng Nghymru" was published; what was the publication date of the corresponding English language document; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Welsh language document was published on 21 September 1988 and in a translation of the corresponding English document published on June 22 1988. It is not always possible to publish such documents simultaneously.

Emergency Housing

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he is satisfied with the provisions made by local authorities in Wales for emergency housing for people who (a) suffer from alcohol abuse, or (b) are released from prisons or detention centres.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 2 November 1988]: Local authorities have ample powers to secure emergency housing for all categories of homeless people. Information is not held centrally on the way in which local authorities exercise these powers. No representations have been made to me which would suggest that particular authorities are failing to act responsibly.

ENERGY

Atomic Power Station, London

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if there is any proposal for an atomic power station in the London area.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No.

Opencast Coal Mines

Mr. Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his current policy on the licensing of opencast coal mines; and whether he is considering any alterations to the present licensing system.

Mr Michael Spicer: The Government are keen to see a thriving private mining sector competing in the market place. They welcome British Coal's agreement to set royalties at a level which will allow efficient operators to be profitable and the royalty reductions that have been made to reflect more difficult market conditions. In the interests of greater transparency, I have asked British Coal to set out, in consultation with the representatives of the licensed operators, a statement of its licensing policy and practice. Changes in the licensing limits would require legislation, the need for which has been overtaken by our plans to privatise the entire coal industry in the next Parliament.

Piper Alpha Platform

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will issue an instruction, under the terms of the Petroleum Act 1987, to the owners of the Piper Alpha platform to remove completely from the seabed all that remains of the platform.

Mr. Peter Morrison: No. My right hon. Friend is considering an abandonment programme for Piper Alpha which has been called for and submitted under section 4 of the Petroleum Act 1987.

Wave Power

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on future funding by his Department to support the wide tank at Edinburgh university for wave energy reseach.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Any proposal from Edinburgh university will be considered on its merits.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when the report and conclusions submitted in 1983 by Rendel Palmer and Tritton concerning the viability of the Salter's Duck wave power project were first submitted in any form to his Department; what alterations in that report or its conclusions were made or recommended by his officials; what representations he has received from Mr. Gordon Senior on the alteration of the report as submitted by him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The report by Rendel, Palmer and Tritton was submitted to the Department in 1983.

Rendel, Palmer and Tritton were contracted to act as independent assessors for all wave energy devices and their conclusions were reached independently based on experience and engineering knowledge. The Department is aware of Mr. Gordon Senior's views on the matter.

West Burton B Power Station

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to announce the final approval for West Burton B coal-fired power station.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend is considering the representations he has received about the CEGB's application for consent to construct this station. However, I understand that discussions are also continuing between the relevant local planning authorities and the CEGB about some matters concerning the construction and operation of the station. My right hon. Friend will wish to take account of the outcome of these discussions in reaching any decisions on the application.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Parking Fines

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish up-to-date figures recording the number of unpaid parking fines incurred by each diplomatic mission in the first six months of the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested by my hon. Friend is given in the table. The table also includes those international organisations which have incurred unpaid fines. The figures may be reduced by late payment.

The total of 5,838 for the first six months of 1988 is a welcome reduction of 42 per cent. over the same period of 1987. It compares with nearly 67,000 in the first six months of 1984 before publication of the 1985 White Paper. The top 10 missions account for 35 per cent. of the total. We shall be underlining our concern to the heads of these missions with a view of achieving further reductions.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Disabled Persons

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he plans to review provisions for employment of disabled persons in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: The Department of Economic Development is at present reviewing provisions for the employment of disabled persons in Northern Ireland and as part of this review is participating in a working group with the Northern Ireland Council on Disability. Consideration will also be given to the application in Northern Ireland of any changes which emanate from the review which is currently being undertaken by the Department of Employment in Great Britain.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action has been taken to date to ensure that employers provide work opportunities for the quota of disabled persons.

Mr. Viggers: Under existing legislation, employers with a work force of 20 or more people are required to employ a quota of 3 per cent. of registered disabled people. Only when a firm can satisfy the Department of Economic Development that there is no suitable registered disabled person available is a permit issued allowing the firm to employ a non-disabled worker. In their annual directors' report, all companies employing an average of more than 250 people must include a statement describing their employment policy towards the disabled in the previous financial year. A range of financial schemes are also available to assist employers in training and employing disabled people.

Disablement resettlement officers in the Department of Economic Development maintain close contact with employers to provide advice and encourage the employment of disabled people.

Divis Flats

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made with the demolition of Divis flats in West Belfast and the development of alternative housing provision for the people of Divis.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive who has advised me that since 1984 six of the original 12 deck-access blocks have been demolished in a phased programme of redevelopment, scheduled to take place over a seven to 10-year period. Work on a first phase of 95 new dwellings is expected to start in March 1989.

Sub-standard Houses

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans the Northern Ireland Housing Executive has to bring sub-standard houses in Northern Ireland up to an acceptable standard.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 31 October 1988]: This is a matter for the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive who has advised me that the Housing Executive proposes to carry out capital improvements principally in relation to space standards, kitchens and heating in 76,500 dwellings in its own stock over a 10-year period. The improvement and repair of qualifying dwellings in the private sector will continue to be assisted by grants under the Housing Executive's renovation grants scheme.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many sub-standard houses owned by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive are situated in the constituency of Newry and Armagh.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 31 October 1988]: This is a matter for the chairman of the Northern Ireland

Housing Executive who has advised me that the Housing Executive owns 3,340 houses in the constituency of Newry and Armagh which have features below its current new-build standards, principally space, kitchens or heating.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many sub-standard houses owned by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive are situated in rural areas and how many in urban areas.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 31 October 1988]: This is a matter for the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, who has advised me that the Housing Executive owns 19,120 and 57,380 houses in rural and urban areas respectively which have features below its current new-build standards principally space, kitchens or heating.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many sub-standard houses are owned by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in the whole of Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 31 October 1988]: This is a matter for the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive who has advised me that the Housing Executive owns 76,500 houses in Northern Ireland which have features below its current new-build standards principally space, kitchens or heating.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many houses owned by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive which were sub-standard have been brought up to standard in the period between 1 January 1980 and 1 January 1988.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 31 October 1988]: This is a matter for the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive who has advised me that improvements were carried out to 58,222 dwellings over the period.

Aid and Job Creation Schemes

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give, for each year since 1982, the total level of Government financial assistance to private industries in the constituency of Newry and Armagh under aid and job creation schemes; and what is his estimate of the total number of jobs created by this assistance.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 1 November 1988]: The following is the amount of employment-related assistance given by the industrial development agencies in each of the financial years 1982-83 to 1987-88. The statistics for the Industrial Development Board are based on the constituency of Newry and Armagh; those for the Local Enterprise Development Unit are compiled on a local authority basis only and therefore cover the district council areas of Armagh and Newry and Mourne.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Recycled Stationery

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he has received updated information from Her Majesty's Stationery Office on the use of recycled stationery within the House of Commons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: Yes. The Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee reconsidered the possible use of recycled paper in February this year. After discussions with HMSO, the Sub-Committee concluded that paper containing recycled material was unsuitable for use as House of Commons stationery and that the present quality of writing paper and envelopes should be maintained.

Public Bills (Statistics)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will produce a table showing for each Bill introduced in this Parliament the time taken at (a) Second Reading, (b) Committee stage, in the House of Commons, (c) Report stage, (d) Third Reading, (e) where applicable, guillotine, (f) Lords amendments and (g) in total.

Mr. Wakeham: A table showing the information requested for each Bill introduced in this Parliament could be provided only with disproportionate cost. The information for Government Bills only, up to and including 1 November 1988, is as follows:

PRIME MINISTER

Inflation

Q24. Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy to announce a target for zero inflation within the lifetime of the current Parliament.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

The Government's policy of gradually reducing inflation over a period of years with the ultimate objective of price stability is set out in the medium-term financial strategy, published in the Financial Statement and Budget Report.

West Riding of Yorkshire

Q69. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister when she next intends to pay an official visit to the west riding of Yorkshire.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.
My right hon. Friend has at present no plans to do so.

Departmental Dispersal

Q120. Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Prime Minister if the speech on Government Department dispersal by the Secretary of State for Scotland at the Conservative party conference represents Government policy.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.
The lecture delivered by the Secretary of State for Scotland was an assessment of the desirability of relocation of Government Departments out of London. He also referred to the increasing trend for businesses to relocate their enterprises out of the south-east. Successive Governments have already successfully relocated a major part of the ODA to East Kilbride, the Royal Mint to Wales, the Forestry Commission to Edinburgh, and part of the DSS to Newcastle.

Wales

Q157. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister when she next plans to make an official visit to Wales.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.
My right hon. Friend has at present no plans to do so.

Engagements

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 3 November.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 3 November.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 3 November.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 3 November.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 3 November.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 3 November.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 3 November.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.
My right hon. Friend is on an official visit to Poland.

"The Wilson Plot"

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if, in the light of the book, "The Wilson Plot" by David Leigh, she will set up a judicial inquiry into allegations that members of the security services acted improperly towards the Government in the 1970s.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply. No.

President Gorbachev

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if she has invited President Gorbachev to the United Kingdom; and if she will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have been asked to reply.
My right hon. Friend invited Mr. Gorbachev to pay an official visit to the United Kingdom during her own visit to the Soviet Union in 1987. We look forward to hearing when he would like to come.

Human Rights

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if she will discuss next year with the newly-elected President of the United States of America what steps can be actively taken to ensure that basic human rights are enjoyed in all countries which have direct or indirect military pacts or links with the United States of America and the United Kingdom.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have been asked to reply.
Human rights questions are frequently discussed in our contacts with the United States Administration.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister what preconditions have been established by Her Majesty's Government for their participation at any conference on human rights to be held in the Soviet Union.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have been asked to reply.
We have made clear that we shall consider attending such a conference only when the Soviet Union has actually implemented its Helsinki commitments.

Solidarity

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she intends to make to the leaders of Solidarity regarding trade union rights when she visits Poland.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have been asked to reply.
My right hon. Friend will tell them of her support for free and independent trades unions.

Government Advertising

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list all advertising campaigns commissioned by the Government since 1980 which involved, in whole or in part, the use of television advertising.

Mr. Lawson: I have been asked to reply.
Information on publicity, including television advertising, is not held centrally except where the expenditure incurred was through the Central Office of Information and can be supplied only at disproportionate cost.
Details of departmental expenditure on publicity for the financial years 1979-80 to 1987-88 were supplied by Ministers in response to 55 questions from the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) and published in the Official Report, November-December 1986, July 1987 and November 1987-January 1988.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Repair and Maintenance

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to ensure that sufficient capital funds are available to enable inner London boroughs to bring schools up to adequate repair and maintenance standards.

Mr. Butcher: The following table shows for the financial year 1987-88 ILEA's budget for repairs, alterations and maintenance to its primary and secondary schools, as compared with outer London boroughs, other metropolitan authorities, and the average for England.

£ per pupil (FTE)

	Primary	Secondary
ILEA	99·4	133·3
Outer London boroughs	59·6	81·3
Other Metropolitan Authorities	46·8	64·7
England	53·3	71·0

Source: CIPFA Education Statistics 1987-88 Estimates.

These figures show that ILEA spends on a per pupil basis more than half as much again as the outer London boroughs, which in turn spend more than the national average, and significantly more than other metropolitan authorities in England. A very similar relationship prevailed in each of the three previous years.

School leavers

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of school leavers in the Langbaurgh division on leaving school in each of the past 10 years (a) went into work, (b) entered a training scheme, (c) went on to higher or further education, (d) became unemployed and (e) joined Her Majesty's forces.

Mr. Butcher: Information in the form requested is not available to my Department.

Dyslexia

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will urgently instruct his Department to carry out research into dyslexia and its effect on children.

Mr. Butcher: A considerable level of research into this subject has already been undertaken. Ministers are bound to consider conflicting priorities across the whole range of children with learning difficulties when considering research proposals.

Polytechnics

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his intentions with regard to regulations governing revenue and capital expenditure by incorporated polytechnics.

Mr. Jackson: Revenue and capital expenditure by incorporated polytechnics will be covered, as appropriate, in the financial memoranda which the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council (PCFC) will conclude with each institution in the polytechnics and colleges funding sector. The PCFC will conclude such memoranda having regard to what is required of it in the financial memorandum governing relations between the council and the Department. The Department is currently consulting interested parties, including the PCFC itself and bodies representative of institutions, about the content of that memorandum.

University Technicians (Pay)

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to implement the recommendations of the independent pay study published in 1987 as part of the 1986 pay settlement for technicians in universities.

Mr. Jackson: The Government are not involved in the pay negotiations of university technicians. It is for universities to negotiate a settlement from within their resources in the light of their overall priorities and having regard to the need to recruit and retain staff of appropriate quality. Comparability with other groups cannot be the main criterion.

Higher Education

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what consideration is being given to setting a ceiling on the overall numbers of students in higher education that Her Majesty's Government are prepared to fund, independently of the level of demand;

(2) what proposals he has regarding the public funding of tuition in higher education institutions;

(3) what plans there are to change the current mechanism of higher education institutional funding;

(4) what plans he has to change the system of higher education funding to one of funding each higher education institution by a system based on the allocation of vouchers to students on the basis of their examination performance;

(5) what plans he has to introduce a system of higher education funding whereby public funding of each particular institution is determined by the pattern of student preference.

Mr. Jackson: There is a vigorous debate in progress on future methods of funding higher education institutions. My right hon. Friend has made clear that we want this debate to mature much further yet. He has also given clear assurances that the Government will not reach a particular view—let alone follow that up with concrete action—without full discussion with the new higher education funding councils and with the leaders of the universities, polytechnics and colleges.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to change the basis of funding of student places in higher education from the modified form of the Robbins principle set out in Cmnd. 9524.

Mr. Jackson: None.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has to separate the functions of teaching and research in higher education institutions, for the purposes of determining funding.

Mr. Jackson: As indicated in my right hon. Friend's letter of 31 October giving guidance to the Universities Funding Council, the Government intend that funding for research in universities should be more clearly distinguished from funding for teaching. Various practical questions have to be settled, in consultation with all those concerned, before such a scheme could be fully implemented, and we are actively pursuing these.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he proposes to restrict the number of publicly-funded places available in higher education institutions for students studying courses leading to qualifications as (a) medical doctors, (b) dentists, (c) veterinary surgeons and (d) teachers.

Mr. Jackson: Provision in these areas will continue to reflect expected demand for such graduates.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) whether he has any proposals to encourage higher education institutions to recruit additional home students on a private fee-paying basis;

(2) what is his policy in respect of the public funding of tuition fees in higher education.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has said that he wishes to consider a shift from block grant to fees in the public funding of higher education. The Government have no proposal to require students in receipt of mandatory awards to meet part of their tuition fees. Institutions do not need permission to charge tuition fees higher than those met under the mandatory awards arrangements.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what plans he has to secure increased access to higher education by students without the appropriate qualifications;

(2) what plans he has to encourage higher education institutions to offer places to students without the appropriate formal qualifications.

Mr. Jackson: There is general agreement that higher education should be open to more students with non-traditional qualifications. The Government are funding various related research projects. Actual recruitment of such students is dependent on the policies and decisions of individual institutions.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to increase the share of gross domestic product directed to the purpose of higher education funding.

Mr. Jackson: Public expenditure on higher education in this country already accounts for a larger proportion of GDP than in our major West European partners, and in Japan. This position is likely to be sustained by the public expenditure settlement announced by my right hon. Friend on 1 November.

School Sporting Activities (Accidents)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what arrangements are made for the recording of accidents to school children while engaged in sporting activities as part of the school curriculum.

Mr. Butcher: Schools, as places of employment, are covered by the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985 (RIDDOR) and are thereby required to provide the Health and Safety Executive with written details of specified major injuries sustained by pupils (as well as employees) for whose activities they are responsible within seven days of an accident occurring.

The regulations are made under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 and are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the number of accidents occurring to school children while engaged in sporting activities as part of the school curriculum for the last five years for which information is available.

Mr. Butcher: Health and Safety Executive figures show that, in the 12 months from April 1986 to March 1987, one fatality and 4,576 major injuries occurred involving school children while engaged in supervised sporting activities, though not necessarily as part of the school curriculum. Most of the injuries were fractures. Figures for earlier years are not available.

First Aid

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what provision is made for teaching first aid to schoolteachers who have the responsibility for supervising schoolchildren engaged in sporting activities as part of the school curriculum.

Mr. Butcher: My Department's criteria for courses of initial teacher training contain no specific requirement for training for the first aid of pupils who may be injured while taking part in school sports. Our long-standing advice to local education authorities is, however, that all teachers should have a basic working knowledge of first aid and that a proportion of the teaching staff in every school should hold a valid first-aid certificate following an approved course of training.

Universities Funding Committee

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the membership and constitution of the Scottish committee of the Universities Funding Committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The composition and membership of the UFC's statutory Scottish committee are for the council itself to determine, though my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland will be writing to it with guidance on these matters.

Under-fives

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report a table ranking education authorities by the number of pre-school places they provide per 1,000 of the under-five population.

Mr. Butcher: Information on the number of places is not collected centrally. The number of pupils under five on roll in maintained nursery and primary schools per 1,000 of the estimated three and four-year-old population for each local education authority in England in January 1988, ranked in order, is given in the following table.

Higher Education (Fees)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what steps the Government are planning to take to encourage higher education institutions to set up their own bursary funds to assist home students to pay any envisaged additional fees which may be charged to students;

(2) if there are plans to set aside funds from the UFC/PCFC allocations to provide a contribution to bursary funds which may be set up by higher education institutions to assist students to pay any envisaged additional fees which may be charged to those students;

(3) what regulatory obstacles exist to prevent higher education institutions from charging private fees to existing home students in addition to current, publicly funded, fees;

(4) what regulatory obstacles exist to prevent higher education institutions from charging fees to new homes students.

Mr. Jackson: While higher education institutions have long been able to charge holders of mandatory awards tuition fees higher than those met under the awards arrangements, it is not the practice to do so and the Government have no plans to require this. The question of bursary funds does not therefore arise.

Expenditure

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the Government's plans for expenditure on education and science over the next three years.

Mr. Kenneth Baker [pursuant to his reply, 1 November 1988]: Further to my announcement that I am allocating an extra £14 million for urgently needed equipment for basic science in 1988-89, and subject to parliamentary approval, extra moneys will be provided in the current year to the research councils, the universities and the Royal Society as follows:

	£ million in 1988-89
AFRC	1·70
MRC	3·00
NERC	1·00
SERC	3·05
Royal Society	0·25
UGC	5·00
TOTAL	14·00

In making these allocations I have had particularly in mind the advice I received last May from the Advisory Board for the Research Councils on the equipment needs of the science base. Their detailed use will be for each body to decide, having regard to the overall purpose of providing equipment to support basic science. I understand that the research councils expect to use the money both in their own establishments and in the universities in such fields as the biological sciences, neurosciences, marine science and computing. The addition for the Royal Society should allow some further 70 to 80 equipment grants to be made to holders of the society's junior research appointments.

ENVIRONMENT

Water Rates

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the average cost per household for water rates in the current year.

Mr. Moynihan: The average cost per household for water rates (English water authorities) in the current year is £105·30.

Dogs

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to implement section 37 of the Local Government Act 1988 to use his powers by regulation to make provision for the establishment and administration of a dog registration scheme by local authorities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have no such plans.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for consultation with local authorities or such other organisations to make provision for the establishment and administration of a dog registration scheme.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None.

Lead-free Petrol

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by region the percentage of retail petrol outlets that are selling lead-free petrol; what further measures he intends to take to encourage its sale; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The percentage of petrol stations in the United Kingdom which sell unleaded petrol are as follows:

	per cent.
England and Wales	11·4
Scotland	12·3
Northern Ireland	7·4

Percentage figures are not available on a regional basis, but at 28 October 1988 the numbers of stations were:

	Number
Wales	96
Scotland	190
Northern Ireland	70
England:
East Midlands	165
Eastern	256
Greater London	192
North West	222
Northern	68
South East	453
South West	221
West Midlands	161
Yorkshire and Humberside	168

The total number is growing rapidly.

The Government are firmly committed to unleaded petrol and are pursuing a number of initiatives to promote greater uptake of the fuel. However, the motor manufacturers and dealers and the oil companies and petrol retailers also have a part to play.

Measures to promote the changeover to unleaded petrol are co-ordinated by the unleaded petrol group, which I chair. The Government are currently participating fully in national lead-free petrol week organised by CLEAR (the Campaign for Lead-Free Air) to encourage greater public awareness about unleaded petrol. Further measures are under consideration.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the makes and models of cars which are manufactured in Britain so as to run on lead-free petrol.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A complete list of all new cars, indicating whether or not they are capable of running on unleaded petrol, is contained in the Department of Transport's new car fuel consumption guide. A copy of the latest guide has been placed in the Library of the House.

Change of Use

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to announce the alteration in circular S1765/1987 of the General Development Order which accompanied the Use Class Order 1987 regarding the size limitation of space which may be switched from the general industrial and warehouse use class to business use without specific planning permission.

Mr. Chope: The Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988 was laid before the House on 31 October and will come into effect on 5 December. It consolidates the 1977 GDO and subsequent amending orders, including SI 765 of 1987. It removes the floorspace limitation on change of use of a building from general industrial to business use. A floorspace limitation is retained for changes from business or general industrial use to use for storage and distribution, and from use for storage and distribution to business use.

Docklands

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the original, and what is the current, estimate for the cost of the docklands highway.

Mr. Trippier: The London Docklands development corporation's programme of major roads has a total estimated cost of £550 million at outturn prices. This includes all associated project costs for items such as land acquisition, replacement housing and noise alleviation works. The scope and content of the programme was finalised only recently, and therefore no comparable earlier estimate is available.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the recent letter to his Department from Eugene Barron, the London Docklands development corporation finance director, on the London Docklands development corporation financial position.

Mr. Trippier: No.

Housing (Consultation Documents)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make available a full summary of the responses, together with a list of those organisations which made responses broken down by those supporting and those disagreeing with the proposals in respect of the consultation papers entitled (a) "The Right to Buy: Legislative Proposals", (b) "Finance for Housing Associations", (c) "Housing Action Trusts: A Consultation Document", (d) "The Private Rented Sector", (e) "De-Regulation of the Private Rented Sector: Implications for Housing Benefit", (f) "Home Improvement Policy", (g) "Tenants' Choice", (h) "Houses in Multiple Occupation: Consultation Document", (i) "Tenants' Guarantee: Guidance for Registered Housing Associations", (j) "Tenants' Choice Landlords: Approval, Post-Approval and Revocation Procedures", (k) "The Future Funding of Housing Association Hostels and Special Needs Projects", (l) "Consultation Paper on New Town Transfer", (m) "Capital Expenditure and Finance: A Consultation Paper" and (n) "New Financial Regime for Local Authority Housing".

Mr. Ridley: No.

Aluminium

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when his Department last checked each of the water authorities to examine the levels of aluminium in water recorded by each authority;

(2) if he will make a statement on the process used by his Department to monitor levels of aluminium in water for each water authority.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department does not directly carry out monitoring or checking procedures on the levels of aluminium in drinking water supplied by water authorities. It is the responsibility of water authorities to monitor the aluminium levels in the drinking water they supply. This monitoring is carried out regularly in accordance with the requirements of the EC drinking water directive.

Water Privatisation

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, with regard to the proposed water privatisation, he will take steps to ensure that a proportion of shares held in a particular region's water authority is retained by individuals and companies within that region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: No decisions have yet been taken on the details of the offer structure for water privatisation, but there are precedents for employee share offers, continuing employee share schemes and incentives for customers to apply for and hold shares.

Drinking Water (Lead Levels)

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department is working on the revision of lead standards in drinking water.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department continually keeps under review drinking water standards, including the lead standard, in the light of the latest medical advice.

House Prices

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the average price of a house in Lancashire between July 1987 and June 1988.

Mr. Trippier: The figures are not available in the form requested. Average prices in the north-west for the four quarters between July 1987 and June 1988 are:

1987
Q3	30,106
Q4	30,004
1988
Q1	30,685
Q2	32,914

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those local authorities by area in which 4·5 per cent. or more of the private sector housing stock is considered unfit.

Mr. Trippier: The following 74 English housing authorities have reported in their 1988 housing investment programme returns that 4·5 per cent. or more of the private sector (owner-occupied and private rented) housing stock in their areas at 1 April 1988 was unfit:

Homelessness

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the report currently in his Department's hands by Miss Pat Niner, of Birmingham university, on homelessness and local authority housing will (a) be sent to the printer and (b) be released; and how much the report cost his Department.

Mr. Trippier: The report held by my Department is a draft. A final version which takes account of comments of participating local authorities and relevant Government Departments is currently being discussed with the author Miss Pat Niner. A precise publication date cannot therefore be given at this stage but it is hoped that it will be as soon as possible. The cost of the research on which the report is based is approximately £25,000.

Housing Action Trusts

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the criteria adopted by his Department in selecting each of the housing action trusts so far designated.

Mr. Trippier: No housing action trusts have yet been designated. My hon. Friend the then Minister for Housing and Planning announced on 11 July proposals to set up housing action trusts in six areas. Among the matters to which the Secretary of State may have regard in deciding whether to include a particular area of land in an order designating a housing action trust area are those listed in clause 60 of the Housing Bill.

Mr. Tony Banks To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the amounts spent on maintenance and refurbishment by the local authorities in each of the estates designated a housing action trust in each of the past three years.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of today to his earlier question. It is for local authorities to publish information about individual estates.

Polycyclic Aromatic Hydrocarbons

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the level of polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons in London's drinking water.

Mr. Moynihan: We are aware that drinking water samples taken within the London area have occasionally exceeded the standard set for polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons (PAH) in the EC drinking water directive. Thames water is investigating. Our medical advisers consider that there is unlikely to be any significant health risk from drinking water which occasionaly exceeds the standards.

Council House Sales

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish figures showing numbers of council houses sold and subsequently repossessed both in numercial terms and as a proportion of all council houses sold for each of the years 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: This information is not available.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the current exceptions requiring local authorities to exercise the right to buy for their tenants.

Mr. Trippier: Schedule 5 to the Housing Act 1985, as amended by the Housing and Planning Act 1986, sets out exceptions to the right to buy. In addition, tenants whose tenancies are not secure by reason of the exceptions to security of tenure in schedule 1 to the Act will not have the right to buy.

Empty Properties

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those local authorities which estimated 5·1 per cent. or more of the private sector housing stock in their areas as being vacant at 1 April.

Mr. Trippier: The following 57 English housing authorities have estimated, in their housing investment programme returns, that 5·1 per cent. or more of the private sector housing stock (owner-occupied and private rented) in their areas was empty at 1 April 1988.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the level of average domestic rates in 1987-88 prices for each year between 1967-68 and the latest date available.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 31 October 1988]: The table requested is as shown:

Local Government Legislation

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all legislation introduced since 1979 that has had a direct application to local government.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 28 October 1988]: A considerable number of public general Acts, not all of them the responsibility of the Department of the Environment, have a direct application to local government. A list of the major Acts since 1979 is as set out:

Land Registry

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make the contents of the Land Registry available for inspection by members of the public.

The Attorney-General: I have been asked to reply.

The Land Registration Act 1988 gives the public the right to inspect the register. The Act is likely to come into force in 1990 when the necessary preparations have been made.

DEFENCE

HMS Penelope and Southampton

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects that the frigate Penelope and the destroyer Southampton will be ready for service at sea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: HMS Penelope is currently being repaired in Southampton by Thew Engineering Ltd. which won the contract after competition, and is expected to return to active service in the early part of 1989. HMS Southampton is due to return from the Gulf shortly. No decisions have yet been taken on her repair, but the work may be combined with a scheduled refit. It is not therefore possible at this stage to forecast when she will be ready for sea.

Norton Manor Camp, Taunton

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has to modernise the barracks of Norton Manor camp, Taunton.

Mr. Freeman: A redevelopment study of Norton Manor camp is currently in progress and is expected to be completed in mid-1989. This study will produce a development plan for the establishment which will include proposals to modernise its facilities where necessary.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the capital expenditure at Norton Manor camp, Taunton, and the purposes for which it was spent in the last five years for which information is available.

Mr. Freeman: Capital expenditure on works services at Norton Manor camp approved over the last five years has been as follows:

Financial year	Expenditure £
1983-84	238,010
1984-85	58,600
1985-86	147,866
1986-87	374,483
1987-88	60,487

The main purposes for this expenditure has been to maintain and improve the living/recreational accommodation and working areas within the camp, which is of world war II vintage, to meet the needs of an operational Commando unit.

Departmental Services

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much was earned by his Department during the last financial year from services provided to the private sector.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I regret that the information is not held in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. For accounting purposes, receipts from the private sector are not necessarily distinguished from receipts from other sources, but in 1987-88 receipts received centrally from United Kingdom non-Exchequer bodies amounted to some £280 million, covering both sales and services.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what Departmental facilities have been made available for private hire during the past 12 months.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I regret the information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost since business is conducted and charges are raised locally, and there is no central collection of detailed data.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how charges are calculated for the use of military personnel or equipment by private commercial hirers.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In accordance with Treasury guidelines, charges are normally set to recover the full cost of any assistance provided. Charges may only be reduced or waived in certain well-defined circumstances, such as search and rescue and certain assistance to other Government Departments or the police.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide details of the occasions during the past 12 months when serving military personnel were hired by individuals and companies in connection with private and commercial activities.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I regret that the information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost since business is conducted and charges are raised locally, and there is no central collection of detailed data.

Departmental Property

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total value of property disposed of by his Department in the financial year 1987-88; and what is the current estimate of likely disposals in the financial year 1988-89.

Mr. Freeman: Receipts from property sales in the financial year 1987-88 totalled £77 million. The current estimate for receipts in 1988-89 is £148 million.

Private Security Companies

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much was spent by his Department on services provided by private security companies in the last financial year.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend, the Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement on 13 January at column 327. No further information is currently available.

Conservative Party Conference

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for how long HMS Nurton was stationed off Brighton in connection with the 1988 Conservative party conference; and what were her duties.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: HMS Nurton was stationed off Brighton from 1600 hours on 10 October until 1500 hours on 14 October. Her task was to provide a visable offshore presence and to co-ordinate the activities of other maritime forces if required.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Marines were involved in duties in each of the three rigid inflatable boats assisting the police in patrolling inshore waters at Brighton in connection with the 1988 Conservative party conference.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Of the three boats originally provided, two were in fact used and each of these was manned by two Royal Marines. Two Royal Marines were also provided as reliefs.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence at which Conservative party conferences since 1980 members of the armed services have been involved in security work.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Members of the armed forces have responded to police requests for assistance with security duties connected with Conservative party conferences in each year since 1980.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any members of the armed forces were involved in duties associated with the 1988 conferences of any political parties other than the Conservative party.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Yes. Following requests from the Lancashire constabulary, some military personnel assisted the police with security duties in connection with the 1988 Labour party conference.

HMS Nurton

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what duties have been undertaken by HMS Nurton in the past 12 months and where.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In the past 12 months HMS Nurton has spent 29 weeks on exercises, training and operational tasks, 12 weeks undergoing maintenance, and 11 weeks either on visits or at her base port. Apart from two short visits to Scandinavia, HMS Nurton spent the period in home waters.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the operational cost of HMS Nurton in each year for which records are available.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: With the exception of financial year 1983-84, when the ship was in refit, operating costs for HMS Nurton have averaged £2 million per annum over financial years 1982-83 to 1987-88.

Mr. Topy Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the normal operating complement of HMS Nurton.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Thirty-nine officers and ratings.

RAF Exercise (Cost)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total cost involved in the circumnavigation of the world by the Royal Air Force TriStar tanker of 216 Squadron and the four Tornado F3 aircraft of 29 Squadron; and what was the purpose of the exercise.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I believe that the hon. Member is referring to a sequential series of deployments earlier this year which included:

(a) UK (RAF and RN) participation in the integrated air defence system air defence Exercise Lima Bersatu, centred on Malaysia, with other members of the five power defence arrangements;

(b) the first demonstration tour by Tornado F3 aircraft in the far east, visiting Malaysia, Singapore and Indonesia;

(c) Joint training with the Royal Thai Air Force at Korat in Thailand;

(d) Tri-service UK participation in the Australian bicentennial celebrations; and

(e) Participation in air shows on the west and east coast of the USA.

In the course of these deployments, two RAF TriStar tankers from RAF Brize Norton and four Tornado F3 aircraft from RAF Coningsby circumnavigated the world.

The deployments were planned on the basis that costs would be found from within existing RAF allocations, except that additional funds of £945,000 were identified as necessary for the charter of extra support aircraft to enable the RAF transport force to meet other tri-service commitments during the period. A precise total cost for this series of deployments is not available and could not be provided without disproportionate effort.

Radiation Alert, Aldermaston

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on an incident which occurred at the Aldermaston weapons research establishment on Friday 28 October involving a radiation alert, showing in which building the alarm occurred, if it was triggered automatically or through human error and which outside emergency services were notified.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: An automatic alarm system triggered falsely at the atomic weapons establishment at Aldermaston on Friday 28 October. Personnel were evacuated from the building as a sensible precautionary measure, but it was quickly established to be a false alarm and there was no need to notify the emergency services.

We are still investigating the cause of the false alarm, but for reasons of security it is not our practice to disclose the specific identity of buildings at tha atomic weapons establishment.

Gibraltar (Incident)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will place in the Library copies of all press statements relating to the Gibraltar incident issued by his Department on 6, 7 and 8 March;

(2) what was the basis for statements by his Department at 9 pm on 6 March and on the morning of 7 March that military personnel dealt with a suspect bomb;

(3) when, following the Gibraltar shootings, he first became aware that no bomb had been found in Gibraltar;

(4) on what basis his Department issued a statement at 4.45 pm on 6 March that a suspected bomb had been found in Gibraltar.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence press office issued no written statements on 6, 7 or 8 March and responded orally to press enquiries, from the evening of 6 March onwards. Early responses were based on information from Gibraltar that a suspect car had been dealt with by a military explosive ordnance disposal team, and it only became clear during the course of the morning of 7 March that the car had not contained a bomb. This was explained in my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary's statement to the House at 3.30 pm on 7 March.

Atlantic Salmon Conservation Trust (Scotland)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning the sum of £135,000 spent by his Department to enable the Atlantic Salmon Conservation Trust (Scotland) to acquire the Loch and Dornock salmon fishery on the Solway.

Mr. Freeman: The Loch and Dornock salmon fishery, which was immediately adjacent to the Army storage depot at Eastriggs, comprised three main elements: the netting rights, working and living accommodation on the shore and associated rights of access through the depot, 24 hours per day. Because of the close proximity of fishery personnel, it was necessary, for safety reasons, to place a ceiling on the explosive material stored and this was well below the capacity of the depot. In order to allow the exercise of the rights of access, Ministry of Defence staff had to be available at all times specifically to provide escorts through this sensitive depot area. The effect was to inhibit the fully effective operation of the depot and incur significant extra costs. The opportunity to change this situation arose when the fishery was offered for sale and it became apparent that the Atlantic salmon conservation trust was interested in acquiring the netting rights alone. Following negotiation, it was agreed that, once ASCT had acquired the whole interest in the fishery, the Ministry of Defence would purchase the accommodation and associated rights of access. In this way the Ministry of Defence achieved the required improvements in cost-effectiveness without the need to purchase netting rights.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Pesticides

Mr. Hood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will name those pesticides approved by the Government in each year since 1979.

Mr. MacGregor: My Department has regularly published lists of approved pesticides products. The most recent is HMSO reference book RB500, "Pesticides 1988". This and previous publications are lodged in the House of Commons Library. I regret that it is not possible to break those lists down by year of approval without disproportionate cost.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give details of the cost to his Department of monitoring the levels of harmful residues from the use of pesticides; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McGregor: For 1988 my Department is expected to spend £900,000 on monitoring for pesticide residues.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what method of monitoring the excess use of nitrate in soil is applied by his Department.

Mr. Ryder: My Department monitors nitrate levels at various sites in order to provide the basis for guidance to farmers on optimum fertiliser use.

This work indicates that the majority of farmers apply fertilisers within recommended levels. ADAS advisory efforts have led to significant reductions in autumn nitrogen applications, but we are impressing upon farmers at every opportunity the importance of further reductions.

Chernobyl (Restrictions)

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further plans he has for those farmers who are still suffering disruption to their businesses from the restrictions which remain in force after the Chernobyl disaster; what is his latest estimate of the number of farmers involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Approximately 150 holdings in Cumbria continue to be affected by our post-Chernobyl restrictions on the movement and slaughter of sheep. These restrictions are required in order to maintain public confidence in the safety of the food chain. However, the Government is continuing to operate "mark and release" arrangements to ensure the minimum disruption to normal farming practices in the restricted areas and to compensate farmers affected by the restrictions.

The Government are also continuing their research efforts in and around the restricted areas with a view to lifting restrictions at the earliest opportunity commensurate with the need to ensure the safety of the food chain. Results of this research will continue to be published as they become available. In the meantime, we shall continue to maintain close contacts with individual farmers who are affected, and their representative organisations, in order to keep them fully informed of developments.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) when the first case of bovine spongiform encephalopathy was identified during the current outbreak;

(2) when his Department first recognised bovine spongiform encephalopathy as a disease affecting cattle.

Mr. MacGregor: The first identified case of bovine spongiform encephalopathy occurred in November 1986.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state for each county in England and Wales the total number of identified cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy for each of the past 24 months.

Mr. MacGregor: The number of confirmed cases in each county in England and Wales is set out in the table by the month in which the onset of clinical symptoms began.

Month of clinical onset: 1986

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of cattle compulsorily slaughtered as suspected cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy have been subsequently shown to be not infected, by county in cases.

Mr. MacGregor: A total of 363 cattle have been compulsorily slaughtered as suspected BSE cases. Of these, following examination of brain tissue, BSE has not subsequently been confirmed in 25 cases. these were in the following counties:

	Non-confirmed cases
Buckinghamshire	1
Cheshire	1
Clwyd	1
Cornwall	3
Cumbria	2
Devon	2
Dorset	1
Dumfries and Galloway	1
Gloucestershire	2
Hampshire	1
Kent	1
North Yorkshire	2
Oxfordshire	1
Shropshire	3
Strathclyde	1
West Sussex	1
Wiltshire	1

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) on what date compulsory slaughtering of suspected bovine spongiform encephalopathy-infected cattle was instituted; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what steps his Department has taken to ensure that products from bovine spongiform encephalopathy-infected cattle, or suspected infected cattle, are not entered for human consumption; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: From 8 August this year all cattle suspected, on clinical grounds, of being affected with bovine spongiform encephalopathy, have been compulsorily slaughtered and the carcases either incinerated or buried.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he first received representations calling for compensation schemes in respect of bovine spongiform encephalopathy or suspected bovine spongiform encephalopathy-infected cattle; if he will list all such representations; and if he will put copies of such representations in the Library.

Mr. MacGregor: Since bovine spongiform encephalopathy emerged as a new disease problem, a number of organisations and individuals have written to me expressing views about how to deal with it. It would be neither practical nor appropriate to place copies of the representations in the Library of the House.

The Government established an expert working party under the chairmanship of Sir Richard Southwood to advise on all aspects of BSE. That working party made an interim recommendation that affected carcases should be destroyed as a precautionary measure. The Government acted very quickly indeed in responding to this and introduced a policy of compulsory slaughter with compensation.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Department can now positively identify bovine spongiform encephalopathy by means other than post mortem examination; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: There is no test available in the live animal. Cofirmation is possible only by post-mortem examination of brain tissue.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has made any estimate of the amounts of animal products entered for human consumption from bovine spongiform encephalopathy-infected cattle prior to the introduction of the present restrictions.

Mr. MacGregor: A precise estimate is not possible, but from the evidence obtained about the incidence of disease since it was first identified in November 1986, the number of affected cattle slaughtered for human consumption prior to the introduction of the present arrangements is likely to have been small.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his Department's assessment of the relationship between scrapie in sheep and bovine spongiform encephalopathy in cattle; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: Bovine spongiform encephalopathy has a number of features in common with scrapie in sheep. Research is being undertaken to establish the exact relationship between the two diseases.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the possible damage to human health from the consumption of products from bovine spongiform encephalopathy-infected cattle.

Mr. MacGregor: There is no evidence of any risk to humans. Nevertheless, the Government asked Sir Richard Southwood, professor of zoology at Oxford university, to chair an expert working party to examine all aspects of bovine spongiform encephalopathy, including any human health implications. The Government have acted on the working party's interim recommendation that as a precautionary measure, until more is known about BSE, the carcases of affected animals should be destroyed. Meanwhile, research is being undertaken into the possible transmissibility of BSE.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those measures being taken by his Department to limit the incidence and spread of bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. MacGregor: The Government have made the notification of suspected cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy compulsory. Cattle suspected of having the disease are compulsorily slaughtered and the carcases incinerated or buried. Compensation is paid at 50 per cent. of the market value of compulsorily slaughtered animals, valued as if healthy, up to a ceiling.

From 18 July the feeding to cattle of rations containing material from ruminants has been suspended since this is the most likely cause of the disease. Meanwhile a team of experts is conducting a thorough investigation into all rendering plants in Great Britain to determine whether it may be possible to produce animal feed derived from ruminants which can safely be included in cattle rations.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what research his Department is sponsoring into the causes, diagnostic testing, development of immunity, epidemiology and effects of bovine spongiform encephalopathy; and what his plans are for the long-term funding of such research;

(2) whether he has allocated funds for research into bovine spongiform encephalopathy on the basis that it is now market research.

Mr. MacGregor: Epidemiological studies are continuing, the purpose of which is partly to examine the role of meat and bonemeal as the possible source of bovine spongiform encephalopathy and to monitor te occurrence, if any, of any maternal or horizontal transmission. Research work is being carried out to determine the transmissibility of bovine spongiform encephalopathy to various host species, including calves, and studies are being undertaken to define the clinical disorder and to establish its relationship with scrapie. Government funds have been allocated to undertake this research.

CIVIL SERVICE

Crown Servants

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service on what date and for what reasons the following officials left the service of the Crown: Barry Russell-Jones, Anthony Brooks, Jeremy Wetherall, Mollie Sugden, Harry Wharton, Charles Elwell, Patrick Stewart, Frederick Beith and Alec McDonald.

Mr. Luce: Those for whom dates of leaving the Crown can be given are as follows:

	Date
Barry Russell-Jones	1981
Anthony Brooks	1978
Jeremy Wetherall	1978
Harry Wharton	1980
Charles Elwell	1979
Patrick Stewart	1972
Frederick Beith	1971
Alec McDonald	1971

NATIONAL FINANCE

National Savings

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many representations he has received concerning the failure to maintain a competitive interest rate on national savings income bonds; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will improve the interest rate available on national savings income bonds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: I received a number of representations during the summer about the rate of interest on income bonds which, together with the terms and conditions of all national savings products, the Government keep under constant review. The rate, which is paid gross of income tax, was increased from 9 per cent. to 10·75 per cent. on 9 October.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to introduce a new national savings instrument to attract those with sums of over £5,000 to invest.

Mr. Lilley: Yes. A new national savings instrument is to be launched on 4 January. It will offer a guaranteed return, with interest rates set to increase each year of its five-year life. Interest will be paid gross, but subject to tax. The minimum investment will be £100; there will be no upper limit. The interest rates and other details will be announced shortly before it goes on sale.

Sub-Saharan Africa (Debt)

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will place in the Official Report or in the Library the details of the scheme to ease the official debt burden of the poorest and most heavily indebted countries in sub-Saharan Africa agreed in Berlin last month together with the details of the arrangements for implementing the scheme.

Mr. Lawson: The Paris Club of Government creditors has agreed that when rescheduling the official debt of the poorest and most heavily indebted countries they will, provided the country in question is following an approved adjustment programme, offer exceptional debt relief.

Some countries will reduce moratorium interest rates either by 3·5 percentage points, or by half, whichever is the less. Others will write off one third of the debt service being rescheduled. These countries will offer repayment terms over 14 years, with eight years' grace. Countries which cannot at present reduce interest rates or write off debt will reschedule over 25 years, with 14 years' grace.

Creditors may also choose to combine options. The United Kingdom will choose to lower interest rates.

The first concessional reschedulings, for Mali and Madagascar, were negotiated in Paris on 27 and 28 October. I expect a number of Commonwealth countries will be eligible to benefit from these terms when they come to the club in due course, and I take great pleasure in this satisfactory conclusion to the initiative which I launched in April 1987.

Canadian Labatt Lager

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what terms the Canadian Labatt Lager has been granted a United Kingdom licence; and what information he has as to what reciprocal arrangements exist for United Kingdom brewers in Canada.

Mr. Ryder: I have been asked to reply.

Canadian Labatt lager is brewed in the United Kingdom by several United Kingdom brewers. Such licensing arrangements as exist are purely commercial between the companies concerned and the Canadian company and I am not aware of their terms. I understand that similar arrangements apply in Canada, although I am not aware of any specific cases involving a United Kingdom brewer.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Housing Benefit

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, following his uprating statement, he is in a position to announce how housing benefit transitional payments will be treated in April 1989.

Mr. Moore: We have made it clear from the beginning that housing benefit transitional payments will be reduced as increases in other benefits make them less necessary. I have decided on a flat rate reduction of £2 per week in these payments from next April. This will ensure that the vast majority of recipients will gain overall in cash terms from the uprating. There will be special arrangements to protect the small number of people dependent on social security benefits who would otherwise see a cash loss.

I can confirm that applications for transitional payments will continue to be accepted until 31 March 1989. Up to this date transitional payment awards will continue to be backdated to April 1988.

Income Support

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is (a) the number of new claims for income support nationally over the latest quarter for which figures are available and (b) the take-up of supplementary benefit for the corresponding quarter in 1987 for each of the following groups: (i) pensioners, (ii) single parents and (iii) those incapable of work through illness and disability.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is not possible to give a breakdown by the precise groups that the hon. Member has requested. Supplementary benefit and income support are broken down into three categories—pensioners, the unemployed and others. The last category will be predominantly those incapable of work through illness and disability and lone parents. The number of claims for "pensioners and others" for the periods requested is:

Income support:
Claims for three calendar months ending 30 September 1988

	Number
Pensioners	79,193
Others	195,669

Supplementary benefit:
Claims for three four-weekly period sending 22 September 1987

	Number
Pensioners	84,241
Others	236,481

Note: From April this year the counting of statistics changed from a four-weekly to a monthly collection. The 1987 figures cover the period 1 July to 22 September 1987, whereas the 1988 figures cover the period 1 July to 30 September 1988.

Social Fund

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will announce the total sum available for payments from the social fund in 1989-90.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The total sum available for payments from the social fund in 1989-90 will be the same as for 1988-89. The budget for community care grants will be £60 million and the gross budget for loans will be £143 million.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will lay the regulations needed to alter the rules for making cold weather payments this winter in line with his recent statement to the House.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the Social Fund Cold Weather Payments (General) Amendments Regulations 1988 which I have laid before Parliament for this purpose today. These regulations bring forward two significant improvements to the scheme. First, they extend eligibility to families on income support with a child under age five rather than under age two. Secondly, they alter the rules for measuring periods of cold weather so that any spell of seven consecutive days when the temperature averages 0°C or below will trigger a payment.

These changes roughly double the potential for making cold weather payments and are in addition to the improvements announced on 7 October whereby for the first time eligibility was extended to income support pensioners aged 60 to 64 and non-householders receiving income support who fall into the eligible categories.

HEALTH

School Health Service

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action his Department is taking to ensure continued health care for school children within the Nottingham district health authority area, in the light of the authority's reduction of five whole-time nursing posts in the school health service.

Mrs. Currie: Health care for Nottingham school children is a matter for Nottingham district health authority. I understand that the health authority is undertaking a review of workloads and priorities to ensure that children in special schools and in areas of greater need continue to get the necessary services. If there are any particular concerns over a child's health their own general practitioner can of course be consulted.

Erith and District Hospital

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received concerning the future of Erith and district hospital.

Mrs. Currie: Since my previous reply to my hon. Friend on 24 June at column 737 one letter has been received from him and five letters from members of the public.

Family Planning

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, in the latest year for which figures are available, how many women attended (a) their general practitioner and (b) a family planning clinic for family planning advice.

Mrs. Currie: In 1986 in England 1,406,200 women were seen at health authority family planning clinics and an estimated 2,571,000 women received contraceptive services from general medical practitioners. The latter figure includes women accepted for contraceptive services by a general practitioner other than their own.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will publish the district waiting list for 31 March; (2) if he will publish the district waiting list for June; (3) when he expects to publish the waiting list for September.

Mr. Mellor: We published the national and regional waiting list figures for March 1988 on 26 October in the Department of Health statistical bulletin 2/12/88, copies of which were placed in the Library. The district summaries will also be placed in the Library as soon as they are printed. We shall publish the September 1988 figures as soon as possible after they have been received and validated.

In the past we have published waiting list figures for March and September. We are now considering how the new Körner information—which covers far more than waiting lists—can best be made available.

Psychiatric Nurses

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, as part of the current regrading exercise, he will consider the introduction of an additional payment to psychiatric nurses in recognition of the extra clinical responsibility they bear.

Mr. Mellor: No. The new clinical grading structure is designed to recognise and reward extra clinical responsibility in all branches of nursing, including psychiatric nursing. In addition, nursing staff in psychiatric units receive an allowance, on top of basic pay, of £220 a year.

Cancers (Crop Spraying)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the incidence of cancers caused during the process of crop spraying with herbicides and aphicides.

Mrs. Currie: Studies have not demonstrated any effect on the incidence of cancers. There is a statutory duty for the Advisory Committee on Pesticides to advise Ministers on the safe control of pests and it assesses pesticides before recommending approval so as to exclude those which would be carcinogenic to people.

Dr. Higgs and Dr. Wyatt

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has received from the Northern health authority concerning the futures of Dr. Marietta Higgs and Dr. Geoffrey Wyatt; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I am now considering a report received at the end of October from Northern regional health authority, describing the action it has taken following publication of the Butler-Sloss report.

Child Protection Services

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give an undertaking to check in 12 months on the well-being of the children noted in his inspectorate report, "Survey of Child Protection Services in London", to be on the at risk register of London boroughs and not currently attached to a social worker.

Mr. Mellor: It is for the local authorities concerned to ensure that this high priority service is properly and effectively carried out. The social services inspectorate is monitoring closely the situation with regard to child protection services in London and will continue to advise on remedial measures that may be necessary.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act

Mr. Holt: To ask the Attorney-General how many prosecutions have been brought during the past 10 years for offences under the Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1963.

Mr. John Patten: I have been asked to reply.

The readily available information relates to prosecutions for all offences against betting, gaming and lotteries legislation and is published annually in volume 1 of the supplementary tables to the "Criminal statistics, England and Wales", under offence classifications 75 and 106.

SCOTLAND

Rating

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he proposes any steps to harmonise the system of rating of sporting rights that applies in Scotland with the system of rating that currently applies in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The Government have undertaken to consider whether changes are needed in the rating of sporting rights in England and Wales and in Scotland, but I cannot at this stage anticipate our conclusions.

River Tweed (Salmon Fishing)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report those salmon fishing rights on the River Tweed that will be exempt under the provisions of section 22A(1)(b) of the Local Government Finance Act 1988; if he will estimate the rates loss to the local authorities involved; and what steps he proposes to make good the rating revenue lost.

Mr. Lang: Information on individual salmon fishings is not held centrally. The estimated reductions in local authority non-domestic rate income in Scotland resulting from derating of salmon fishings on the River Tweed is £86,000. The local authorities will be compensated under the revenue support grant system.

Housing Conditions

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many occupied dwellings in (a) Glasgow and (b) Scotland lacked one or more of the standard amenities at the most recent available date.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [pursuant to his reply, 1 November 1988]: The available information is limited to the total number of occupied and vacant dwellings falling below the tolerable standard amenities included in the standard. At 31 March 1987 there was a total of 4,814 such dwellings in Glasgow, according to the return submitted by the district council. The comparable figure for Scotland is estimated at 35,000.

Scottish Special Housing Association

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the charges made for factoring Scottish Special Housing Association houses in the Borders region by (a) Waverley Housing, and (b) Roxburgh district council and Ettrick and Lauderdale district council.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The proposed arrangements for the management of its stock in the Borders are a matter for the Scottish Special Housing Association. The association has advised that the payments made to Roxburgh district council and Ettrick and Lauderdale district council are £22·30 per house and £2·90 per garage.

Although arrangements have been agreed in principle with Waverley housing trust to provide a full management service for the SSHA houses in Roxburgh district and Ettrick and Lauderdale district, no contract has yet been signed. The financial arrangements will depend on the total number of houses managed by Waverley housing trust at any time. The formula for this arrangement is still under discussion between the SSHA and the trust to ensure that it properly reflects the different nature of the service to be provided by Waverley housing trust compared with that provided by the district councils.

Newbattle Abbey

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has concerning proposals by Newbattle Abbey trustees to realise land assets in order to raise funds to continue the provision by the college of services to Scottish adults.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This is a matter for the board of governors and the trustees.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will consider extending the deadline for receipt of specific commitments to use Newbattle Abbey college in view of delays in establishing the Scottish wider access programme and other factors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No. My right hon. and learned Friend believes that sufficient time was provided for this issue to be resolved, and he does not wish uncertainty about the future of Newbattle Abbey college to continue longer than is necessary.

Scottish Development Agency

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the board members of the Scottish Development Agency and indicate their other business interests.

Mr. Lang: Members of the agency board are not required to provide information routinely to my right hon. and learned Friend about their financial or other personal interests, but are asked to declare to him any such interest if it is incompatible with membership of the agency. The current membership of the agency board, none of whom has declared such an interest, is as follows:—

Sir Robin G. Duthie CBE (Chairman)
Douglas F. Hardie Esq. CBE JP (Deputy Chairman)
Iain Robertson Esq. (Chief Executive)
James Anderson Esq. CBE
Robert Cowan Esq.
Sir Alex Fletcher
James S. Gordon Esq. CBE
Sir Graham Hills
Gavin H. Laird Esq. CBE
Sir Peter Main
Sir David Nickson
George F. Robertson Esq
Ian C. Wood Esq. CBE

Under Paragraph 13 of schedule 1 to the Scottish Development Agency Act 1975, members must declare an interest in any of the matters arising on the agenda, but such declarations are not notifiable to my right hon. and learned Friend.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Burglary

1. Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress his Department is making in reducing burglary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: There were 60,000 fewer burglaries in England and Wales in the 12 months ending June 1988, compared with the corresponding period to June 1987, a decrease of 6 per cent. This is very encouraging and great credit is due to the police and to the general public, who, with the Home Department's support are becoming increasingly aware of the important role that we can all play in reducing crime.

Violent Criminals (Prison Sentences)

17. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the recent trend in prison sentences for violent criminals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Since 1984, average Crown court prison sentences for men over 21 have increased by 31 per cent. for sexual offences, 21 per cent. for robbery and 13 per cent. for violence against the person.

Terrorism

18. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent steps his Department has taken to develop European co-operation against terrorism; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Co-operation against terrorism takes place in multilateral bodies such as Trevi, in bilateral links with individual countries and in the regular ongoing liaison between officials, the police and security agencies. I attended a meeting of the Trevi Ministers in June and will be attending the meeting under the Greek presidency in Athens in December. In addition, I have had recent bilateral talks on terrorism and other matters with my French, Swiss and Italian counterparts and later today I shall be travelling to Madrid for discussions with the Spanish Minister of the Interior.

Electronic Tagging

19. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's estimate of the cost of electronic tagging per offender involved in the proposed alternative to prison.

Mr. John Patten: I cannot give a firm estimate until tenders are received, but I am sure that the cost, including equipment and monitoring, will be less than that of keeping the offender in prison.

Autocrime

20. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress is being made by his Department against car crime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Last November, the Home Office standing conference on crime prevention set up a working group to consider the prevention of car crime. Rover Group, which is represented on the working group, is producing a security concept car, incorporating a range of the latest technology in car security, for display at this year's standing conference in December.

Five parts of a British standard on vehicle security (mechanical locking systems, security of in-car entertainment equipment, window etching, central power locking and deadlocking) have now been published. Steps are being taken to have the British standard adopted as an EC directive.

Our crime prevention publicity campaign, the second phase of which will be launched shortly, includes information on car crime and the scope for preventing it.

In 1987 the number of offences of theft or unauthorised taking of a motor vehicle recorded by the police in England and Wales fell by 5·2 per cent. compared with 1986. In the 12 months ending June 1988, the number of recorded offences of theft or unauthorised taking of a motor vehicle fell by 6·2 per cent. compared with the previous 12-month period. It is encouraging that these reductions coincided with measures taken by the Home Office and by police forces throughout the country with the specific aim of reducing car crime.

"Spycatcher"

23. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the implications of the Law Lords' decision on the book "Spycatcher" by Peter Wright for Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the accountability of the security service.

Mr. Hurd: I have nothing to add to the written statement I issued on 13 October, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Video Recordings Act 1984

24. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department is taking to secure full enforcement of the Video Recordings Act 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Butler).

Safer Cities Initiative

25. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in developing his Department's safer cities project in Bradford; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Bradford was the second area to be announced as a safer cities project. Since the announcement on 2 June 1988, discussions have been taking place to establish a steering committee which will include representatives of the council, police, probation and voluntary sector. A project co-ordinator, assistance co-ordinator and personal assistant have been recruited and will shortly be in post.

A crime profile based on an analysis of local crime problems is being prepared. This will be supplemented by surveys of local people and the information gained will be used to develop an action plan to tackle crime in Bradford.

Firearms Amnesty

26. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many weapons have been recovered under the recent firearms amnesty; and if he will make a statement.

29. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the number of categories of firearms which have been handed in under the terms of the recent amnesty.

41. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of weapons surrendered during the recent firearms amnesty.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer hon. Members to the reply I gave to the questions by my hon. Friends the Members for Newbury (Sir M. McNair-Wilson) and Dulwich (Mr. Bowden) earlier today.

Rape (Sentences)

27. Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the change over the past year in the average sentence for rape; and if he will make a statement.

39. Mrs Gillian Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the rise over the most recent convenient period in the average sentence for rape; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The average length of sentence for men over 21 sentenced at the Crown court for offences of rape increased by 16 per cent. between 1986 and 1987. The average sentence is now over six years.

Alcohol Abuse

28. Mr. Wolfson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department is taking to deter excessive drinking; and if he will make a statement.

46. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department is taking to deter stupid and excessive drinking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have strengthened the law on sales to under-age drinkers and increased the penalties, strengthened the power of licensing justices by giving them a new discretion to decide whether or not to grant late-night drinks extensions, and to revoke when justified current licences for licensed premises. We have issued crime prevention advice and guidance to the police and courts on the powers available to deal with outbreaks of disorder and infringements of the licensing laws. We have approved the pilot project in Coventry and six other towns to test the effectiveness of a byelaw making it an offence to drink alcohol in designated streets and other public places. Action on the wider aspects of alcohol misuse is being taken forward by the ministerial group on alcohol misuse.

Remand and Trial Prisoners

30. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the current situation relating to remand and trial prisoners in the Manchester catchment area.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Industrial action at HMP Manchester has caused over 500 prisoners, who would otherwise have been held in the prison, to be held in police cells in the north. I am pleased to say that industrial action at Manchester, and also at HMP Liverpool, was suspended on 21 October and prisoners are being transferred from police cells to prison. It will take a little time until the situation in the Manchester area is restored to normal.

Active Citizenship

31. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to ensure that the policies of all public bodies and agencies support and encourage the rôle of the active citizen.

Mr. Hurd: The encouragement of neighbourhood watch schemes and victim support schemes are just two examples of action within my own responsibilities, and the policies of the Government as a whole show that my colleagues share the priority which I have consistently attached to this issue.

Crime (Metropolitan Areas)

32. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new steps his Department is taking against crime in the metropolitan areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Bury, South (Mr. Sumberg) and for Stafford (Mr. Cash) earlier today.

Robbery (Sentences)

33. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the rise over the most recent convenient period in the average sentence for robbery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given earlier to the question by my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett).

Police Constables

34. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to check on the number of constables who are on the beat throughout the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend is responsible only for police forces in England and Wales.

He receives, through Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary, information on the deployment of police officers on patrol[1] in provincial forces as at 31 December each year. On 31 December 1987, 43,347 constables were shown to be on patrol duties—60·5 per cent. of available strength. All ranks on patrol were 52,470—55·2 per cent. of strength, an increase on the previous year of 2·9 per cent.

My right hon. Friend also receives regular information about the deployment of Metropolitan police officers on street duties. On 23 October there were some 15,900 uniformed PCs on divisional duties, 660 more than a year earlier: about 30 per cent. of their time was spent on street duty.

[1] Covers foot and car patrol, home-residential beat, detached beat, support groups, dog sections, mounted branch and marine section.

Young People and Alcohol

35. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the working group on young people and alcohol; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hogg: The group completed its work when it presented its report to the standing conference on crime prevention in November last year. We have kept former members in touch with policy developments.

Passports

36. Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what contribution the introduction of the common format computerised passport is making to the Passport Office's ability to deliver an improved service to its customers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: As my right hon. Friend indicated in his reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Mr. Wheeler) on 27 October, at columns 324-25, all six United Kingdom passport offices, including the recently computerised Glasgow office, are processing straightforward non-urgent applications well within the minimum period of notice specified on passport application forms. The aim of computerisation is to provide a more efficient and improved service. When fully operational the computerised system should avoid the lengthy delays passport applicants have suffered recently with the outmoded manual issuing process.

Prison Building and Refurbishment

37. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new prison buildings and refurbishment initiatives are planned during the current year; and if he will make a statement.

58. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new prison buildings and refurbishment initiatives are planned during the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The following new prisons are currently under construction or at various stages of planning:

Under construction
Brinsford, Staffordshire
Bullingdon, Oxon
Whitemoor, Cambridgeshire
Woolwich, London
Lindholme, Yorkshire
Lancaster Farms, Lancashire
Milton Keynes, Buckinghamshire

Planning clearance obtained
Swaleside, Kent
Banstead, Surrey
Ashford, Kent
Doncaster, Yorkshire

Planning clearance being sought
Hewell Grange, Worcestershire
Tees-side, Cleveland
Kirkham, Lancashire
Rochdale, Lancashire

Financial provision has also been made for five additional training or local prisons to be opened by 1995. Some purpose-built remand centres may be provided if tenders invited from the private sector prove to be cost-effective and ensure fast delivery of places.

Refurbishment schemes are under way or planned to start before the end of 1988-89 at the following establishments:

Bedford
Birmingham
Dartmoor
Erlestoke
Guys Marsh
Huntingdon
Leeds
Leyhill
Lincoln
Liverpool
Pentonville
Ranby
Stafford
Usk
Wormwood Scrubs

The expansion of the prison building programme described at the time of my right hon. Friend's Autumn Statement on the Government's expenditure plans will bring the total number of prison places provided since

Television Services

38. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he now expects to publish a White Paper on the future of television services in the United Kingdom.

57. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to publish his White Paper on broadcasting.

Mr. Renton: Within the next few days.

Neighbourhood Watch

40. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many households in England and Wales are now members of a neighbourhood watch scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: There are now almost 60,000 neighbourhood watch schemes in England and Wales, covering some 3·25 million households. The total number of schemes is over 16,000 more than 12 months ago and four times the total of two years ago. I welcome this evidence of the public's growing support for crime prevention in general, and the concept of neighbourhood watch in particular.

54. Mr. Neale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many homes in the Metropolitan police area are now covered by a neighbourhood watch scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that 833,392 households, or around 2 million people, are members of neighbourhood watch schemes in the Metropolitan police district. They will all be encouraged by the fact that, last year, the number of burglaries in London fell by 4 per cent.

Custodial Remands

42. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were held in custody on remand on 30 September.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 30 September 1988 there were about 9,900 untried and convicted unsentenced prisoners in prison service establishments in England and Wales. A further 1,792 prisoners, most of whom would have been on remand, were held in police cells.

Violent Crime

43. Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take further steps to prevent and reduce the number of violent attacks upon young children.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further steps he is taking to eradicate muggings, rapes and other crimes of violence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Attacks on young children are particularly abhorrent. It is important that parents and others with responsibility for the welfare of young children know how best to advise them on reducing the risks of being attacked or molested. Such advice, which deals with the threat from people known to the potential victim as well as from strangers, is contained in the crime prevention handbook, "Practical Ways to Crack Crime". Since its launch in March this year more than 1·5 million copies of the handbook have been distributed. A revised edition will be published shortly.

Electronic Monitoring

44. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the proposed pilot projects to use electronic monitoring for people on bail will commence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given earlier today to the question by my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre Forest (Mr. Coombs).

Guildford and Woolwich Bombings

45. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he now expects to make a statement on the case of the four persons convicted of the Guildford and Woolwich bombings.

Mr. Hurd: As soon as I have completed my consideration of further representations recently submitted to me.

Identity Cards (Public Houses)

47. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning voluntary schemes for the carrying of identity cards by customers of public houses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have recently received a number of representations from licensed victuallers and members of the public in support of local and national identity card schemes for young people. I am aware of a number of such voluntary schemes for young people around the country which are led and financed by local licensees or by the Licensed Victuallers Association. I am pleased to see licensees taking the lead in initiatives of this kind.

Hampshire Constabulary

48. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received for a further increase in the establishment of the Hampshire constabulary.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received an application from the Hampshire police authority for an increase in the establishment of the force of 47 police posts. This is being considered along with applications from other police authorities for increases in 1989-90. There are 800 posts available for provincial forces and my right hon. Friend will look to Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary for advice on how they should be allocated.

Charity Law

49. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration is being given to a review of charity law.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend announced on 21 January, at column 1089, in reply to a question from the hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown) that the Government intend to bring forward legislation to implement the recommendations of Sir Philip Woodfield's efficiency scrutiny of the supervision of charities. We plan to publish a White Paper early next year setting out our proposals for legislation.

Dorset Constabulary

50. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the chief constable of Dorset about manning levels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received no recent representations from the chief constable of Dorset about police manpower. We have an application from the Dorset police authority for an increase of 40 posts in the force establishment. This is being considered along with applications from other police authorities for increases in 1989-90. There are 800 posts available for provincial forces and my right hon. Friend will look to Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary for advice on how they should be allocated.

Immigration

51. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to reduce delays in the immigration service interviewing sponsors in the United Kingdom at the request of British overseas posts.

Mr. Renton: Arrangements have been made to divert immigration service resources to the interviewing of sponsors in entry clearance cases now that the seasonal peaks of arriving passenger traffic have passed and staff are available for other tasks.

Additional staff have been provided at Manchester, Luton and East Midlands airports and at Harmondsworth to supplement the units already operating at Felixstowe and Sheerness.

Extra staff will also be provided at Birmingham airport after Christmas when building work is completed.

Violence and Vandalism

52. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to introduce further effective deterrent penalties for crimes of violence and vandalism.

Mr. John Patten: The courts already have powers to impose heavy sentences for vandalism and violence. For offences of criminal damage not endangering life, the maximum penalty is 10 years' imprisonment. For the most serious crimes of violence against the person—including murder, manslaughter, rape and robbery—the maximum sentence is imprisonment for life. Between 1984 and 1987, the average length of sentence imposed by the Crown court on men aged 21 or over for violence against the person increased by 13 per cent.; for robbery by 21 per cent.; and for sexual offences by 31 per cent.

Computer Hacking

53. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has about the extent of hacking into computers in (a) Government Departments holding confidential information and (b) private sector institutions; if he has considered the possibility of introducing legislation to make hacking a criminal offence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The Home Office does not collect information about the extent of computer hacking. The Law Commission last month published a working paper on computer misuse. This considers whether hacking should become an offence. The commission has asked for comments by the end of February and will take these into account before publishing its final report and recommendations. In the light of its final report, we shall consider whether legislation is needed.

Remand Prisoners (Wales)

55. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to end the calls made on Welsh police forces to house remand prisoners, from outside Wales, in Welsh police stations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A number of prisoners are currently held in police cells in Wales under arrangements made by the police to accommodate the overspill or to industrial action. We have tackled the problem on two fronts. We have introduced a package of measures to produce more prison places in the short term additional to the delivery of new prisons under the existing building programme. A total of 2,600 new places have been delivered since March this year and a further 1,400 places will be delivered by the end of the financial year. Secondly, we have worked to bring about an end to the damaging local industrial action at the prisons which were locking prisoners out. Local industrial action has now been suspended and the prisons involved are returning to normal working.

56. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received during the last six months with regard to the provision of remand facilities in north Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have recently received two letters from the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) about the provision of remand facilities in north Wales. I have also written to him in response to a question which he put to me in the House on 21 July. In my letter dated 21 September I informed the hon. Gentleman that we had given careful consideration to the question whether we could justify building a remand centre in north Wales. I concluded that we could not, at present.

Gaelic Language

Mr. MacDonald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a further statement on the performance of the broadcasting companies in fulfilling their commitments to the Gaelic language; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: It is for the broadcasting authorities—the BBC and the IBA—to determine the quantity and quality of programes to be broadcast in the Gaelic language. They are responsible for the scheduling of programmes and for their content.

In its recent report on the future of broadcasting, the Home Affairs Select Committee recommended that the needs of minority interests should continue to be met by the established channels. The Government will take this recommendation, and the views expressed by Comunn na Gaidhlig in its discussion document "Towards a Gaelic Television Service", into account in preparing the forthcoming White Paper on broadcasting.

Detention Centres (Group 4)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement about the competitive tendering which has resulted in Group 4 obtaining the contract to staff and manage detention centres;

(2) what safeguards he has obtained from Group 4, following his awarding that company a contract for administering detention centres, relating the training and experience of the staff they intend to employ; if the numbers of staff, their pay and conditions of employment will be comparable to those applied by Securicor which has held the contract previously; for how long the Group 4 contract will run; and on what financial terms terms the Group 4 contract was agreed.

Mr. Renton: The contract for the provision of orderly and escort services for persons detained under the Immigration Act 1971 will be placed with Group 4 Total Security Ltd. from 1 January 1989 for a period of three years. The contract was awarded following competitive tenders invited in accordance with standard procurement practice in the Home Office. The decision to award the contract took account of a number of factors in addition to cost, including a detailed evaluation of the ability of the company to provide the high quality of service specified in the contract. Group 4 staff will undergo a programme of training under the supervision of the immigration service. No change in staffing levels or in the immigration service's responsibility for management of the dentention centres will occur as a consequence of the change of contractor. The cost of the service and details of the pay and conditions of service of the contractors' employees are matters of commercial confidentiality which it would not be right to disclose.

Security Services

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which cases have yet to be considered by the European Court of Human Rights where citizens of the United Kingdom allege that the security services acted improperly towards them; what are the allegations made and the response of Her Majesty's Government; and if it is the intention of the Government to seek to rebut the allegations made.

Mr. Hurd: No such cases are before the European Court of Human Rights. Three cases pending before the European Commission of Human Rights which concern complaints about the Security Service have been communicated to the Government. Proceedings before the commission are confidential and the Government are not at liberty to disclose its pleadings.

Viraj Mendis

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in the light of continued concern that Viraj Mendis is in danger of detention without trial, he will make it his policy not to deport him before full review of the evidence produced by Amnesty International and others.

Mr. Hurd: Mr. Mendis has lodged a petition for leave to appeal to the House of Lords. I have made it clear that I will accept the decision of the courts, and I expect him and his supporters to do the same.

TRANSPORT

A1 (Doncaster-Durham)

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) deaths, (b) serious accidents and (c) minor accidents have been registered on the A1 between Doncaster and Durham in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The table shows accidents by severity on the section of A1 and A1(M) that passes through south Yorkshire, west Yorkshire, north Yorkshire and Durham for the years 1979-1987.

Since 1979, the basis on which the data was held has changed. While it is possible to obtain the information for 1978, it would involve disproportionate cost.

Traffic Predictions

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions high and low predictions of traffic density prepared by his Department have been (a) 5 per cent., (b) 10 per cent., (c) 11 to 20 per cent., (d) 21 to 30 per cent., (e) 31 to 40 per cent. and (f) 41 per cent., and above out; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The traffic flow on 37 road schemes opened since 1981 has been monitored one year after opening and compared with the traffic predicted at the planning stage for the same date. The comparison is with the average of the high and low forecasts. The results are:

Per cent.	Number of schemes for which traffic was: Over predicted	Under predicted
0-10	8	3
10-20	4	6
20-30	3	4
30-40	1	3
over 40	5	0

Overall, traffic on these schemes was overpredicted by 7 per cent.

Traffic Forecasts

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how often he receives traffic forecasts for different modes of transport; over what period of years the forecasts are made; what evidence he has to indicate their reliability; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State receives traffic forecasts on road, rail and air transport. Data are collected on shipping. No forecasts are made of future shipping levels.

Long-term forecasts of passengers using United Kingdom airports are produced at about two-yearly intervals, looking some 15 to 20 years into the future. Low and high growth forecasts are produced. Outcomes have generally been within the forecast range. Successive planning inspectors have drawn on these forecasts as important sources on future needs for airport capacity.

British Rail produces various forecasts of traffic as part of their own investment and planning process. Corporate plan forecasts cover a five-year period; forecasts in support of investment cases generally cover the period of the life of the assets concerned. In the 1970s and early 1980s traffic regularly fell short of forecast levels; in recent years traffic has tended to exceed forecasts.

Six national road traffic forecasts have been made since 1968. Some were interim forecasts for use until a firm forecasting basis was established. The forecasts are made for 35 years ahead, to cover the 30 years over which road investment is appraised. The first of these forecasts considerably overestimated traffic. Except for short periods, actual traffic has been between the high and low levels of the remaining forecasts. Traffic growth has exceeded the high rate of the current forecasts for the last three years. This is mostly the result of the level of economic activity considerably exceeding that assumed when these forecasts were made.

Heavy Lorries (Speeding)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent studies have been commissioned by his Department, or are available to his Department, concerning the incidence of motorway speeding by heavy goods vehicles; what representations he has received from haulage operators seeking the mandatory fitting of speed limiters in all commercial vehicles; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department conducted a national speed survey in 1987. Of 2,002 heavy goods vehicles observed on motorways 22 per cent. were exceeding 60 mph. The comparable figure in the previous such survey in 1983 was 39 per cent. We have received no representations from operators seeking the mandatory fitment of speed limiters to commercial vehicles. We deplore all motorway speeding, whether by heavy lorries or other vehicles.

Birmingham Northern Relief Road

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive his inspector's report on the public inquiry held in Lichfield, Staffordshire, from 24 May onwards on his Department's proposals for the Birmingham northern relief road.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The inquiry ended on 23 September. The inspector has indicated that he hopes to submit his report by March next year.

One-person Operated Buses

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations London Regional Transport has received from the Walthamstow and Southwark coroners about the safety of automatic doors on one-person operated buses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: This is a matter for London Regional Transport and its subsidiary London Buses Ltd.

A19

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progess of his Department's review of standards on the A19 as it affects the Easington constituency; if he will indicate the terms of reference given to the consultants who were commissioned by his Department to carry out this study; and if he will give an indication of the total cost of the study.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The fieldwork for the study of the A19 has been completed. The consultants report is being prepared and should be with the Department before the end of the year. The terms of reference for the study were:

1. to investigate the present and likely future problems caused by any inadequacy of the existing layout and standards of the road and its junction, to cater for present and predicted traffic flows;
2. to identify any environmental problems on the existing road; and
3. to identify improvements to alleviate these problems, either individually or conjointly that provide solutions with the best value for money.

The estimated cost of the study is £70,000.

Road Accidents (Statistics)

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department publishes any statistics relating to the road accident rates of drivers who have reached pensionable age.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Casualty rates per 100,000 population by age, road user type and severity are published annually in table 30 of "Road Accidents Great Britain", which is available in the House of Commons Library. Casualty rates per distance driven by age of driver are estimated periodically. The most recent publication containing such estimates is TRRL research report 135 "The variation of car drivers' accident risk with age", which is also available in the House of Commons Library. Updated figures, based on this report, will be given in "Road Accidents Great Britain 1987", which is expected to be published at the end of November.

Part-time Traffic Lights

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies he has made or is making on the increased use of part-time traffic lights.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department has not undertaken and is not undertaking any studies of this kind. Departmental guidance to highway authorities on criteria for the use of part-time signals has been available for some years. If my hon. Friend has a particular problem in mind perhaps he would write to me.

Motorway Construction

Mr. Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the planned construction dates of all sections of motorway in England that are in his Department's forward programme where construction has not yet commenced.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Motorway schemes which have yet to start construction are as follows:

Planned start of construction in 1988-89

M20 Maidstone-Ashford (It is hoped to let the first contract by the end of 1988).

Planned Start of Construction in 1989-90

M3 Compton-Basset widening
M40 Waterstock-Wendlebury
M40 Widening between junctions 4 and 5
M1 Widening between junctions 23a and 24 (part of Castle Donington North scheme)

Planned start of construction in 1990-91

M1 Climbing lane at junction 9
M5 Widening between junctions 6 and 8
M62 Widening between junctions 12 and 18

Planned start of construction from 1991 onwards

M1 Junction 34 Meadowhall/Tinsley roundabout improvement[1]
M2 Widening between junctions 1 and 3
M3 Bar End-Compton widening
M3 Widening eastbound carriageway between junctions 2 and 3
M4 Junction 4 improvement
M4 Widening between M25 interchange and junction 8/9

M6 Widening between junctions 20 and 21a
M6 Widening between junctions 30 and 31
M6 Improvements between junctions 31 and 32
M11 North facing slip roads at junction 5
M18 Junction with B6094 Cockhill Lane
M20 Widening between junctions 5 and 8 (Maidstone bypass)

M66 Denton-Middleton
M1 Junction 1 improvement
A6(M) Stockport North-South bypass
A74 Carlisle-Scottish border
A446(M) Birmingham Northern relief road
A449 Kidderminster, Stourbridge and Wolverhampton bypass (Western Orbital Route)—standard not yet decided but may be built as motorway
M65-M6 Blackburn Southern bypass

Scheme timings are based on latest planning information and may be subject to change. They are also subject to the outcome of statutory procedures.

[1] Privately funded.

Residents' Parking Permits

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what evidence he has of local authorities issuing residents' parking permits greatly in excess of the number of parking places available; and whether he proposes to take steps to prevent such action.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A permit allows legal parking in designated areas.

This is a matter for individual highway authorities. In some London boroughs the number of residents' permits issued exceeds the supply of residents' parking places. A permit does not guarantee a place to holders.

A27 (Worthing)

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the Howard Humphreys' investigation into possible routes for the A27 in the Worthing area included consideration of the level of the water table at the lower points of the recommended route and the implications of this for storm water and foul sewer drainage under normal conditions and those experienced during flooding in recent years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Howard Humphreys considers that the geological condition and topographical position of its recommended route do not suggest that any exceptional drainage problems are likely. Detailed design which would be needed for any scheme would include drainage.

London Assessment Studies

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department will exercise its discretionary powers of purchase, under the provisions of paragraph 26 of Circular 15/69, in instances of demonstrable blight as a result of the publication of the London assessment studies.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. Land acquisition powers do not extend to the options published by the assessment study consultants.

M1 (Traffic Flow)

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport at what times of the day for each day of the week each direction of the M1 is free flowing without delays caused by traffic volumes between junctions 4 and 16.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department does not collect the information requested for every section of the M1 between junctions 4 and 16. The traffic flow information we have does indicate that there are likely to be problems with congestion for northbound traffic during Friday afternoon and evening and for the southbound traffic on Sunday evening and Monday morning. Delays are also experienced when incidents such as vehicle breakdowns and accidents occur.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the cause of the delays on the M1 in the vicinity of junction 15 southbound at 1600 hours on Sunday 30 October.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A road traffic accident occurred at about 15·20 hours in which a single vehicle struck the central reserve safety fencing before coming to a halt in the offside lane of the southbound carriageway of M1 6km to the south of junction 15. Police officers attending the scene of the accident closed the offside lane for a period of approximately 20 minutes.

Level Crossings

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take action to improve safety on miniature warning light level crossings as a result of the recommendations made by the sheriff following the fatal accident inquiry into a death at North Belton, Dunbar.

Mr. Portillo: The installation of miniature warning light level crossings is governed by strict criteria issued by the Department in the published "Railway Construction and Operation Requirements—Level Crossings". These requirements are under constant review in the light of experience and the development of safety practices. We see no need to amend the current provisions in the light of the sheriff's recommendations.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what funds he will make available under section 8 of the Railways Act 1974 for the development of private railway sidings in the Merseyside area to enable adaptions to take place in time for the opening of the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: That would depend on the merits of any case put to me. I would need to have firm forecasts of the traffic expected, and a clear statement and quantification of the environmental benefits.

EMPLOYMENT

Construction Industry

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what monitoring of the construction industry training boards' equal opportunities policy is undertaken; and whether it is his policy to refer discriminatory practices to the Equal Opportunities Commission.

Mr. Nicholls: The construction industry training board is periodically reviewed in accordance with the Government's established procedures on the control and accountability of non-departmental public bodies. In addition the board's corporate plan and other policy statements are discussed fully with my Department, and the day-to-day activities of the board as an approved training organisation for YTS are monitored and subject to review. Action would be taken if discriminatory practices were discovered, and individual complaints would be taken up with the board with reference to the Equal Opportunities Commission if appropriate.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether discriminatory employment practices are considered grounds for withdrawing Government support from the construction industry training boards.

Mr. Nicholls: The construction industry training board funds most of its activities from a levy on the industry. In cases where the CITB receives funds from my Department (for example, as an approved training organisation for YTS) the board must abide by the terms and conditions of its contract with the Department, including our equal opportunities requirements, as well as the provisions of the relevant legislation. Failure to do so could result in termination of the contract.

YTS

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the latest YTS accident figures, covering the period since March, distinguishing between fatalaties and major and minor injuries; and if he will publish the number of YTS placements closed and not accepted on health and safety grounds since the beginning of 1988.

Mr. Cope: Table A provides YTS accident figures by quarter for fatal, major and minor injuries for the period 1 April to 30 September 1988.

Table B provides the number of YTS placements closed and not accepted on health and safety grounds by quarter for the period 1 January to 20 June 1988. Figures for the quarter 1 July to 30 September are not yet available.

Table A
YTS accidents 1 April-30 September 1988

	Accidents[1]
	fatalities	major[2]	minor
1 April 1988 to 30 June 1988	Nil	129	553
1 July 1988 to 30 September 1988	[3]4	130	663

Table B
Closure and non-acceptance of YTS placements 1 January-30 June 1988

	Placements closed	Placements not accepted
1 January 1988 to 31 March 1988	20	13
1 April 1988 to 30 June 1988	15	12

[1] Training Agency figures have been compiled on a similar basis to those prepared by the Health and Safety Executive on employed persons. However, the Training Agency's figures will include a number of accidents to trainees in educational establishments and road traffic accidents which may not have been reportable to the Health and Safety Executive had the individuals been employed.

[2] Major injuries are classified according to the severity criteria laid down in the Reporting of Injuries, Disease and Dangerous Occurences Regulations 1985. These regulations which came into force on 1 April 1986 reclassified fractured wrists and ankles as major injuries which were not considered to be major under the previous regulations, the Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1980 (NADOR).

[3] This figure includes one road traffic accident.

Bridging Allowance

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many 16 and 17-year-olds are in receipt of bridging allowance, by geographical area.

Mr. Cope: The number of young people receiving YTS bridging allowance on 20 October, the latest available date, by region is:

	Number
London and South East	4,051
South West	1,430
West Midlands	3,794
East Midlands	2,682
Yorkshire and Humberside	4,012
North West	6,139
Northern	2,568
Wales	2,088
Scotland	7,043
Great Britain	33,807

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps will be taken to protect people of 16 and 17 years, to whom no jobs or YTS places can be offered, when bridging allowance expires.

Mr. Cope: Enough YTS places are available in all parts of the country for all 16 and 17-year-olds not in a job or full-time education, who are able and willing to take up YTS training, to be offered a place on the programme. Special groups of young people not able to take a YTS place, for example lone parents looking after their children, the severely disabled or those in long-term sickness, are eligible for income support and should apply to their local social security office.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has to explain the statistics collected by his Department showing an apparent sharp drop in unemployment in Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale between March and April, followed by an apparent sharp rise between June and July.

Mr. Lee: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 24 October 1988, Official Report, column 49.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of registered unemployed in the Greater London travel-to-work area for (a) the month of February and (b) July in each of the years 1982 to 1987.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 31 October 1988]: Direct comparisons of unemployment since 1982 are not possible because of changes in the coverage of the count and the revision of travel-to-work areas in 1984. Following is the information available which is also in the Library. The table shows the number of registered unemployed in the Greater London travel-to-work area since July 1983.

Unemployment in Greater London travel-to-work area

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of registered unemployed in the Basildon travel-to-work area for (a) the month of February and (b) July in each of the years 1982 to 1987.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 31 October 1988]: Direct comparisons of unemployment since 1982 are not possible for the area requested because of changes in the coverage of the count. Following is the available information, which is also in the Library, for the Basildon local authority area.

Number of unemployed claimants in the Basildon local authority area

1985	9,515	8,920
1986	8,876	8,492
1987	8,406	7,080

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the total number of (a) persons in full-time employment, and (b) persons unemployed in (i) England and Wales, and (ii) the Basildon area for each of the years 1982 to 1987.

Mr. Lea [holding answer 31 October 1988]: The available information on employment is shown in the table:

Employees in employment[1] [2] in England and Wales

.. Not available.

[1] Separate figures for full-time male employees are only available for regions for census of employment dates.

[2] Estimates of full-time self-employment are not available below national level.

The latest available employee figures for the Basildon local authority district are from the September 1984 census of employment. There were then 49,600 employees in employment in the area, of which 37,500 were working fulltime. This compares with a total of 53,100 at September 1981 when the previous census of employment was taken of which 41,600 were in full-time employment. These figures exclude the self-employed and Her Majesty's forces.

Direct comparisons of unemployment since 1982 are not possible because of changes in the coverage in the count. Following is the available information, which is also in the Library.

Annual average number of unemployed claimants

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employment training scheme places originally allocated to London have yet to be allocated to training agents.

Mr. Nicholls: All training agent provision in London has been allocated.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list (a) London-based training agents for the employment training scheme and (b) how many places are involved for each.

Mr. Nicholls: The table gives a list of training agents and their contracted throughput in London.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many voluntary organisations based in London, involved with MSC-Training Commission schemes prior to the introduction of ET, have indicated that they will not participate in ET; and how many places are involved.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many voluntary organisations based in London are training agents for the employment training scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: There is one voluntary organisation acting as a training agent in London.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employment training scheme places have been allocated to voluntary organisations based in Greater London.

Mr. Nicholls: A total of 6,800 employment training places have been allocated to voluntary organisations acting as training managers in London.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the latest figures available stating how many of the employment training programme's filled places are extended placements from the community programme, new public authority placements, new placements in the voluntary sector and new placements in the private sector both nationally and in north Staffordshire.

Mr. Nicholls: This information is not collected in the format required.

The total number of people in training on employment training at 21 October 1988 was just over 62,000 for Great Britain and 1,201 for the county of Staffordshire. It is not possible to provide separate figures for north Staffordshire.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of filled places on the employment training programme (i) nationally and (ii) in north Staffordshire.

Mr. Nicholls: At 21 October 1988 there were 62,000 people in training on employment training in Great Britain. Figures are not available for north Staffordshire, but in Staffordshire as a whole there were 1,201 filled places at the same date.

Blandford Fly

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether approval has now been given for an experiment to be made in early 1989 to control the Blandford Fly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Ministers responsible for the approval of pesticides have received advice from the independent advisory committee on pesticides. Before Ministers can approve the trial it is necessary to check that it would not contravene the Control of Pollution Act 1974 or the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act 1975. This is even now being considered by the Departments concerned.

Training Commission

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps are being taken to transfer the resources of the Training Commission to his Department following his announcement to take back the functions which the Training Commission had been exercising on his behalf.

Mr. Fowler: Parliamentary approval to transfer the resources to the Department of Employment to run the training programmes formerly under the control of the Training Commission will be sought in a winter Supplementary Estimate for the new Class VII, Vote 7.

The financial liabilities of the Training Commission arising as a result of contracts and commitments entered into before 15 September have remained with the commission, but financial liabilities after 15 September arising as a result of contracts entered into in the name of the Secretary of State fall to be met by him.

Pending approval of the winter Supplementary Estimate, urgent expenditure incurred by the Secretary of State after 15 September 1988, estimated at £215 million will be met by repayable advances from the contingencies fund. The first of these advances, for £35 million has already been made. A statutory instrument formally transferring all relevant rights and liabilities, other than those arising out of possession of land and those relating to industrial training boards, to the Secretary of State will take effect on 1 December 1988.

Trade Unions (Ballots)

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State of for Employment what steps he has taken to issue a statutory code of practice to promote desirable practices in relation to the conduct by trade unions of ballots about industrial actions.

Mr. Fowler: I have today published, for consultation, a draft statutory code of practice entitled "Trade Union Ballots on Industrial Action", and have placed a copy in the Library. Representations to me on the draft code should be sent to arrive no later than 31 January 1989.

WALES

Rating Reform

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what decisions have been taken in Wales in relation to the base population assumptions for poll tax purposes with regard to allowances which will be made in that figure for the population (a) living in holiday homes for part of the year; and (b) staying in Wales on holiday; and whether these increases in base population will affect the distribution of grant or the distribution of centrally collected non-domestic rating revenue.

Mr. Grist: No final decisions have yet been taken on the definitions of population in the context of the Local Government Finance Act 1988. This subject is still being discussed with the local authority associations.

Improvement Grants

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for every housing authority in Wales (a) the latest estimated cost of housing improvement grants applications which were received prior to 31 March 1984, (b) the sums spent by each authority during 1987-88 on such improvement grants and (c) the estimated date, on current seasonal availability, by which each district will have cleared the backlog of pre-31 March 1984 improvement grant applications.

Mr. Grist: The value of renovation grant applications made before 31 March 1984 which were outstanding at the end of June 1988 are given in columns 1 to 3 of the table. Columns 3 to 6 give expenditure on all grants in 1987-88. The statistical returns made by local authorities to the Department do not relate the sums paid to the year in which applications were made. It must be for individual local authorities to determine the priority they wish to afford such applications within the total of resources available to them.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many Welsh language units are currently operational in Wales, as part of English language primary schools; and how many pupils attend such units in each county.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This information is not available in the form requested.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what safeguards he has set up in order to ensure that the governing bodies of primary schools in Wales take adequate note of the needs of children receiving part or all of their education through the medium of the Welsh language.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Section 17 of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 requires local education authorities to prepare and keep under review a statement of their policy on the school curriculum. In Welsh Office circular 12/87, LEAs were advised that this should be sufficiently detailed to include their policy on teaching through the medium of Welsh. Under section 18 of the Act, governing bodies are required to consider the LEA's statement, their own aims for the school curriculum and any modifications they consider necessary to the LEA's policy as it applies to their school. They must do so in consultation with the headteacher and the LEA, and having regard to any representations made to them from the local community. They must incorporate their conclusions in a written statement and keep them up to date.

Seal Virus

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what evidence he has of porpoises, dolphins and other cetaceans being infected by the North Sea seal virus or related viruses in United Kingdom coastal waters.

Mr. Grist: At the present time we have no evidence linking porpoises, dolphins or other cetaceans found in the waters off the Welsh coastline to either the North sea seal virus or related viruses.

Nurses (Grading)

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he is now in a position to provide details of the additional funding for clinical nurse regrading in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I can now announce the additional financial allocations to health authorities in Wales which will meet in full the estimated final costs of the nurses' clinical regrading exercise. A further £10·1 million is to be provided of which £9·6 million will be allocated to district health authorities in accordance with the estimated additional costs of their respective new grading structures. The additional sums to be allocated to each authority in Wales are shown in the table; the total allocation takes into account the funds that have already been provided this year.

The remaining £0·5 million will be allocated to authorities in due course to meet consequential changes arising from the review body awards.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

School Meals

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will state the cost of free school meals for 1970, 1979, 1984 and 1988.

Mr. Butcher: Information is not available centrally in the form requested. The table provides estimates calculated on the basis of data collected about the school meals service on one day in each of the relevant years. More detailed statistics are included in the report on school meals statistics at October 1987, published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy, and available in the Library. Information for 1988 is not yet available.

Estimated Cost of Providing Free School Meals to Pupils

	Cash £ million	1984-85 Real terms £ million
1970-71	18	86
1979-80	114	174
1984-85	215	215

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has issued, or intends to issue, guidelines concerning the manner and extent of price rises for school meals by local education authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend has no plans to issue guidance to local education authorities on the pricing of school meals. This is a matter for decision by each authority in the light of local needs and circumstances.

Docklands

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what new educational facilities his Department is helping to create to cope with the extra population expected in the docklands area of the London borough of Newham.

Mr. Butcher: It is for the local education authority concerned to initiate action to provide new educational facilities it considers appropriate in order to cope with population changes in its area, taking into account local needs and circumstances.

GCSE

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report the

GCSE examination results grades A to C as a percentage of those candidates who sat the examination, by local education authority; and if he will publish similar percentage figures for the GCE examination for 1987.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information is not yet available centrally.

Higher Education

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report, the number of children from blue collar worker families as a percentage of the whole, who gained entry to (a) universities and (b) polytechnics in each year from 1970 to date.

Mr. Jackson: It is estimated the number of university entrants from social classes IIIm, IV and V as a percentage of the relevant working class population was 3 per cent. in each of the years from 1970 to date.

Similar information is not collected by the polytechnic central admissions system, but a sample survey of young people attempting examinations qualifying them for higher education entry in 1985 indicated that about 7 per cent. of the relevant working-class population entered some form of higher education including sub-degree courses. A sample survey of 21-year-olds in 1962 indicated that the equivalent percentage then was 3 per cent.

Articles of Government

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to issue model articles of government for the polytechnics and colleges of higher education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have issued model articles of government for the polytechnics and colleges which will be run by higher education corporations (HECs) from 1 April 1989. The HECs are asked to submit draft articles, based on the model, by 31 December 1988, so that the articles can be approved before 1 April 1989. I shall expect the other institutions coming into the PCFC funding sector to align their articles of government with this model on broadly the same timetable. The Department consulted the institutions concerned and a number of interested bodies and I have taken account of their comments in drawing up the model.

These newly incorporated institutions have an important part to play in the delivery of higher education. Their effective management and government is vital; their articles of government will underpin this.

National Curriculum

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has received the initial advice of the national curriculum and the School Examinations and Assessment Council on the training needed to support the introduction of the national curriculum and related assessment arrangements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The chairmen of the National Curriculum Council (NCC) and the School Examinations and Assessment Council (SEAC) have sent me initial advice, agreed between their councils, about the arrangements needed to develop a long-term strategy for training to support our national curriculum and assessment policies. I have placed copies in the Libraries of both Houses. I welcome the councils' suggestion that such a strategy should be developed through joint arrangements involving my Department, the NCC, SEAC, the Curriculum Council for Wales and Her Majestys' inspectors. An early task will be to consider further the shape and design of future in-service education and training (INSET) provision as suggested by the councils.

The NCC has in addition offered me advice on the early training needed to support the introduction of the national curriculum from September 1989. The council has recommended an outline programme of training for LEA officers, inspectors and advisors and teachers during this and the next academic year, which offers a good basis for further work both nationally and in local authorities. Copies of that advice have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses, and I am also arranging for copies to be sent to all local authorities, who I know are already planning detailed provision for the coming year.

The major objective of training before the start of the autumn term 1989 should be to increase general awareness of the new arrangements, including the broad shape of the assessment arrangements which will be required. It should enable schools and teachers to start planning for their implementation in the classroom. Soon after that date more specific training in the requirements for particular subjects and in assessment procedures will be required.

I accept the council's conclusion, endorsed by SEAC, that exceptionally for this first year of implementation schools should be allowed to close for two additional days to offer their whole staff training specifically directed to the new national curriculum requirements. These additional days may be used for the general awareness training which all teachers will need before they begin to work within the new framework in September 1989, or for supplementary training in the autumn term. I shall bring forward regulations shortly to allow for additional closures in the calendar year 1989, in order to give schools the necessary flexibility to fit this training into their plans.

These exceptional arrangements are needed because authorities' plans for in-service training in 1989 are already well advanced. In future years, as new national curriculum requirements are introduced, authorities will be expected to make the necessary arrangements for training using the £53 million made available through in-service training grants to support implementation in 1989-90, and the further sums to be made available as appropriate in later years. They will need to plan to use these resources within the normal school year, which includes five days which may be devoted to the in-service training of teachers.

The NCC is working on the preparation of materials to underpin the programme of INSET, and will be making these available in good time for each stage of the training effort it has recommended. The SEAC will be contributing appropriate material on assessment as the programme of INSET progresses. In addition, my Department will continue to make available information about the nature and implications of the new provisions to help LEAs and schools plan for their effective introduction.

Student Grants

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what will be the level of student grants in 1989-90.

Mr. Jackson: Subject to parliamentary approval, mandatory awards will be increased by 5 per cent. in the 1989-90 academic year. The increase applies both to the standard tuition fee and to maintenance grants. Details of grant rates and contribution scales will be published later.

ENVIRONMENT

North Sea (Research)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much of the Government's recently announced £7 million a year expenditure on research in the North sea represents new money; by whom this money is to be spent; and on what form of research programme.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Following the second international conference on the protection of the North sea, which was held in London last November, a number of Departments and agencies, including MAFF, DAFS, DOE and NERC have reviewed their funding for North sea research. The main result in the current year has been a revision and refocusing of existing programmes. In the case of the Department of the Environment, the funding for North sea research has increased in the current year from £0·7 million to £1·2 million. Following the statement by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 1 November 1988, we hope to increase this amount by a further £0·5 million in 1989-90.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what factors govern the amount of money being spent on (a) investigation reactions to toxic chemicals in marine mamals, with particular reference to those in the North sea; and (b) researching the behaviour of viruses in the sea; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The overall objective of the Department's marine research programme is to establish with greater accuracy the relationships between inputs to the sea, the concentration of substances in the environment and their effect on marine life. Marine mammals are high in the food chain and are therefore valuable indicators of pollutants which accumulate in animal tissues. Studies of seals are an important part of the research programmes of my Department and of the Natural Environmental Research Council. Preliminary work suggests that further research would be worthwhile to clarify whether or not such pollutants can effect the immune system in seals. Research on the behaviour of viruses in the marine environment is currently being considered.

Water Metering

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date he established Chorleywood, Hertfordshire, as a water metering trial area.

Mr. Moynihan: The metering trial in Chorleywood was approved by my right hon. Friend on 15 August 1988.

Water Authorities (Land)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many acres of land are held by each water authority in England and Wales.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department does not, at present, have this information.

Sewage Treatment

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each of the 10 water authorities in England and Wales the location of all sewage treatment plans which have failed consent conditions specified by the water authorities on one or more parameters as at the most recent available date.

Mr. Moynihan: Copies of the returns submitted by the 10 water authorities in England and Wales for sewage treatment works which failed to comply with their consent conditions in 1987 were placed in the Libraries of both Houses at the beginning of June this year. Information on the exact location of each works is not held centrally; the works are identified by name only.

Palace of Westminster (Waste Glass)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether waste glass is sent from the Palace of Westminster for recycling; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 3 November 1988]: Waste glass is collected under a contract arranged by the Property Services Agency. I understand the contractor sends the glass for recycling.

Palace of Westminster (Waste Paper)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now make it policy to ensure that all waste paper removed from the Palace of Westminster is used for recycling purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 3 November 1988]: Waste paper is collected from the Palace of Westminster under a contract arranged by the Property Services Agency. Although the contract does not specify that the paper should be recycled, I understand that the contractor disposes of it in that way.

Football Matches

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which Football League matches have been attended by the Minister for sport this season; and when he last visited The Den, Millwall.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 3 November 1988]: I attended the Charlton Athletic v. Tottenham Hotspur match on 8 October. I have not yet visited Millwall football club but have accepted the club's invitation to do so on 19 November. In addition, I have attended a number of non-league football matches and training sessions.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

International Investments Ltd.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what investigations into the collapse of International Investments Limited, Gibraltar, have been carried out by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: None. International Investments Ltd., Gibraltar is not registered in the United Kingdom, nor does it have a place of businesss here. The Royal Ulster Constabulary are conducting a thorough investigation and the Bank of England and the Financial Intermediaries, Managers and Brokers Regulatory Association are aware of the case.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to how many Northern Ireland investors have suffered as a result of the collapse of (a) International Investments Limited, Gibraltar, and (b) Barlow Clowes.

Mr. Maude: I understand that some 850 of the depositors with International Investments Ltd., Gibraltar are resident in Northern Ireland. Comprehensive information about Northern Ireland investors in Barlow Clowes is not available, but my Department has received four letters from investors in Northern Ireland.

Inner-city Task Forces

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many inner city jobs have been created as a direct result of the activities of task forces which report directly to him; and what is the total cost of the launching and running of these task forces since they were initiated.

Mr. Newton: Securing more jobs for local people is but one of the objectives for the Government's inner city task forces; other key objectives are to stimulate enterprise and to improve skills and training. The task forces have supported more than 900 projects since their inception in February 1986 and it is estimated that these have led to the creation or safeguarding of approximately 3,700 jobs in the task force areas. Up to the end of September 1988, the cost of launching and running the task forces was around £3·4 million.

Iraq

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether, when deciding on any increase in the export credit granted to Iraq, he will make it his policy to take into account recent human rights violations there, including the use of chemical weapons by Government forces.

Mr. Clark: The Government are concerned by the denial of human rights wherever this occurs, and have consistently made our views clear to the Iraqi Government on this subject. We have also made clear to the Iraqi Government our condemnation of the use of chemical weapons. We will continue to do so. At the same time, we should not lose sight of the importance of developing political and economic relations with Iraq, and the provision of export credit is a major contribution to this.

Water Company Shares

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will provide details of the Office of Fair Trading investigation involving Lee Valley and North Surrey Statutory Water Company shares owned by the French company Saur being sold to the French company Generale Des Eaux.

Mr. Maude: The Office of Fair Trading is at an early stage of its consideration of possible merger situations involving Lee Valley water company and the North Surrey water company and of whether such situations may qualify for investigation under the Fair Trading Act.

Girobank

Mr. Stott: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the future Giro bank privatisation.

Mr. Forth: The Post Office, which is conducting the sale, and its advisers are continuing to hold confidential discussions. I will make a further statement as soon as I am able to do so.

Lloyd's

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what advice he has given to the chairman of Lloyd's on the revised proposals made following consultations with members of Lloyd's and the Lloyd's community on the working group report on underwriting agency agreements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The council of Lloyd's has recently announced its decisions on the subjects considered in the working group report on underwriting agency agreements. These implement a further 11 recommendations of the Neill report, and I welcome this further progress. It is not the practice to make public correspondence between Lloyd's and the Department.

Alligator Meat

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has regarding the amounts of alligator meat imported into the United Kingdom for human consumption during each of the past three years.

Mr. Clark [holding answer 3 November 1988]: United Kingdom imports of alligator meat, for all purposes which may include for human consumption, in 1987 were 1·7 tonnes. No imports were recorded for 1985 and 1986.

Ex-gratia Payments

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will detail in the Official Report all cases over the past 10 years when his Department has been required by the courts, or in consequence of legal pressure, to pay compensation or make an ex-gratia payment to individuals or companies in consequence of negligence or error by his Department.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 3 November 1988]: Details of special payments are published each year in the relevant appropriation accounts, summaries of which for my Department and its predecessors are as follows. The circumstances of such payments vary widely, and it is not possible to classify them in the way requested. Most cases involving substantial amounts arise from discretionary payments relating to the Department's various programmes of industrial support.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Official Solicitor

Mr. Battle: To ask the Attorney-General what is the number of staff employed by the Official Solicitor's children's division; and how many of those staff have legal qualifications and how many have qualifications in child care or related subjects.

The Attorney-General: The number of staff presently employed in the Official Solicitor's children's division is 42. Two of the staff are legally qualified, and the Official Solicitor and the Deputy Official Solicitory also take a close interest in the work of the division. None of the staff have formal qualifications in child care or related subjects, but most have extensive experience in this field.

Land Certificates

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Attorney-General what is the average time taken for the issue of a land certificate by the Croydon district land registry; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The average time taken to issue a land or charge certificate by the Croydon district land registry is 22 weeks compared with the departmental average of 16 weeks.

In all district land registries new systems of work are being introduced to increase productivity. At Croydon further steps to improve the service include the transfer of work to other offices and the recruitment of additional staff.

EMPLOYMENT

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, for each employment service region, how many restart interviews were conducted each month between May and September.

Williams Dye Factory, Hanworth

Sir Barney Hayhoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what investigations have been made by the Health and Safety Executive into the explosion on 13 October at Williams dye factory, Hanworth road, Hounslow; and what action is being taken to protect from further hazard residents and others working nearby.

Mr. Nicholls: Inspectors and a scientist from the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) have visited Williams of Hounslow to investigate the cause of the incident which occurred on 13 October 1988. They have taken enforcement action to stop production in the building in which the incident occurred until the plant has been modified and will be looking at the safety of other processes carried out on the site. The HSE does not consider that the process giving rise to the incident presented a risk to the health or safety of persons living and working in the neighbourhood of the site.

SCOTLAND

Free School Transport

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he proposes to take to harmonise statutory provision for free school transport in Scotland with the position in England and Wales consequent upon the decision of the Court of Appeal in respect of Devon county council.

Mr. Rifkind: I have no plans to amend the current provisions for school transport which give education authorities considerable discretion to provide assistance beyond the statutory requirements if they consider it necessary.

Scottish Council for Single Parents

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on continued funding of the Scottish Council for Single Parents training unit by the social work services group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I have received a number of representations on behalf of the Scottish Council for Single Parents, which has formally applied for renewal of funding for its training unit under section 9 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1988.

The council's application is being carefully considered, along with applications from a number of other voluntary social work agencies, in the light of funding priorities and the resources available for section 9 grants in 1989-90. I cannot anticipate the outcome.

Job Creation

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the level of job creation in Scotland since 1983.

Mr. Lang: The latest figures show that between June 1983 and June 1988 the civilian work force in employment in Scotland is provisionally estimated to have increased by some 53,000.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each of the last 10 years (a) the total cost of the Scottish ambulance service and (b) the cost of its emergency service.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Expenditure by the Scottish ambulance service over the last 10 years is as follows:

Year ending 31 March	Expenditure £
1979	11,507,707
1980	14,056,172
1981	17,474,992
1982	19,571,446
1983	20,997,971
1984	22,611,523
1985	23,501,862
1986	24,837,525
1987	28,011,143
1988	31,671,000

The expenditure on the accident and emergency element of the service is included, but is not separately identifiable.

Drink and Drug Offences

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give for each of the last five years the number of people charged for selling alcohol to those under age;

(2) if he will give for each of the last five years the number of people charged with being drunk and disorderly;

(3) if he will give for each of the last five years the number of people charged with drink or drug offences.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Statistics on persons charged are not available. The table shows, for relevant offences, the number of cases cleared up by the police in Scotland in the years 1983 to 1987. (In most cases where an offence is cleared up a person is charged, though one person may be charged with several offences.)

Offences cleared up by the police, Scotland, 1983-87

Offence	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987
Sale of drink to person under 18	303	295	362	376	415

Drugs offences	3,204	4,379	5,074	5,294	4,700

Nurses (Pay)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each health board the cost of nurses' salaries following their initial regrading and how much each one had been allocated.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave today to my hon. Friend the Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker).

Information on such costs will not be available until all boards have adjusted their payrolls to take account of the grading changes and have made payment of the revised salaries.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of Scottish nurses who earn (a) net gross and (b) gross under £100 per week.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally and could be gathered only at disproportionate cost. However no qualified nurse after regrading should earn less than the minimum of scale C, which is £6,975 per annum or £134 per week in terms of basic gross pay. For nursing auxiliaries the scale minimum for an 18-year-old is now £5,000 per annum or £96·15 per week but only about 10 per cent. of auxiliaries are estimated to be at this point: the majority of auxiliaries will be on scale points ranging from £100 to £121 per week. These figures relate to full-time staff and do not take account of overtime, special duty payments and other allowances which may be payable over and above basic pay.

Heart and Lung Transplants

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the facilities for heart and lung transplants in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are no facilities for such transplants in Scotland.

Fish Counting

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress his Department has made with the installation of fish-counting equipment on rivers in Scotland, and the north Esk in particular; and what steps he has taken to make information on such equipment available to those responsible for salmon stocks in other parts of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The installation of fish counters and associated civil engineering works in Scottish rivers is a matter for district salmon fishery boards and salmon fishery proprietors.

With the agreement of the appropriate boards and proprietors, the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland has installed fish counters for research purposes in the River North Esk at Logie and, more recently, in the Girnock Burn, Aberdeenshire. Tests of the "Logie" design of fish counter, developed with the assistance of the Department, show a high level of accuracy with regard to both upstream and downstream movements of fish.

The results of observations made on counter performance have been widely reported in scientific papers and in the published proceedings of symposia organised by the Institute of Fishery Management and the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology and in reports by the Department's freshwater fisheries laboratory at Pitlochry.

The Department has advised a number of district salmon fishery boards and interested parties about suitable locations and in-river works for fish counters on the rivers Aray, Berriedale, Dee (Aberdeenshire), Spey, Tay and Thurso. Advice has also been given to a number of water authorities in England and Wales. I understand that the "Logie" counter has been demonstrated, for example, at the game fair at Kelso in July 1988 and that a number of counters have been sold by its manufacturers.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the total number of children in each regional educational authority who were in receipt of free school meals in each academic year since 1977-78.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information is not available centrally in the form requested. The table sets out the figures by age and sex, of members of the Scottish teachers' superannuation scheme aged under 60 who retired on grounds of ill health for the years ending on 31 March 1978 and 1983 as well as the provisional figures for the year ending on 31 March 1987, the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide figures showing the current average council rent in Scotland, the amount by which this lies below estimated market rent and the percentage increase in council house rents since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The average local authority rent in Scotland for 1988-89 is £16·23 per dwelling per week. This is 231 per cent. higher than the equivalent average in 1979. There are no available estimates of average market rents.

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give figures showing the gross collectable council rent and gross rent arrears for Scotland for the years ending 31 March 1980 to 1988 inclusive.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table.

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give figures showing housing investment programme allocations for Scotland for each year between 1978-79 to 1987-88 at both outturn and 1986-87 prices.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The aggregate gross housing capital allocations covering local authority housing activity on both the housing revenue account and non-housing revenue account have been as follows:—

Fish Farming

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether, in the light of his Department's review of the Crown Estate Commissioners' consultative procedures, he will extend planning controls to cover the fish farming industry; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend's review of the Crown Estate Commissioners' consultative procedures is not yet complete. A statement will be made in due course.

PMT Audiology

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the number of (a) basic posts and (b) senior posts in PMT audiology which in the last two years have been filled by lower grades;

(2) what is the average time between the notification of a vacant post in PMT audiology and the filling of that post.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of PMT audiology staff employed by each health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested.

Scottish Law Commission (Report)

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what decisions he has reached on the recommendations of the Scottish Law Commission in their reports on Scottish term and quarter days (Scot Law Com No. 108) and on the legal capacity and responsibility of minors and pupils (Scot Law Com No. 110).

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government accept the recommendations of the Scottish Law Commission for reform in these two areas of the law.

NHS (Pay Awards)

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he is now in a position to announce the allocations to health boards of the additional amount to cover the cost of the review body pay awards.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Health boards have been given an additional £93·433 million over and above their initial allocations for 1988-89 to allow them to meet the cost of the review body pay awards. The additional allocations relate to nurses and other staff covered by the review bodies and are as follows:

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Diplomatic Missions (Parking Regulations)

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last sent reminders to diplomatic missions in the United Kingdom that Her Majesty's Government expect them to conform to parking regulations, and to request their heads of mission to issue instructions to their staff to pay any penalties or fines incurred; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: On arrival in London all diplomats are sent a memorandum by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office explaining that they are required to comply with local parking regulations and to pay any fines, and describing the problems caused by illegal parking. In addition, these points are set out in a longer memorandum on diplomatic privileges and immunities which is issued to all diplomatic missions and which was most recently revised and reisssued in March 1987.

We are confident that all diplomatic missions in London are fully aware of their obligations in this respect.

PRIME MINISTER

Bridlington

Mr. John Townend: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit Bridlington.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend has at present no plans to do so.

TRANSPORT

PSV Licences

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why he has recently raised the fee for a public service vehicle driving licence by 125 per cent.; why the increase over the last five years has amounted to 350 per cent.; and if he will make a statement concerning the calculation of the fees now charged.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The PSV licence fee is now £22·50 for a five-year licence.

It is Government policy that the vocational driver licensing system should be financially self-supporting. The PSV drivers' licence fees have never covered the cost of providing the service. The previous fees, which were set in 1985, were not designed to recover the costs in full. It was recognised at the time that further substantial increases would be needed in order to achieve full recovery. The new fee levels should put these services onto a sound financial footing in the coming years.

British Rail (Investment)

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much British Rail invested each year since 1970 on both a railways and a corporate basis; and whether he will make a statement.

All investment in track, signalling, locomotives, rolling stock, stations and railway facilities is included in railway investment. Corporate investment also includes investment in subsidiaries. With the sale of subsidiaries, including the shipping, hovercraft and hotels businesses, and the impending sale of BREL and Travellers Fare, the need for non-railway corporate investment is steadily decreasing.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Apperknowle Airstrip

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give details of Customs and Excise checks and investigations over the past five years at the airstrip at Apperknowle in Derbyshire.

Mr. Lilley: It is not usual to disclose information of this kind. To do so could prejudice the operational effectiveness of Customs and Excise.

Sub-Saharan Africa

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the amounts of official debt to the United Kingdom country by country that will fall within the ambit of the scheme to ease the official debt burden of the poorest and most heavily indebted countries in sub-Saharan Africa agreed in Berlin last month.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 3 November 1988]: Official debt comprises debt owed to the ODA and to ECGD. The old aid loans made by the ODA to countries which are now eligible to benefit from the special Paris Club reschedulings for the poorest most heavily indebted countries which are following approved adjustment programmes, have already been converted to grants. For reasons of commercial confidentiality, ECGD does not reveal its exposure country by country. ECGD's total exposure to the countries now thought to be eligible is estimated at around £1 billion.

Palace of Westminster (Paper)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the estimated value of paper supplied to the Palace of Westminster in the complete financial year 1987-88.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 3 November 1988]: The value of paper supplied to the Palace of Westminster for the financial year 1987-88 is assessed at £790,000.

THE ARTS

British Library

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is his latest estimate of (a) the date of completion of the current phase of construction of the new British Library and (b) the final cost of construction.

Mr. Luce: Work on the current phase of construction, 1A, which began in 1982 is on schedule to be completed in 1993. The British Library will commence occupation of the building from 1991. A cash target for the construction of 1A has been established at £300 million. This is equivalent to the £242·5 million at second quarter 1987 prices which I reported to the House last December.

As I announced on 3 November, the Government have decided that the project will be completed by 1996 at a cost of £90 million at current prices. This will be converted into a cash target when detailed design work for the completion phase is finalised.

HEALTH

Bed Occupancy and Waiting Lists

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will state the average daily number of beds occupied in the National Health Service in the United Kingdom in 1960, 1970, 1979, 1984 and 1988;

(2) if he will state the number of people on hospital waiting lists in England and the United Kingdom and the number of unoccupied beds for 1960, 1970, 1979, 1984 and 1988.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is given in the table for regional health authorities in England. Beds may be unoccupied for a variety of reasons, for example, because they are being held for emergency or maternity admissions or because of unexpectedly early discharges.

The steering group on Health Service information (Körner) recommended that bed occupancy statistics should not be used as indicators of efficient bed use. A more useful measure is throughput per available bed. In 1986 20·3 cases were treated per available bed compared with 15 in 1979 and only 8·8 in 1960.

Questions about the rest of the United Kingdom are for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Paul Cleeland

Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what treatment has been given to Mr. Paul Cleeland at Moss Side special hospital by the responsible medical officer.

Mrs. Currie: Since his admission to Moss Side hospital Mr. Cleeland has had a high level of support and has been extensively assessed. There is, however, a difference of opinion between the responsible medical officer and the patient over the treatment that he should be given and Mr. Cleeland's case remains under review. If the hon. Member requires further details he may care to contact the medical director of Moss Side hospital.

Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set up an independent inquiry into the circumstances surrounding the detention and treatment of Mr. Paul Cleeland.

Mrs. Currie: No. Mr. Cleeland was transferred to Moss Side hospital from Parkhurst prison on 18 March 1987 under section 47 of the Mental Health Act 1983 on the basis of reports from two registered medical practitioners that he was suffering from mental illness of a nature or degree which made it appropriate for him to be detained in hospital for treatment. Mr. Cleeland's case was considered by an independent mental health review tribunal from 22 to 26 February 1988 which concluded that he was properly detained in hospital.

Medical Officers (Special Hospitals)

Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what circumstances a responsible medical officer in a special hospital is (a) required or (b) advised to seek a second opinion before treating a patient.

Mrs. Currie : The responsible medical officer is required to obtain both the consent of the patient and a second opinion if he wishes to treat the patient with psychosurgery or by surgical implantation of hormones for the purpose of reducing male sex drive. The consent of the patient or a second opinion is required for drug treatment, of three months or more have elapsed since drugs were first given during a period of detention, or for electroconvulsive therapy at any time during a period of detention.

Other forms of medical treatment for mental disorder from which the patient is suffering may be given without his consent being required. It is accepted good practice within the special hospital service however to seek the patient's consent and where that is not or cannot be given to seek the independent advice of a suitably qualified person who is not a member of the clinical team responsible for the patient.

Moss Side Hospital

Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for health, what effect industrial action at Moss Side on 18 November 1987 and thereafter had on (a) patients in general and (b) Mr. Paul Cleeland.

Mrs. Currie: From 18 to 28 November 1987 members of the Prison Officers Association locked patients into their side rooms for prolonged periods of each day. Consequently normal off-ward activites, for example, occupational work, rehabilitation, education and recreation were disrupted. Management limited the effects of this by organising as much on-ward activity as possible including patient education. Some visits were also curtailed. The basic elements of patient care, medication, food and hygiene, were provided without interference and there was a continued high level of presence on the wards by doctors, senior nurses and other professionals. Neither the safety nor security of the public or patients was in jeopardy at any time.

As a result of the industrial action some patients have begun legal proceeedings against the POA and, as part of that, independent medical experts are presently assessing the effect of the action on the medical condition of individual patients. We deplore all industrial action in our hospitals.

Junior Doctors

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he has any plans to introduce regulations to limit the number of hours worked by a junior hospital doctor in a working week; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the latest figure for the average number of hours worked by junior hospital doctors in a working week; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: No. We have no plans to introduce regulations. Junior hospital doctors' average hours of work in a working week have been reduced from 58·3 in 1981 to 57 in 1985. Hours of duty, as distinct from hours actually worked, fell from an average of 91·3 a week in 1976 to 85·7 in 1986. In June 1988, and with the agreement of the profession, the Government announced a new scheme to reduce further the hours of work. Local professional working parties are being set up in every district to advise on the elimination, wherever possible, of regular rota commitments which require a junior to be on duty, on average, more than one night and weekend in three.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Vehicle Clamps

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to what information he has of private sector firms offering to assist owners of clamped vehicles improperly removing warning labels and other notices from cars clamped by the Metropolitan police and substituting advertising matter; and what action is being taken against such firms.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand that the commissioner is aware of at least one company offering a facility by which the statutory fee for the removal of wheelclamps is paid at one of the central London payment centres on behalf of the drivers. The driver is required to provide the money for the fee in addition to an annual subscription charge.

The commissioner is also aware of isolated incidents involving the unlawful removal of warning notices from clamped vehicles. Appropriate action will be taken where sufficient evidence is available.

Mr. Pak Hin Yau

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Easington requesting a meeting to discuss the case of Mr. Pak Hin Yau's application for British citizenship.

Mr. Renton: The hon. Member is due to meet me to discuss the case of Mr. Pak Hin Yau on Tuesday 15 November.

Women's Issues

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the ministerial group on women's issues will be discussing the recommendaions of the EOC report: "Caring for Children—Services and Policies for Childcare and Equal Opportunities: 1988".

Mr. John Patten: I assume that the hon. Member has in mind the recommendations in the report for the European Commission's childcare network. They are among the matters which are being discussed by the ministerial group on women's issues as part of its consideration of women's employment and childcare services.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how good equal opportunities practice was followed in the nomination of the membership of the ministerial group on women's issues.

Mr. John Patten: Ministers attend the ministerial group on women's issues on the basis of their departmental responsibilities for matters within the remit of the group.

Jurors

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to introduce legislation to vary the age limit for jurors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Section 119 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 increases from 65 to 70 the maximum age at which a person may qualify for jury service. I do not rule out a further increase in due course. I have no present plans to increase the minimum age from 18.

Remands in Custody

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in reducing the time spent in custody on remand awaiting trial.

Mr. John Patten: In the last two years, there has been a reduction in waiting times between committal and start of trial in the Crown court for defendants committed in custody. In 1986 the average waiting time was 10·4 weeks; this has fallen to 9·8 weeks in 1987 despite an increase of 17 per cent. in the number of cases received.

Even so, waiting times for defendants held in custody awaiting trial at both the magistrates courts and the Crown court remain longer than we would wish and we continue to press for improvements.

Violent Criminals

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department is taking to assess whether violent criminals receive prison sentences which are both exemplary and a deterrent to others; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Sentencing in individual cases is a matter for the courts. The Home Department collects sentencing statistics and keeps in touch with trends so that, for example we can recommend to Parliament an increase in maximum penalties which are too low for deterrence.

There have been significant increases in Crown court sentences for serious offences of violence in the past three years. For armed robbery, the average sentence imposed on men aged 21 or over (this being the average generally quoted for purposes of comparison) is now seven years.

Prisoners (Condoms)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has yet come to a decision about the supply of condoms to prisoners.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 26 July to his question on this subject at columns 197-98.

Police Forces (Establishment)

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects police forces in England and Wales to achieve their authorised establishment.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Police forces by and large are at their authorised establishment though numbers will rise and fall reflecting recruitment and wastage patterns.

Mr. Paul Cleeland

Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when, and for what reason, Mr. Paul Cleeland was transferred from prison to Moss Side hospital.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Mr. Cleeland was transferred to Moss Side hospital under section 47 of the Mental Health Act 1983 on 18 March 1987. This followed the receipt of reports from two qualified medical practitioners that he was suffering from mental illness of a nature and degree which made it appropriate for him to be detained in a hospital for treatment.

Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider using his powers under section 50(1) of the Mental Health Act 1983 to recall Mr. Paul Cleeland from Moss Side on the grounds that no effective treatment for his disorder can be given in that hospital.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend can consider remitting Mr. Cleeland to prison under these powers only if the responsible medical officer notifies him either that Mr. Cleeland no longer requires treatment in hospital for mental disorder or that no effective treatment for his disorder can be given at Moss Side hospital.

Prisons

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cells there are in (a) Her Majesty's prison Liverpool, Hornby road and (b) Risley remand centre.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The number of cells is as follows:

Prison	Cells
Liverpool	840
Risley	542

These cells are certified to accommodate either one or two inmates. Both establishments also have non-cellular accommodation in hospital wards and other rooms.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are currently in (a) Her Majesty's prison Liverpool, Hornby road and (b) Risley remand centre.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On Wednesday 2 November 1988, 1,386 prisoners were held in Her Majesty's prison Liverpool and 723 prisoners were held in Her Majesty's remand centre, Risley.

Dogs

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is prepared to confirm local authority byelaws which will make it an offence for a person in charge of a dog in an urban area to fail to remove any faeces it might deposit on pavement or grass verges.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Following an approach from Westminster city council I have agreed to the establishment of a pilot project to test the effectiveness of this approach to the dog-fouling problem. Subject to considering any objections I propose shortly to confirm a byelaw which will apply to footways, footpaths and grass verges throughout the city. The experimental byelaw will run for two years and its operation will be carefully monitored by the Home Office and the city council. If at the end of that period the byelaw has proved an effective remedy to the problem I shall consider whether to offer it as a model for adoption by other local authorities.

Begging

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been charged with begging in London in each of the past five years.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 27 October 1988]: The readily available information, which relates to prosecutions for begging in the Metropolitan police district, is given in the following table:

Metropolitan Police District

Year	Total proceeded against
1983	916
1984	498
1985	289
1986	333
1987	416

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food Act

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will seek to extend the provisions of the Food Act to apply to the whole of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and I are in the process of carrying out a review of the Food Act 1984 and the Food and Drugs (Scotland) Act 1956. We expect to reach a conclusion shortly. It will be for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to decide subsequently, and separately, what action he may wish to take in respect of food legislation applicable in Northern Ireland.

Agricultural Support

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state the total amount of support for agriculture by the Government, expressed both as a percentage of gross domestic product and as a percentage of public expenditure for 1960, 1970, 1979, 1984, and 1988.

Mr. MacGregor: Expenditure by calendar year is not readily available. Figures for financial years are set out below.

The forecast of spending on agriculture in 1988-89 was revised for the autumn statement.

Expenditure on agricultural support in the United Kingdom

	£ million	Per cent. GDP	Per cent. Public expenditure
1960-61	263	1·01	2·77
1970-71	257	0·49	1·19
1979-80	677	0·33	0·75
1984-85	1,706	0·53	1·12
[1]1988-89	1,500	0·33	0·8

[1] Forecast.

Expenditure relates to payments made direct to farmers or traders; it does not include related expenditure such as disease prevention, advice, research and development, land drainage and administration.

Fish Stocks

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking in advance of any schemes to construct a barrage on the estuaries of the Severn and Wye, and of the Usk, to establish the state of migratory fish stocks in these rivers.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The proposal for a tidal barrage on the Severn is being studied under a programme funded by the Department of Energy, the CEGB and the Severn tidal power group. A series of environmental assessments —including, I understand, one of the impact on migratory fish stocks—has been commissioned as part of the study. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I will need to be consulted in due course about any firm plans to take these proposals forward in view of our responsibilities for fisheries. We shall also wish to discuss any proposals with the relevant water authorities in view of their responsibilities for assessing the status of migratory fish stocks as part of their statutory duties under the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act 1975.

Salmon

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress his Department is making towards the establishment of salmon dealer licensing scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Proposals for salmon dealer licensing schemes in England, Wales and Scotland were circulated earlier this year. Work is in hand in drawing up schemes in the light of comments. We hope to obtain parliamentary approval of the necessary orders as quickly as possible.

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reports have so far been completed by the Dunnett committee on salmon stocks; and when these reports will all be published.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Fisheries Ministers recently received the salmon advisory committee's first report entitled "Information on the status of salmon stocks". It was decided that this report should be published. It was released on 23 September and copies have been placed in the Library of the House. The salmon advisory committee continues to examine a range of factors affecting salmon stocks in Great Britain. Decisions on publication of any future reports to Ministers will be taken at the time.

Radioactivity

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the results of his Department's terrestrial radioactivity monitoring programme.

Mr. Ryder: Since the beginning of 1986, the Ministry's routine programme of analysis of samples collected from agricultural areas around the major nuclear sites in England and Wales has been expanded. The results are to be published annually. The "Terrestrial Radioactivity Monitoring Programme: Report for 1986", which includes the results obtained from samples collected during the first year of the expanded programme, was published on 8 August and a copy placed in the Library of the House.

The 1987 annual report of the Ministry's routine programme for monitoring radioactivity in the aquatic environment, "Radioactivity in Surface and Coastal Waters of the British Isles", was published on 21 October and is also available in the Library.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has plans to add vinyl chloride disease to the list of diseases qualifying for disablement benefit under category C24 of his Department's leaflet N12.

Mr. Scott: In considering additions to the list of prescribed industrial diseases, we are advised by an independent body, the industrial injuries advisory council. The council has made no recommendations concerning vinyl chloride disease, though a number of conditions arising from work with vinyl chloride monomer have been recognised and are already prescribed. I understand the council is keeping other effects of vinyl chloride monomer under review.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many persons have been affected by tax changes to the reduced earnings allowance of the industrial injury and disablement benefit which were implemented on 10 April; and what is the Government's latest estimate of the savings made by these changes.

Mr. Scott: I assume the changes to which the hon. Member refers are those whereby entitlement to reduced earnings allowance will cease when a beneficiary reaches pensionable age and retires from regular employment and a new benefit, retirement allowance, may be payable in its place. These changes make no difference to the treatment of reduced earnings allowance for income tax purposes, and it remains non-taxable. Retirement allowance will also be non-taxable. The estimated benefit savings arising from these changes are £2 million in 1989-90, rising to £10 million in 1991-92.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what new measures he intends to take to increase the take-up of means-tested benefits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On family credit, a special major exercise will start at the end of this month to issue a leaflet about family credit to people when they collect their child benefit from the post office. This new leaflet gives more information about family credit, particularly on points where there is evidence of misunderstanding, and encourages people to claim. We shall also improve the information about family credit in the child benefit order book itself, and in the whole range of departmental leaflets, as these come up for renewal. We are looking at ways to improve the claim form, following experience of the form in use.

For the future, we plan to have a further major advertising campaign, including television, and we shall continue other ways of publicising family credit, especially to make clear the levels of income at which it can be paid.

Income support and housing benefit will continue to have a wide distribution of leaflets, claim forms and information sheets. Many of these have been translated for use by claimants from ethnic minority groups. Advice is also readily available through regional and local information services and through the Freeline telephone service.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will take steps to simplify and shorten the number of questions asked on application forms for family credit and other social benefits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Department employs professional information designers to produce major claim forms. They take care to ask only those questions that are essential to give the information required to arrive at correct decisions on entitlement, without the need for follow-up inquiries which might delay payment of benefit.

No one has to answer every question on a particular form. Only parts that are applicable to the individual have to be filled in, and these parts are clearly signalled. This means that the form may look rather long, but is easier to fill in than a first impression might suggest.

Income Support

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if claimants recovering from ill-health and in receipt of an income support disability premium lose their disability premium if they take up a place in the employment training scheme.

Mr. Scott: It is our intention that the disability premium remains in payment during employment training. The Income Support (General) Regulations do not quite achieve that intention for all claimants. Those who are not blind or do not have a qualifying benefit or an invalid carriage do not at present retain the premium. The regulations will therefore be amended shortly so that no one loses the disability premium during employment training.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, in light of the recent regulations abolishing the £250 limit on charitable gifts received by income support claimants, the limit on the amount that can be paid to employment training scheme trainees as a terminal bonus is to be abolished.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Regulations abolishing the £250 limit on charitable or voluntary payments which are not paid or which are not due to be paid, regularly have yet to be laid before Parliament. The first £200 of any terminal bonus paid to someone participating in employment training is disregarded under a separate provision and we have no plans to alter that amount. Any additional bonus, which is not paid in respect of any specified period, at present counts towards the £250 limit mentioned; we propose that in future it will be treated as capital.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims have been made to his Department by 16 and 17-year-olds for payment of income support under the severe hardship regulations since September; how many have been accepted and rejected; and if he will make a statement on the grounds on which he has granted those claims for income support which have been successful.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In the seven weeks since the withdrawal of general entitlement to income support from 16 and 17-year-olds on 12 September 1988, 835 applications for a direction by the Secretary of State to award benefit under the "severe hardship" provision were received. Of these 545 (65 per cent.) resulted in a direction being given and 290 (35 per cent.) resulted in a direction being refused. Most directions were in respect of young people living in commercial board and lodging establishmets or in hostels who faced eviction if the accommodation charge was not paid in full when it fell due.

Each application is dealt with on its merits having regard to such factors as the young person's health and vulnerability, the availability of any income or savings, the prospects of speedy entry into the youth training scheme, the availability of casual work, the possibility of help from friends or relatives and the extent and pressing nature of any financial commitments.

Claims (Processing Costs)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the latest figure available for the cost per claimant of processing a claim for (a) child benefit and (b) family credit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not readily available. The latest available administrative figures for child benefit are for 1986-87. These suggest that the administrative costs of child benefit and one-parent benefit represent about 2·2 per cent. of benefit expenditure. The average weekly administrative cost per beneficiary was about 20 pence. For family income supplement the corresponding figures are 5·4 per cent. and 80p respectively.

Payments

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received on his latest review of social security payments.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We receive a variety of representations on many issues concerning social security payments.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will give figures showing the proportion of council tenants in England and Wales which receive housing benefit, and the proportion of these which are in receipt of supplementary benefit and have their rents paid in full;

(2) if he will give figures showing the proportion of council tenants in Scotland which receive housing benefit, and the proportion of these which are in receipt of supplementary benefit and have their rents paid in full.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information available is given in the table.

Council house tenants receiving assistance through the housing benefit scheme: 1987

	England and Wales Per cent.	Scotland Per cent.
A. Proportion of Council tenants receiving housing benefit	64	62
B. Proportion in A above receiving supplementary benefit	57	48

Note: Though supplementary benefit provided a passport to housing benefit some tenants would not receive full rent rebates because of deductions where non dependants were present in the household.

Source: The information for England and Wales is derived from the publication "Housing Rent Statistics at April 1987" produced by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy and for Scotland from the "Scottish Development Department Statistical Bulletin" (HSU No. 1) and local authority housing benefit subsidy estimates for 1987-88.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average waiting time for the determination of an appeal to a medical board against the disallowance of a claim for mobility allowance.

Mr. Scott: It is estimated that the average time taken, between receipt of an appeal to a medical board and the issue of the notification of the outcome, is currently about 13½ weeks.

Dependants (Additions)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the expenditure on additions for dependants in 1978-79 and 1987-88 at 1987-88 prices to recipients of (a) invalidity benefit, (b) NCIP/severe disablement allowance and (c) invalid care allowance.

Mr. Scott: The requested information is as follows:

	1978-79 (expressed in 1987-88 prices) £ million	1987-88 £ million
(a) Invalidity benefit	470	538
(b) NCIP/severe disablement allowance	4	6
(c) Invalid care allowance	1	3

Benefit Upratings

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the rise in (a) the retail price index and (b) the index of motoring costs between the November 1978 and April 1988 benefit upratings.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: (a) 106·1 per cent.
(b) 99·6 per cent.

Community Care

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in view of the low take-up of community care grants from the social fund, if he will consider altering the conditions under which community care grants can be awarded, in order that more payments of this sort can be made.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no plans to alter the conditions under which community care grants can be awarded. We are, however, considering what might need to be done further to improve take-up which has steadily increased in recent months.

NI Contributions (Eligibility)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will state the number of workers earning less than makes them eligible for national insurance contributions.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In 1987-88 it is estimated that on average 2·7 million people received weekly earnings less than the lower earnings limit for class 1 contributions.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he has taken to ensure that the severe disablement allowance complies with the European Community directive on sex discrimination; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The eligibility criteria for severe disablement allowance were devised in accordance with legal advice to ensure that they complied with EC directive 79/7 on equal treatment in social security.

A judgment by the European Court of Justice in 1987 showed however that there had been an unsuspected infringement of the directive affecting a limited group of married women who claimed severe disablement allowance during the transitional period, on the basis of entitlement to the former benefit, non-contributory invalidity pension. From central records we have been able to identify the women who might have been affected and the vast majority of them have now been told whether they are able to benefit from the judgment.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many men, single women and married women have undergone medical assessment of their disability when seeking severe disablement allowance; how many men, single women and married women have applied for the allowance; if he will give totals for each group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: At April 1987, the last date for which figures are available 22,185 people—5,095 men, 3,102 single or divorced women and widows, and 13,988 married women —had been medically examined in order to assess the extent of their disablement.

Since April 1987 statistics for severe disablement allowance have been collected on the same basis as those for sickness and invalidity benefit and updated information in the form requested is not available. As at 30 September 1988 some 121,000 claims for severe disablement allowance had been received. I regret a breakdown by sex and marital status is not available.

Disabled People

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to publish the Government-sponsored nationwide study of disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The results of the surveys of disability conducted by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys will be issued in a series of reports. The first report on the prevalence of disability among adults was published on 28 September 1988. The second report covering the financial circumstances of disabled adults living in private households will be published later this month.

A further four reports will be published over the next eight months. These will cover disabled adults' use of services (including those in communal establishments) and also providing the same general range of information about children.

Pensions

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will make it his policy to bring the British state pension into line with that paid by other EEC countries, with the advent of the single European market in 1992.

Mr. Scott: The single European market in 1992 does not require the harmonisation of state pension schemes between member states.

It is impossible to make simple comparisons between very different social security systems. For example only three countries—the United Kingdom, Republic of Ireland and Denmark—pay flat rate retirement pensions. However, European Statistical Bureau figures show the United Kingdom spends the third highest share of gross domestic product on the elderly.

Rating Reform

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will show the effects of the proposed community charge benefit taper of 15 per cent., with tapers of (a) 20 per cent., (b) 12½ per cent., (c) 10 per cent. and (d) 7½ per cent., by showing for each of these tapers the cost at 1988-89 prices of paying community charge benefit to each of the following categories of income units, showing for each category how many income units he estimates would actually receive community charge benefit and how many would be entitled to community charge benefit: (i) all income units, (ii) income units consisting of a single person over pensionable age, (iii) income units consisting of a couple both of whom are over pensionable age, (iv) income units consisting of a single person with dependent children, (v) income units consisting of a single person of less than pensionable age without dependent children, (vi) income units consisting of a married or cohabiting couple one or both of whom is of less than pensionable age, without dependent children, (vii) income units consisting of a married or cohabiting couple with dependent children and (viii) any income units not included in the categories above;

(2) what he now estimates will be (a) the total cost of community charge benefits in 1990-91 at 1988-89 prices, (b) the total number of income units in receipt of community charge benefits in 1990-91, (c) the total number of income units entitled to community charge benefits, whether or not they claim and receive benefit, (d) the total cost in 1988-89 of rate rebates, (e) the total number of income units in households which are in receipt of rate rebates in 1988-89, (f) the total number of income units in households which are entitled to rate rebates on 1988-89, whether or not rebate is actually claimed and received and (g) the cost of administering rate rebates in 1988-89 and the cost of administering community charge benefits in 1990-91, at 1988-89 prices; and if he will attribute any additional cost of community charge benefit compared to rate rebates to (i) payment of benefit to non-householders, (ii) the reduction in the taper from 20 per cent. to 15 per cent., (iii) increased administrative costs and (iv) other reasons.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [pursuant to the reply, 28 July 1988, c. 522]: The available information is set out in the tables. I refer the hon. Member also to my hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Sunderland, North (Mr. Clay) on 19 October at columns 897-98. The models used by this Department for housing benefit produce forecasts of case load rather than numbers entitled. Local authorities' estimated costs in administering rate rebates in 1988-89 are an integral part of their costs in administering the housing benefit scheme generally and are not identified separately. The Price Waterhouse study of community charge costs, commissioned by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment estimated that the additional cost of administering community charge benefits in 1990-91 would be £16·75 million (in 1988-89 prices). I understand, however, that Price Waterhouse believed that the information on which this figure was based was less reliable than the information used for its other estimates. The estimates of the additional non-administrative costs (in 1988-89 prices) of the community charge benefit scheme are as follows:

a. through payment to non-householders: £235 million.

b. through lowering taper from 20 to 15 per cent. (for householders only): £100 million.

National Insurance

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for those below and those above pensionable age the estimated number of earned incomes subject to employers' national insurance contributions in steps of £1,000 between £15,000 and £25,000 and in £5,000 steps thereafter, showing single persons and one-earner and two-earner married couples together with the amount collected.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [pursuant to the reply, 27 July 1988, c. 362]: The information is as follows:

Estimated number of earned incomes subject to employers' national insurance contributions by range of income earned Similar information in respect of persons over pensionable age is not available. It is not possible to break down the amount collected by way of NIC into the ranges of earned income, but the following information is available:

Estimated gross employers' National Insurance contributions in 1988-89 (full year basis) in respect of:

	(i) All employees	(ii) Employees earning more than £15,000 per year
Single person	5·8	1·1
One earner couples	5·4	2·6
Two earner couples	8·2	3·2
Total	19·4	6·9

Gross contributions are notional contributions prior to deduction of contracted-out rebates (£3·15 billion for all employees and £1·25 billion for employees earning more than £15,000 per year).

These contributions include an estimated £100 million paid in respect of employees over pensionable age.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he wil bring up to date for the current financial year the information given in his answer of 10 December 1986, Official Report, column 204, to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby concerning the distribution of incomes and national insurance contributions, adding (a) the saving on the abolition of the reduced rate contribution and (b) the numbers contracted-in and contracted-out together with their contributions.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [pursuant to the reply, 27 July 1988, c. 362]: The information is as follows:

For the remaining information requested, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 21 October, at columns 1028-29.

Income Support

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if employment training scheme trainees who do not receive an income support element in their training allowance are entitled to free prescriptions and dental treatment.

Mrs. Currie: I have been asked to reply.

People on employment training schemes who are not automatically entitled to free prescriptions or free dental treatment can make a claim under the scheme which helps people on a low income with the cost of National Health services. Depending on their financial circumstances they may get free prescriptions and free dental treatment or help with dental charges.

ENERGY

Gas Meters

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to the trend in the number of coin prepayment gas meters installed.

Mr. Peter Morrison: This is a matter for British Gas plc, but I understand that the numbers are falling.

Plutonium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the present inventory of plutonium under safeguards currently credited to the European community under Euratom treaty article 88, in the special fissile materials financial accounts.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 2 November 1988 at column 679.

Alternative Energy

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the alternative energy projects for which the Government have provided financial assistance over the past 12 months; whether this is intended as short, medium or long-term assistance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Since the inception of the Department's renewable energy research and development programme, over £132 million has been invested and a further £50 million is likely to be spent in this important area over the next three years. Over 250 separate projects are currently under way or planned and the work on each of these varies in time scale according to the work programme set out in the respective contracts.

The Department attaches great importance to the renewable technologies. Our aim is to stimulate their development to the fullest practical extent where they have prospects of being economically attractive and environmentally acceptable. Energy Paper 55 "Renewable Energy in the UK: The Way Forward" published in June and available in the Library of the House sets out our view of the development strategy for renewable energy to the year 2000, together with an estimate of the support to be shared between Government and industry on an increasing level of collaboration.

Renewable energy projects for which the Department has provided financial assistance over the past 12 months are listed in the table.

Grimethorpe

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the financing of Grimethorpe experimental coal use station.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The future financing of the Grimethorpe experimental facility is a matter for British Coal. I have nothing to add to the statement I made in the House on 2 November 1988 at columns 1162-63.

Fuel Disconnections

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has plans to recommend alterations to the guidelines governing fuel disconnections.

Mr. Peter Morrison: No. We very much value the code of practice operated by the gas and electricity industries. It has done much to help consumers by providing information on arrangements to avoid disconnection.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Glencregagh Green Wedge (Report)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the report of the Belfast urban plan public inquiry, relating to residential development in the area known as Glencregagh Green Wedge, will be published.

Mr. Needham: The report of the public inquiry is at present being prepared by the planning appeals commission. The time scale for submission of the report and the form of its presentation to the DOE (NI) are matters for the commission to decide after consultation with the Department. It is unlikely, however, that separate reports will be published for specific areas.

Organisations (Proscription)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his policy on harmonisation in line with the Irish Republic on proscription of membership of certain organisations.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It is Government policy in Northern Ireland to proscribe those organisations which are actively and primarily engaged in the commission of criminal terrorist acts in the Province. The question of proscribing terrorist organisations in the Republic is a matter for the Irish Government.

Divis Flats

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the plans for the rehousing of the tenants of Divis flats, including the proposed provision for accommodating existing community projects.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive who has advised me that outline proposals for the redevelopment of Divis flats have been the subject of extensive consultation with tenants and interested parties. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member to explain the Housing Executive's plans which include the identification of sites to cater for community use.

Civil Servants (Department of the Environment)

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total number of people employed by the Northern Ireland Civil Service who work in the professional and technical sectors of the Department of the Environment; and how many of these are Catholics.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 31 October 1988]: A total of 2,633. Disclosure of information on the religious affiliation of Northern Ireland Civil Service staff is governed by a code of practice which stipulates that no statistical summaries will be produced which fall outside the categories of analyses agreed with the equal opportunities Whitley committee. The most recent agreed analyses were published in December 1987 in the second report of the Northern Ireland Civil Service equal opportunities unit; a copy of that report was placed in the Library.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total number of people employed by the Northern Ireland Civil Service who work in the general administrative sector of the Department of the Environment; and how many of these are Catholics.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 31 October 1988]: A total of 2,535. Disclosure of information on the religious affiliation of Northern Ireland Civil Service staff is governed by a code of practice which stipulates that no statistical summaries will be produced which fall outside the categories of analyses agreed with the equal opportunities Whitley committee. The most recent agreed analyses were published in December 1987 in the second report of the Northern Ireland Civil Service Equal opportunities unit; a copy of that report was placed in the Library.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total number of people who served on (a) the planning directorate, (b) the roads service directorate and (c) the water service directorate of the Department of the Environment; and how many are Catholics.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 31 October 1988]: The total number of staff who serve on:

(a) the planning directorate is three.
(b) the roads service directorate is four.
(c) the water service directorate is four.

Disclosure of information on the religious affiliation of Northern Ireland Civil service staff is governed by a code of practice which stipulates that no statistical summaries will be produced which fall outside the categories of analyses agreed with the equal opportunities Whitley committee. The most recent agreed analyses were published in December 1987 in the second report of the Northern Ireland Civil Service equal opportunities unit; a copy of that report was placed in the Library.

Strip Searches

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many strip searches were made of female prisoners in Her Majesty's prison, Maghaberry, in each months for June, July, August and September of the current year; what was the number of persons involved and the number of times each person was searched; whether any prison contraband, smuggled item or illegal correspondence was discovered in any search, indicating which items; in how many cases prisoners refused to be searched and had to be restrained while the search was being conducted; and if he will indicate the reasons for the search, under making a remand appearance in court, attending trial, inter-prison visit or other reasons.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 1 November 1988]: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave on 29 July at columns 681-2 and on 19 October at column 954.

Terrorism

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of persons proceeded against for scheduled offences in Northern Ireland in 1986, 1987 and in the first six months of 1988; how many persons pleaded guilty to the principal offence; and how many persons in such contested cases were found not guilty of the principal offence.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 1 November 1988]: Statistics are not available in the precise form requested. The information in respect of persons tried in the Crown court is as follows:

Year	Persons proceeded against	Pleaded guilty	Pleaded not guilty	Found guilty	Found not guilty
1986	596	528	68	567	29

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the average number of days that prisoners spent on custodial remand for (i) scheduled offences, (ii) non-scheduled offences and (iii) both together, in the first half of the current year.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 1 November 1988]: The average length of time spent on custodial remand for prisoners who were tried in the period January to June 1988 and who were in custody at the time of their trial was (i) 164 days for those charged with scheduled offences, (ii) 44 days for those charged with non-scheduled offences and (iii) 110 days for both together.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prisoners charged with scheduled offences in the first half of the current year were remanded in custody prior to trial for periods between (a) up to three months, (b) three to six months, (c) six to nine

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 1 November 1988]: The information in respect of the period 1 January to 24 October 1988, is as follows:

	Number
Machine guns	17
Rifles	204
Shotguns	47
Pistols/revolvers	170
Others	68

Note: "Others" include: antique weapons, anti-tank weapons, blank firing pistols, replica pistols, replica revolvers, replica sub-machine guns, starting pistols and starting revolvers.

Labour Statistics

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the latest available figures for unemployment in each parliamentary constituency and in each electoral ward in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 1 November 1988]: The numbers of unemployed claimants in each parliamentary constituency in Northern Ireland at 8 September 1988 are set out in the table. Since there are 566 wards in Northern Ireland I shall write to the hon. Member giving September unemployment figures for each electoral ward.

Parliamentary constituency	Total
Belfast East	4,598
Belfast North	7,744
Belfast South	5,850
Belfast West	11,013
East Antrim	5,610
East Londonderry	8,417
Fermanagh and South Tyrone	7,807
Foyle	11,164
Lagan Valley	5,713
Mid-Ulster	8,074
Newry and Armagh	8,287
North Antrim	6,067
North Down	4,278
South Antrim	5,257
South Down	5,823
Strangford	3,952
Upper Bann	6,089
	115,743

Note: Figures for parliamentary constituencies are estimated from ward data.

Compensation

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish in the Official Report a table giving the amounts in the fiscal years 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88 of (a) payments made to civilians under the Criminal Injuries Compensation (Northern Ireland) Order 1977, (b) payments made to members of the security forces, including the Royal Ulster Constabulary, Royal Ulster Constabulary Reserve, British Army and Ulster Defence Regiment, under the Criminal Injuries Compensation (Northern Ireland) Order 1977, (c) compensation payments made under the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978, and (d) compensation payments under the Criminal Damage (Compensation) (Northern Ireland) Order 1977 and earlier legislation.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 1 November 1988]: The information is as follows:

	1985-86 £	1986-87 £	1987-88 £
Compensation payments to civilians under the Criminal Injuries (Compensation) (NI) Order 1977	6,413,998	7,242,521	7,668,387
Compensation payments to members of the security forces under the Criminal Injuries (Compensation) (NI) Order 1977	6,110,287	2,485,927	3,299,794
Compensation payments under the NI (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978	378,569	318,137	686,242
Compensation payments under the Criminal Damage (Compensation) (NI) Order 1977 and earlier legislation	17,218,357	15,265,899	19,004,436

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year since 1985 the amount of compensation payments made under the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1973.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 1 November 1988]: No payments under the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1973 have been made since 1978 because of the repeal of the compensation provisions of that Act by the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportions of the members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and Royal Ulster Constabulary Reserve are currently estimated to be Catholics; and what proportion of those recruited in each year since 1986 is estimated to be Catholics.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 1 November 1988]: Although arrangements are currently being made to introduce monitoring of the religious denomination of members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and its Reserve, the database has not yet been completed. However I understand that about 10 per cent. of the combined strength of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and full-time Reserve is believed to be Roman Catholic. It is estimated that the proportion of recruits to the force since 1986 who are Roman Catholic is as follows:

	RUC Percent	RUC Full-time Reserve Percent
1986	10	12
1987	9	7
1988 (to October)	10	9

The Royal Ulster Constabulary will continue its efforts to attract suitably qualified recruits from all sections of the community.

Firearm Certificates

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many members of the Ulster Defence Regiment, and its Reserve, currently hold private firearms certificates.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 1 November 1988]: Information regarding the total number of private firearm certificates held by members of the Ulster Defence Regiment including part-time members is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. and Mrs. B. Fegan

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when Mr. and Mrs. B. Fegan of 3 Navan Tec, Armagh, will be notified by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive as to when work will commence on a specially designed dwelling to cater for their daughter's medical needs.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 1 November 1988]: This is a matter for the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive who has advised me that the Housing Executive will write shortly to Mr. and Mrs. Fegan to let them know that a contractor will take possession of the site on 21 November 1988. Work is scheduled to be completed by late May 1989.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Burma

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on British aid to Burma.

Mr. Chris Patten: The military regime is pledged to hold democratic multi-party elections. It is important that this pledge be honoured as soon as possible. Meanwhile, purges of those involved in the August and September demostrations continue. In the circumstances I have decided that our aid to Burma should be frozen, with the exeption of Burmese nationals already in the United Kingdom. This decision will be kept under review in the light of developments in Burma.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 139

SESSION 1987–88

24th October–4th November 1988

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
